BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

If you have fine hair it is very likely soft-sheened and sleek, but it poses a number of problems of its own. Cold weather loads it with static electricity, heat leaves it limp and you are probably in a never-ending search for props to give it body.

We might suggest frequent washings and cream rinses to provide more body, but we caution against vigorous yanking on shampoo snarls as fine hair is even more fragile when wet. Also, be careful of too-energetic brushing and combing which only adds to friction troubles.

Fine hair responds nicely to a permanent which is soft and loose and free of frizzling tendencies. This type permanent — as is true of any permanent — is properly and expertly given at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street — Phone 942-4335.

THIS WEEK'S HELPFUL Hint: A small dose of fabric softener or liquid detergent added to the final rinse water, lessens the static electricity and clinging tendencies of nylon slips in cold weather.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: OLIVER PORTER, JR.

"Will my first assignment really be a challenge?" is a question that haunts many young engineers.

An affirmative answer to the question was waiting for Oliver Porter, Jr. (B.S.C.E., 1959), when he reported to Southern Bell's Greenville, S. C., office July, 1962.

A week hadn't passed when Oliver became a full-fledged practicing member of the District Engineering group.

In addition to design duties, Oliver was immediately put to work directly serving customers—handling requests for service or facility rearrangements, advising architects, and acquiring public and private right-of-way.

Oliver found his challenge quickly, and at the same time impressed Southern Bell with his technical engineering proficiency and ability to represent the company.

Oliver Porter, like many young engineers, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

By RON LOGAN

RALEIGH — Drew Murphy's goal in the opening moments of the second half transformed a sluggish UNC soccer team into a fiery 3-1 winner over State College yesterday.

Bill Haywood, Park McGinty, Pete Blake, and Murphy sparked an exciting second half performance by the Tar Heels which brought them from behind and gave them their second win of the season.

Coach Marvin Allen commented that "Park McGinty played a very fine game for us, and I was also quite pleased with the teamwork we displayed in the second half."

The victory evened up Carolina's record at 2-2 while State suffered its fourth loss in nine games. Next on tap for the UNC booters is Pfeiffer College in Chapel Hill next Thursday.

Tar Babies Face Tough Virginia On Road

Frosh Terror Joe Fratangelo

Carolina's heralded freshman football team risks its undefeated record against a strong Virginia team today at Charlottesville. Kick-off time for the contest is set for 2:00.

Locally the ball game will be broadcast live over WCHL (1360). Air time is 1:45.

Coach George Barclay expects the game to be the toughest and most important of the season for the Tar Babies. The Virginia frosh team may be the best ever put together at Charlottesville, and the results of a concentrated recruiting job by Coach Bill Elias and his staff have been labeled the "21 Jewels" by Cavalier followers.

The most precious gem in UVA's line-up goes by the name of John Naponick, a Pennsylvania boy who was on a number of coaches' "most-wanted list." "Big John," as he is inevitably called stands 6-10 and tips the scales at 290 pounds. The big boy fills the left tackle spot.

But North Carolina is not without its own prize possessions. In the two games so far, victories of 21-7 over NC State and 23-0 over Wake Forest, Quarterback Talbott has moved the ball 125 yards in 12 carries and hit on 9 of 18 passes for 97 yards. Beaver has completed 24 of 38 aerials for 206 yards.

Defense has been the bright spot for the Tar Babies as the two opponents so far have gained a total of only 15 yards on the ground. Another way of looking at it is that the opposition has gained only four inches per carry. Top names in the defensive arena have been guards Joe Fratangelo and Dave Erimias, and tackle Lee Davis.

CU Day Attracts Alumni, Guests

Receptions In Dorms To Follow

Alumni, students and dignitaries from across the state converge on Chapel Hill today for the State game and the annual celebration of Consolidated University Day.

A sellout crowd, bolstered by hundreds of State and W. C. students, is expected for the game. Many of the viistors will participate in the numerous festivities planned for the campus.

The Consolidated University Student Council will meet this morning at ten for a discussion of issues concerning all three campuses. President Friday is expected to address the session, and the CUSC officers will have lunch with members of the Board of Trustees and a number of state legislators.

Bob Spearman, UNC student body vice-president, will make a motion at today's meeting for president Mike Lawler, calling for the Council to begin immediately to try to solve some of the problems involved in CU day for next year.

Following the game, receptions are planned for a number of men's dormitories to honor the viisting girls from Greensboro. The girls will arrive at the boys' dorms before the game to meet their dates. They will be admitted to the regular student section this year, rather than sitting in a special section.

The Educational Foundation will entertain visiting alumni with a reception at Finley Golf Course following the game.

The Men's Interdormitory Council will sponsor a dance tonight at 8 p.m. in Woollen Gym for students and visitors. Combos will play this afternoon on the Graham Memorial Lawn and tonight in the Rendezvous Room.

The University Trustees and members of the N. C. General Assembly wil be guests of the University for the football game. Governor Terry Sanford will be present, along with gubernatorial candidates Dan Moore and L. Richardson Preyer. Former governor Luther Hodges is also expected to attend.

Students And The System: V

By PETE WALES
Last of Five Articles

"I believe that last spring's Honor System Study was an accurate sort of reflection of what students think," C. O. Cathey, dean of student affairs, said yesterday.

Dean Cathey's remark was typical of Administration and Student Government reaction to the study.

"The survey showed us just what the students were thinking and just how effective the Honor System has been," said Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council.

"It showed us some of the problems we will be facing this year."

Grant Wheeler, assistant dean of men, who initiated the study last spring when he was chairman of the Men's Council, pointed to the Campus Code as needing reform.

"With regard to the Campus Code, the study showed up what I expected . . . that the Code lacks respect. I think this was obvious.

"The Campus Code is in need of a more solid form. There should not be such a great difference between the number of students who respect the Honor Code and those who respect the Campus Code.

"The enforcement of the Code and the penalties given for violations must be more regular. tI has to be supported whole-heartedly or not at all.

"However, the study showed that the Honor System overall does merit its existence according to the response of the students. My general reaction is a very positive one."

Dean Cathey was struck by the relation between students' grades and their support of the System.

"I was impressed with the fact that people with poor records are ones that think least of the system and are the ones most likely to violate it.

"I'm not surprised that women are more interested in honor than are men, and I hope that this will continue so that we may keep on down the path of civilization."

Wheeler was somewhat surprised by the outcome of opinion on the Apartment Rule.

"The results were quite the opposite of what I expected. I was glad to see fewer boys than girls opposed to the rule.

"I personally am in favor of the rule. I would like to think that the males who said they were not against it really meant it, but I tend to think they just didn't care in this case."

There are currently two rules now in existence for apartments. The Administration rule states that all coeds must have at least one other girl with them when they enter a man's apartment.

The Women's Council rule says that all girls except freshmen may enter a man's apartment alone.

Chapel Hill SPU Members Arrested In Washington

By BILL HOBBS

WASHINGTON — Two residents of Chapel Hill, one of them a night student at the University, were among seven arrested in Washington, D. C. yesterday afternoon on charges of disorderly conduct.

Pat Cusick, a former student here and now the National Field Secretary for the Student Peace Union, and Rosemary Ezra, a night student and a member of the SPU, were arrested outside of the National Press Club Building in Washington during a student demonstrations protesting the United States policy in South Vietnam.

Fifty students were picketing the Press Building where Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu was scheduled to speak when police officers told them they would have to move across the street.

At first they complied with the order, but later, Cusick and six other members of the SPU again crossed the street and were arrested there.

Cusick told the DTH the group spent two and one-half hours in jail before being released on ten dollars bond apiece.

A trial is scheduled for next Thursday in Washington.

SL Meets, Gives Award In Action

By HUGH STEVENS

Chris Hanburger, standout center and defensive signal-caller for the Tar Heels, received the James H. Tatum Memorial Award at Thursday night's session of Student Legislature. The annual award goes to the Carolina athlete who "best exemplifies the qualities admired by the late Coach Tatum."

Mike Lawler, student president, made the award and cited Hanburger as an "outstanding defensive player and a team leader." He noted that Hanburger was moved from end to center this year to help the team, making the transition successfully and developing into "the number one leader in the line."

Lawler said Hanburger is currently leading the team in tackles per game, and has tremendous respect from his teammates.

"Last week against Maryland," Lawler said, "Chris made three consecutive tackles in a series of downs. Another time he went through three Maryland blockers to make the tackle on a punt situation."

Hanburger expressed his thanks to "everyone who made this award possible. I consider this a great honor," he said.

In other legislature business, the body passed two important bills and a resolution, returned two bills to committee and did not consider a controversial bill on equal rights.

Among the legislation passed was a bill to establish a Fine Arts Festival Committee. The bill, introduced by Speaker Bob Spearman, provides for the committee to hold a Fine Arts Festival in the Spring of 1965 to

Honor Council Sentences Two

Two students were put on definite probation for one full academic semester in cases involving Chapel Hill and campus police Thursday night.

One student was charged with a violation of the Honor Code when he gave police a false name. The boy had been picked up and taken to the police station where he was reported to have given police difficulty when they tried to charge him.

The other student, a freshman, turned and ran when a Campus Police officer asked him for his ID card. He had been drinking and was charged with being "un-co-operative" with the officer, a Campus Code offense.

In the second case, the student was found not guilty of a second charge of lying to the officer.

PARTY

Ehringhaus Dormitory will sponsor a party tonight for the whole campus, according to David Rendleman, dorm president. The Jammers will provide the music.

ATO Given Probation

The Alpha Tau Omega fraternity received a penalty of general probation from the Interfraternity Council Court at a Thursday night trial.

The ATO's were brought to court on two charges: (1) issuing pledge pins on the Wednesday night of rush week and (2) transporting rushees during rushing hours.

On the first charge, the Court felt that the action constituted "ungentlemanly-like conduct during rush," and that the wearing ing of pledge pins was a symbol of a semi-binding agreement between a rushee and the fraternity.

ATO was found not guilty on the second charge.

General probation is only a warning. Should a house be convicted of another violation of IFC regulations during the probation period, further disciplinary action would result.

In issuing the verdict, Court Chairman Brooks Emory stated the necessity of revising what he termed the "somewhat ambiguous" constitution and by-laws of the IFC.

State, Carolina Battle Today

Election Time Is Here Again

By JIM NEAL

Fall is traditionally electioneering time and that time has arrived at Carolina.

Arthur Hays, Elections Board chairman, said yesterday fall elections will be held Tuesday, Nov. 5 for all class officers, except seniors, and positions on the Men's and Women's Council.

"Candidates must live in the districts from which they run" for seats on the judicial councils, and must be "students in good standing" with at least a C average, Hays said. All entering students are considered to be "in good standing," he added.

Candidates for class offices will be nominated by the two campus political parties in their conventions next week, Hays said.

The Student Party convention will be held Tuesday and Wednesday nights at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall. The University Party will meet at 6:45 p.m. Tuesday night in Carroll Hall.

The SP will also hold a pre-convention meeting Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall Auditorium to set up nominating procedures and to fill legislative vacancies in the Ehringhaus and Joyner-Alexander - Winston districts.

"Any person wishing his name to appear on the ballot must present a petition carrying 25 signatures, plus his own, to the Elections Board by 10 p.m. Thursday, October 24," Hays said. The signatures must belong to persons living in the judicial district from which council candidates run, or from class members of candidates for class offices, Hays added.

The petitions may be submitted to the Elections Board in Student Government offices in Graham Memorial, or to Hays in 308 Ruffin.

Hays said questions concerning the elections could be telephoned to him in the dormitory at 968-9182.

A compulsory meeting of all candidates will be held at 9:30 p.m. in Howell Hall Oct. 24, Hays said.

"Persons wishing to run for Council seats must attend training meetings held by the Honor Council Commission, beginning Tuesday night at 6:45 in 203 Alumni," he added.

Hays also announced the Elections Board will hold an open meeting Sunday at 6 p.m. to decide the placement of additional ballot boxes.

Hays had a word of caution for prospective candidates: "Don't spend any money till you know how much you will be allowed under the election laws."

"In order for a student to vote for a candidate in the Student Party convention, he must have paid his one-dollar membership fee and have attended one prior meeting of the party.

"The one prior meeting may include the pre-convention meeting on Sunday night," Party Chairman Neal Jackson said.

Offices to be filled, in addition to freshman, sophomore and junior class offices, are as follows—

Men's Council seats:

Judicial District I (Craige, Ehringhaus), two 1-year seats;

Judicial District II (lower

A STATEMENT FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE STUDENT BODY

The team will be giving its finest effort today and will receive our support from the stands. We can gain two victories today, one on the field and the other in the stands. I am confident that this student body will conduct itself in a manner which exemplifies the best image of this University.

Let's remember to mix a good bit of common sense this weekend as well as other things. Let's host the visitors to the campus in a gentlemanly manner.

Then only State will go away disappointed.—MIKE LAWLER

Old Foes Battle In Kenan

By JOHN MONTAGUE

A family quarrel to end all family quarrels should result in Kenan Stadium this afternoon as two "brothers" knock heads to determine which will be allowed to take one giant step toward the ACC football championship.

A crowd of some 45,000, which may swell into the largest ever to see a football game here in Chapel Hill, is expected to be on hand for the 1:30 "CU Day" contest between N. C. State and North Carolina. The two schools share brotherhood in the Consolidated University and also, at the moment, share first place in the ACC football race, along with a third institution — Duke. All three teams have 3-0 conference marks.

Football prognosticators and odds-makers have been busy all week trying to determine a favorite in this one, which is the 53rd meeting of the two archrivals. With many dissenting votes, the unbeaten Wolfpack has won the favorite's role, by about two points.

Sparked by the passing and running of quarterback Ken Rossi, Coach Earle Edwards' crew has mowed down Maryland, Southern Mississippi, Clemson and South Carolina in that order.

"They are definitely the team to beat in this league," says Coach Jim Hickey, whose Tar Heels haven't done too badly themselves. After a slow start which included sluggish wins over weak sisters Virginia and Wake Forest, and a loss to Michigan State, the touted Heels seemed to hit their stride last Saturday while imposing a 14-7 defeat on Maryland.

Both teams lay claim to sturdy defenses and this could easily mean a low-scoring ball game.

Football Horrorscope

Madame Nhu refused to do it, so the Horrorscope turned from Lotus Blossoms to hamburgers, and Spero Dorton, chief chief of Franklin Street's Goody Shop, gladly obliged.

Spero

Spero, strangely, had heard of the DTH's atrocious abortion—the first of the illustrious guest selectors to have done so. Like Billy Cunningham before him, the noted restauranteur asked if the exact scores were needed along with the winning teams.

Told they were not, Spero grabbed a pencil and with a "This'll be cute," speared some circles around the predicted winners. Of note are his Tennessee over Alabama and Washington State over Oregon State deals. But then Billy chose Air Force and Notre Dame last week.

It was those two upset selections that pushed Cunningham to a smashing win over the regular panelists last Saturday.

In the wake of so many surprises were left the worse totals of the year so far. But Billy survived better than anyone with an 11-5-4.

The record overall last week was 57 right, 39 wrong and 24 ties. It was a horrible horror. But nothing to conecrn the jerks that are foolish enough to publish their errors.

Mat Friedman hit 10-6-4 while everybody else stalled at 9-7-4 to send the year's mark at 277-153-30 and a .6595 percentage.

Curry Kirkpatrick continues to set the pace with 51-19-5 (.728) while Friedman picked up a game to 47-23-5 for second place. John Montague is 46-24-5; Al Kaplan 44-26-5; the combined guest score 42-28-5; and Ron Logan (with one less week) is 35-20-5.

Le Thuy

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH — Le Thuy moved gracefully to a small anteroom in the N. C. State Student Union building. She smiled as she walked. Her baby-blue colored dress, slit on both sides tossed freely as she sat down on a couch to answer questions from four male reporters.

She declined a cigarette with a polite, "Oh, no, thank you." She shifted slightly and arranged the blue Ao Dia to cover a pearly white pair of pantaloons.

Le Thuy Nhu is the 18-year-old daughter of South Vietnam's first lady, Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu. Le Thuy has been accompanying her mother on her current tour of the United States.

"I finished high school at 16," Le Thuy said. "At 17 I go to college and take Latin, but it too easy, so I don't take any more.

"I hope one day to be a doctor in my country and practice medicine in Saigon," she said.

Le Thuy is as beautiful as her controversial mother. Her jet black hair and her closely set dark eyes, plus the charming smile that she frequently radiates, makes you forget that you are supposed to hate the way that the Diem's allegedly run the government of South Vietnam.

Le Thuy said that she had been asked for many dates while she has been in the U. S.

"Oh, yes, there have been plenty of those," she said as she flashed her eyes around the room. "But I don't intend to have a boy friend right now.

"But when I do, he must be a patriot, someone who my country can call on and I can call on," she said.

When asked what one person she admired most on her current tour, she replied, "No one. I don't admire mortals, I admire the saints."

Le Thuy remained exceedingly calm during the interview. She has the poise of a veteran and answers most questions freely, but carefully making sure that she avoids those dealing with the political structure of her country.

She wears a conservative amount of oriental jewelry.

A gold bracelet on her right wrist, a small black watch with gold sequins plus a pink ribbon just below her right ear comprise her ornamental apparel.

"You know," she said pointing to her flower-designed violet and blue silk Ao Dai, "this dress only cost $2 in Vietnam. And this, what you call them . . . pantaloons . . . were even less. We buy all of our clothes in Vietnam," she said.

Le Thuy wears her hair in a modified bouffant style, but she says there is no certain hair style in Vietnam. "Many of the girls wear their hair very long while others wear it short."

When asked what it was like to be the daughter of such a controversial international figure, Le Thuy answered without hesitation.

"I am very proud to be the daubhter of Mme Nhu," Le Thuy said. "What she does is for the good of her country and that is good.

"I, too, love my country," she added as her radiant smile again returned, "and I am ready to do what I can for it."

Le Thuy's hobby is just not the thing that one would normally associate with such a delicate looking lass. "I like to shoot pistols," she said, much to the surprise of reporters who had expected her to say something like bird watching or leaf-pressing.

"I am in the paramilitary forces which were founded by my mother," she said. Mme Nhu calls the paramilitary forces

The Silver Lining Of A Foul Law

In recent months and weeks, a change has come about in the Consolidated University Student Council that may well have a profound effect on the University for years to come.

The CUSC has existed for a long time, of course, but only recently has begun to realize its potential as an organization capable of drawing together the three branches of the Consolidated University.

In past years, the Council served mainly as a committee whose duties seldom involved tasks more arduous than meeting for dinner or carving up an inadequate budget for CU Day. If there was cooperation, it was of the go-through-the-motions variety, and students in Greensboro, Chapel Hill, and Raleigh hardly felt closer to each other than to those lost souls in Durham.

But crisis has always been responsible for bringing action out of apathy, and such has been the case with the CUSC. The name-change controversy the speaker ban law, and similiar problems have injected a new life and a new spirit of cooperation into the Council.

Under the able leadership of students from all three campuses, including Johnsye Massenburg (UNC), Jean Ellen Jones (Greensboro), and Butch Fields (Raleigh), the Council has assumed the leading role in the fight against the speaker ban. It also set about correcting a number of problems for CU Day, including the lack of proper receptions for women visitors, the poor seating arrangements at the football game, and the general lack of cooperation between the separate campuses. Though circumstances prevented the attainment of some of these goals, some were realized and the Council is already working toward next year.

Probably the most important single factor in the CUSC's new spirit has been the Controversial speaker ban law. Though it is unfortunate that a majority of the Council's current efforts must be directed toward this one issue, perhaps it is really a blessing in disguise.

For whatever the outcome of the issue—the CUSC has profited. It has gained stature—and even more important, strength.

The CUSC, once slumbering in the shade, if indeed not in its grave, has come to life and begun to realize its potential. It may well be that when future issues come to the fore, those who oppose the University's stand may find that a sleeping giant has been awakened.

The Visit To Raleigh Of Mme. Nhu: Like Seeing The Movie After Reading The Book

RALEIGH — The visit here of Mme. Nhu & Company was like seeing the movie after reading the book, moreover, it was a tribute to efficiency.

Everything happened right on schedule. Mme. Nhu demurely harangued U. S. policy-makers; her lovely daughter, Le Thuy, graciously emitted noble sounds ("I don't admire mortals. I admire the Saints."); and their press agent, also Vietnamese, was most cordial to reporters.

The whole affair, in short, was pretty bland.

True, Mme. Nhu drew a good crowd, and true, the newsmen followed her around like the celebrity she is. But Americans like a good show, and they had good advance reason to think that's exactly what Mme. Nhu would give them. And she came through.

Her visit undoubtedly changed no one's mind about her and her husband's role in Vietnamese affairs, and about the policies being pursued by her brother-in-law, President Diem.

And why? Because the truth of this whole Vietnamese matter is that none of us knows for certain exactly what is going on in South Vietnam. But we have to proceed in some way, on some information. So it becomes a matter of deciding who to believe, and there our foreign correspondents in Vietnam — despite the controversy over their alleged biases — have a distinct edge over Mme. Nhu.

The Herald Tribune Degrades Itself

We are loathe to take issue with such a prestigious newspaper as the New York Herald Tribune, but last week that paper published an editorial on the awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to Linus C. Pauling.

The Tribune, in a virulent attack on both Pauling and the Peace Prize, said that the Prize had been degraded by its award to a "placarding peacenik". It is almost impossible to comprehend how any newspaper, no matter how sophisticated, could pass off the accomplishments and efforts of a man like Pauling as just those of another "placarding peacenik."

It is true that Pauling has been an outspoken opponent of nuclear testing, as have many of the best men in this country, and some that aren't the best, but Pauling is much more. He is a noted biochemist who received the Nobel Prize for Chemistry in 1954, and this second prize makes him the only man in the 62-year history of the Prize to be so honored twice.

Pauling's career has been controversial, but it stems from his great concern for mankind, and controversy was never anything that frightened us before. It is significant that the Prize came the same day the limited nuclear test ban treaty formally went into effect.

We think the Herald Tribune has degraded itself with such an insensitive, unthinking attack.

NSA - A Congress Of Reform

By HUGO SPECHAR
Campus Coordinator for the National Student Association

Ten days with eleven daily hours of seminars, drafting and legislative sessions fueled and sparked into a consuming torch to the Leviathan the 12 delegates UNC sent to the 16th United States National Student Association Congress at Indiana University last August.

The Congress served as the policy-making tool of 400 colleges and universities involved in a year-round program of services to schools and communities in the U.S. and abroad.

The delegation, made up of the President and Vice-President of the student body, politicians from both parties, campus representatives and other bureaucracies, received a refreshing anti-toxine against the inevitably corrupting effects of yielding power. At the same time UNC made known the ability of its self-governing student body to assume active responsibilities in the University Community.

With a long history of national and state leadership at past NSA congresses, UNC had all its thumbs in every boiling caldron. The Association's program and basic policy stands for next year were well stirred, inspected, and challenged when necessary. UNC headed a drafting committee in charge of special legislation on the national issue confronting civil rights. Important legislation on programs committing NSA to student projects on migrant labor, racial problems, and academic freedom were actively supported. UNC helped to draft widely accepted projects on student welfare, book cooperatives to reduce excessively high costs, studies reviewing the effectiveness of the Association's services to campuses, its leadership structure and administration.

When the time came to defeat legislation, UNC effectively amended policy statements and programs. In international affairs it challenged dubious stands and brought to the floor debates on the extensive international services and relations NSA holds with myriads of foreign student organizations. Fire swept the plenaries, at any moment and in any issue, whenever UNC felt necessary to disagree.

This leadership exercised throughout the conference manifested itself in the nomination of two of our delegates to national offices for the incoming year, none of which were accepted for personal reasons. Yet, it wasnt possible for Student Body President Mike Lawler to decline the responsibility delegated by the Southern region to form a newly created ten-regional representatives board, permanent executive spine of the Association.

But the reader may ask, (1) "Why should UNC set afire the ulcers of many schools' representatives at this annual Congress, what are we to gain? He may add, (2) "Are the problems discussed at NSA conventions real problems presented here at school; are these topics insignificant imitations of national affairs, sheer illusions of 'De Gaullian grandeur' "? And if more critical, he would ask, (3) "And if so and so were true, would NSA still have the ways to implement its ambitious policy and programs?"

The reader's questions are relevant and put forward in order of progressive difficulty. Yet, allow me some general answers as a start to deeper inquiries.

(1) To answer what is the rationale for UNC disturbing the confidence of many self-satisfied schools, we must accept the reality that Student Government is a meaningful part of the educational process; that the word "extra-curricular attached to such activities is not meant "superfluous" or "artifically added to"; rather it means "supplementary" to our nominally academic pursuits; that our years at the university are not to be taken as transitory, as a jumping board to a divorced adulthood, but as an integral of the continuum of our existence. Being a student is a privileged position demanding duties and playing a social role which can't be divorced from every-day reality. And so UNC is compelled to stir the conscience of other students, to diffuse our ideas and adopt new ones, to teach and to learn. Thus, we have answered what is there to gain: self-criticism, knowledge.

(2) No, NSA topics are not illusions. Many other schools' problems are ours. There are national issues scratching at each school's door-steps: academic freedom is denied not only in the State of North Carolina in the form of speaker bans; racial issues belong to North and South and also to institutions supposed to be holders of truth and reason; improvement of curricula, teaching methods and professorial attitudes not only are claimed to be needed for backward states and provincial schools, but also for progressive states and reputable schools; university administrations, acting out of ignorance or irritation, do not only commit abuses in detriment of the academia where student governments are weak, but also where there is a self-governing student body of proven responsibility. In national and international issues, State Legislatures, the Congress, and the Executive decide not from themselves, but rather from the people; and at our universities we are the people.

So these issues discussed at the NSA Congress are not farfetched and illusory, but tangible. They themselves are from the UNC campus and were taken there by UNC representatives. The delegates met with similar envoys from each point of the U. S., from every imaginable school: large and small, sectarian and non-sectarian, private and public, provincial and broad-minded. Their problems were dissected and what was analysed as unreal was discarded: only that which was pertinent back home was preserved and upheld. Every issue was debated and thousands of opinions given; every assumption was revised.

When the time to decide came, sides were taken and disagreements were aired, some were patched and some not. And what a miracle that with so much dissenting, there was so much done, and how much of that brought back belongs to Chapel Hill.

(3) NSA, as a heterogeneous confederation of student governments, confronts problems of representation arising from diverse and conflicting interests. Similar to the local-vs-central government controversy which occurs at the national level, some schools and regions feel unrepresented and forgotten by central headquarters. Small schools feel tyrannized by large ones and also that most benefits accrue to the latter: many of them want to make NSA a service organization to member schools rather than an expression of student ideologies, and vice versa; there are those wanting to deal only with domestic issue and to exclude international concern. Still, many others want both a national and international NSA, which emphasizes domestic problems.

This 16th Congress was one of reform: a gaint step to compromise these divergencies. Its purpose was to conciliate the political with the administrative, to make NSA acceptable to each different region and still to have an effective executive. Confronted by financial difficulties, NSA needed a specialized staff able to sell its projects to foundations and philanthropic agencies, since it operates essentially on private contributions in the form of grants. To deliver the results of these projects, professionals have been provided as service-men to the campuses to speed the exchange of ideas with headquarters. To make more effective the year-round, detailed implementation of the Congress' programs, and still arrest the authoritarian tendencies of any central executive, a permanent board of ten regional officers was established to be renovated annually by the new Congress.

As seen by UNC's legislation on student welfare, studies on curricula improvements, book co-ops and general domestic issues, the Congress gyrated toward a more campus-oriented NSA. Yet, the UNC delegation did not forget that there is a student movement in the United States; that UNC plays an important role in it; that a mature students organization combines ideology and administration, because no political organization with down-to-earth services is devoid of a philosophical base.

If technical services and the administration of daily need do not have a purpose based on ideas, then there is no effective government. If it is true that NSA becomes more effective when working at unglorious, non-dignified and unattractive specific propects, it is also true that these tasks are meaningless and innocuous if not directed by a student movement of progress and organic growth.

This argument goes: When a student confronts his society intending to change it, he finds himself limited by the nature of his missionary task. Therefore, he spreads himself by attacking these problems within the existing national institutions. He makes his movement become an organized tool of all students, and for that purpose he blends student thoughts into an administrative set up: he joins policy-making with implementing, thinking with acting. He has just founded a student government, and NSA is its logical conclusion.

A VIEW FROM THE HILL

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, Jr.

Two Sundays ago in Harlem the Reverend Adam Clayton Powell uncovered another unknown racist in America.

A stunned congregation at the Abyssinian Baptist Church listened openmouthed as the Congressman from New York denounced the activities of a plump, elderly man who has devoted much of his career to the exploitation of Negroes. Remarkably enough, the man of whom the pastor was speaking has spent his life in a Northern environment and behind a deceptively jolly exterior.

"Santa Claus", roared Powell, "is only a white man's invention." Furthermore, continued the congressman, all dedicated Negroes should make a sincere effort this Christmas to boycott the old bigot by not buying presents for exchange.

All of which is vaguely reminiscent of the big flap in Rochester last Spring over Aunt Jemima and her flapjacks. It was in that town that the NAACP turned out full force to protest the establishment of a pancake kitchen bearing the old mammy's name. "Aunt Jemima", said one critic, "is a negative stereotype of a Negro subservient to a white person." Another termed her a "handkerchief-headed menial." We never heard how it turned out, but Aunt Jemima's product continued to sell like hotcakes.

But the most fun of all was last fall when THE RALEIGH TIMES went on a witch hunt and came up with Little Orphan Annie. (The TIMES, by the way, is the little sister of the Pinnacle of Truth, THE NEWS AND OBSERVER).

It all started one Saturday afternoon when Annie disappeared mysteriously from the TIMES comic section. Nothing was said. No explanation was given. She just disappeared.

Slightly more than curious, WRAL-TV made an inquiry with the syndicate that distributes "Little Orphan Annie." The reply came promptly.

The TIMES, it seems, had dropped the comic strip because it was "loaded with John Birch Society propaganda and not fit for publication in a newspaper."

And, bydam, they're right! We can't have these subversive, capitalistic, anti-commies running all over the place and brainwashing little children. They should be gagged.

And that's why Annie doesn't live here anymore.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Liked Cartoon

Editors, The Tar Heel,

We would like to criticize those who criticized your cartoon of October 12th concerning the "Peace Marchers." We feel that the cartoon gives an accurate picture of what the public thinks of such non-violent protest groups. That is, the overall picture portrayed by some of these organizations is one of physical sloppiness.

One such organization, whose principles are sound, although supported in a somewhat radical way, would probably receive much more sympathy—certainly much less criticism, such as this letter—if certain of the members would take the following advice:

1) To Male Members:
a. Get a haircut at least twice per semester.
b. Shave twice a month—at least.

2) To Female Members:
a. Roll your hair a minimum of once every two weeks.
b. Apply a smudge of lipstick once a week.
c. Be seen at least ten minutes each day without a cigarette dangling from your lips.
d. Do not be seen with male male members who have not complied with a. and b. of no. one above.

3) Male And Female Members:
a. Take a bath once a month (whether you need it or not).
b. Do not wait until clothes will stand up of their own accord before sending them to the laundry.

We feel that these minimum steps to better grooming will not take too much of the time that you have set aside on your busy schedule for demonstrations.

Relief

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Very few people realize just how important a town fire department really is.

I live in one of the barrack-type apartments in the old part of Victory Village. I have often heard neighbors and friends lamenting the fact that the old houses are such fire-traps. If one fire broke out, all of the apartments in a compound would probably burn down. Because of this, many of the student wives have a very insecure feeling as concerns fires. Most of the apartments have old furnaces, and a lot of the students have old second-hand electric stoves to cook on; plus the fact that many wives are gone all day while they work, and they are alone at night while their husbands are away studying.

A few nights ago, one student wife had an unfortunate experience while her husband was away studying. Her stove kept getting hotter and hotter, and redder and redder, and she could not control the heat. The fire department was called and right away three fire engines and numerous police cars were on the scene. As it turned out, there was no fire.

However, this incident warmed my heart and gave me much security in knowing that if there should ever be a real fire, the Chapel Hill firemen and policemen would be there immediately to battle it.

As I stood watching the dedicated firemen ride by in their tremendous fire engines with all of the red lights flashing, I breathed a great sigh of relief and realized just how much people need to be thankful for the wonderful services of the fire department.

Litter

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Carolina's campus is probably the most pleasing to the eye in this area and easily overshadows the vaunted "Rock Pile" 10 miles to the east. However, a quick walk around the campus is enough to make me sick. Newspapers, candy wrappers, empty Coke and VO bottles (nothing against VO), papcups and other discarded articles litter the area around Lenoir and Graham Memorial, not to mention the rest of the campus. What seems to be the trouble with the maintenance department?

A Poem

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Otelia had a little pheasant
Whose disposition was not so pleasant;
When Otelia said, "you have,"
The unpleasant pheasant'd say, "I hesant."
Otelia said, 'Now look here, bird,
You've got to learn how to say that word."
The pheasant perched on Otelia's table
And cursed like no bird you've ever heard.
"My mother says that pheasant pie
Is a dish I should have before I die."
"The way you eat," said the saucy bird,
"You'll end up getting pie in your eye."
Otelia stared into outer space
And rammed her fist into a finger vase,
Whacked the bird with her long umbrella,
And bowed her head to say disgrace.

At the same time, however, both possess the offensive striking power capable of making it a wide-open affair.

Rossi leads the ACC in total offense with 408 yards in 68 plays and this includes a league-leading passing log of 30 completions in 49 attempts for 369 yards. He is considered a tricky operator in the backfield, preferring to pass on the run and after numerous fakes rather than dropping back into a pocket.

The underdog Tar Heels boast an attack which is no less potent. At quarterback you can take your pick between Junior Edge and Gary Black. Both have proved more than dangerous this season—on the ground and in the air.

Edge has hit on 21 of 54 aerials for 270 yards and has picked up 92 more on the ground. Black, a real surprise, has connected on 22 of his 37 passes for 212 yards. In the running department the Charlotte junior shows 70 yards in 18 carries.

alternate with the Carolina Symposium.

The purpose of such a festival would be to present "performances and exhibitions of student and faculty art" and to bring in outstanding performers and artists to the campus.

Another bill which passed will place before the student body a constitutional amendment renaming the Men's Interdormitory Council. The amendment will be voted on in fall elections, and if passed will change the IDC to the Men's Residence Council. Such a name change would allow for the complete reorganization of the Council.

The body also passed a resolution encouraging the student community to use the facilities of the gym at night. This resolution, introduced by Neal Jackson, came as the result of a report by gym officials that students are not making use of the plant.

Bills concerning the IFC Court and the party affiliation of student legislators were returned to their appropriate committees for further study.

Rep. Jackson's bill calling for student efforts on behalf of equal rights for all citizens was not reported out of the Ways and Means Committee. Jackson announced that the committee has held public hearings on the issue, and is still interested in obtaining student opinion on the bill.

Legislature approved the appointment of a student-faculty committee to select a new executive secretary for student government. The committee will be headed by Sam Himes, chairman of the Rules Committee.

Bills introduced under new business included a bill which would allow the Finance Committee to investigate student finances. The bill was introduced by Hugh Blackwell. Phil Baddour also introduced a bill providing for a legislative review of judicial proceedings.

UNC Freshmen Suffer Shocking 32-12 Defeat

By BILL LEE

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A big, spirited Virginia freshman team which is causing quite a stir on a campus that has gone a long time without a winner won few friends among Carolina's Tar Babies Friday afternoon.

The Cavayearlings rolled with surprising ease to a 32-12 victory over Coach George Barclay's highly-touted and previously undefeated UNC frosh.

The win-hungry Virginians looked every bit as strong against Carolina as they did last week in mauling VMI, 50-12. Using a hard-charging line which included 6-10, 290-pound John Naponick, the Little Cavaliers put a mighty rush on UNC quarterbacks Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver and turned three resulting interceptions into quickie TD's.

On another occasion the Virginians, to the delight of 8,000 screaming fans, recovered a UNC fumble on the Tar Heel 30 and moved in for the score.

Destined to score in every quarter, the Cavayearlings wasted no time in gaining the lead in the ball game — an advantage they never relinquished.

Tommy Jones picked off an errant Talbott toss at the UNC 22 early in the game, and on the next play bucked off tackle for five yards. A clipping penalty sent UVA back to the 33, but quarterback Bob Davis quickly solved this momentary setback. He found Jerry Carrington all alone in the end zone with a pass which gave UVA a 6-0 lead. Stan Kemp's placement made it 7-0.

Later in the quarter Virginia took over on its own 21 and moved all the way for its second TD, the only time on the clear and warm afternoon that a sustained drive was necessary for a Cavalier score.

Kemp three to Gilpin Thomas for a 13-yard gain and three plays later Don Seemuller bulled his way to a first down on the UVA 44, an 11-yard run. Highly-heralded halfback Carroll Jarvis followed this with a 22-yard sprint and Kemp ran to the UNC 28.

With so much success on the ground Virginia decided to stay on it. Jim Charr busted through to the 16, Ken Poates got nine more to the UNC 9 and two plays later Jarvis charged down to the one. On the next play Jarvis hit the middle of the line, going over for the score. Kemp again converted and UVA lead, 14-0.

Next the Virginia secondary picked on Beaver. Davis intercepted a Beaver aerial on the UVA 28 and whisked down the sidelines for 50 yards before he was brought down on the UNC 22. From here Dickie Prindible ran to the 15 from where, on the next play, Davis threw to Ken Poates for the Cavayearlings' third score. This time the kick was blocked, but it hardly mattered.

Bud Phillips opened the second half for Carolina the wrong way. He bobbled the opening kick-off and a Virginia man covered the ball on the UNC 30. Kemp immediately hit Jarvis for an 11-yard gain, then picked up three more yards on a pass to Poates.

It looked like the Tar Babies might hold here, but Kemp, faced with a fourth-and-ten situation got first down when interference was called on UNC at the one. Jarvis took it over from here.

Finally it was the Tar Babies' turn to hit pay dirt. Bo Wood returned Kemp's kick to the UNC 42 and halfback Leon Fonvielle moved the ball to the UVA 41 in four hauls. Talbott hit Bobby Knott with a pass to the 30, and after losing a yard on a run, the Rocky Mount star tossed to his fullback Spencer Barrow for a first down on the Virginia four. Two plays later he threw to Wood in the end zone, making it UVA 26, UNC ½.

Both teams added a TD in the final period, Virginia doing it first with the help of Waite Timberlake's interception of a Beaver pass on the UNC 24. From here, six runs produced the score, Keith Freeman doing the honors with a four-yard plunge.

Carolina got its score, marching from its own 36. Beaver passed to Knott for 11, then hit the Roxboro end again, this time with a long bomb to the UVA 11. After Jim Fortune lost a yard, Talbott came in and tossed to Knott in the end zone to complete the scoring.

Sports Courier

IT HAS ALWAYS brought fear that one day every game picked in this spot could be wrong, and I'd get laughed out of the league. I almost pulled it out last week.

Only Texas' victory over Oklahoma saved the guy from the Wolves that come creeping around after a sorry display of inept predictions. I knew I should have quit while I was ahead.

The upsets came thick and fast last time, and the only one I picked (unless you count Texas' win an upset) didn't come off. Purdue did not (I repeat, DID NOT) beat Wisconsin by 5. In fact, Purdue was smashed, 38-20.

Also for those of you who like to see blood, Florida beat Alabama, Army beat Penn State, Air Force beat Nebraska, Notre Dame beat Southern Cal, Washington beat Oregon State, Yale beat Columbia, and Baylor beat Arkansas. I missed them by a total of 145 points. Laugh, you &$c...@&?%.

Four games tied brought the week (weak) record to 13-8-4. This dropped the average 33 points to .728 on 67-25-8 for the year. For more laughs, read on.

CLEMSON AT DUKE. Bill Murray isn't perfect after all. He pulled a nice one last week that cost his club a ballgame. He won't make too many more mistakes this year, but the schedule already has. Playing a winless Clemson team won't be fun. Clemson, by 6.

SOUTH CAROLINA AT VIRGINIA. I wounldn't be too surprised if Virginia's freshmen could play the Gamecocks a better game than this one. South Carolina, long overdue, should get a brilliant day from Dan Reeves. South Carolina, by 14.

AIR FORCE AT MARYLAND. Up and down. Up and down. The Falcons fly. It's time for them to lose, and Dick Shiner could do it. However. Air Force, by 7.

WAKE FOREST AT ARMY. I hate to pick Wake Forest games. There's no challenge to it. You just sit around, joke about them and then after the game, sit around and joke about them. I count the change in my pocket each week on Wake. I had a quarter and four pennies in it this time. Army, by 29.

TENNESSEE AT ALABAMA. Bama should be ready for Bear this week. And they won't need any sleeper play to run past the Vols. Alabama, by 23.

AUBURN AT GEORGIA TECH. Lothridge and Staubach play catch with the Back Of The Week award each Saturday. But Auburn has a pretty darn good quarterback itself in Jimmy Sidle—the nation's leading rusher. This should be close. Georgia Tech, by 3.

COLUMBIA AT HARVARD. The New York papers think Archie Ward is the greatest thing since the strike settlement. But Harvard doesn't. They don't play touch football there anymore. Harvard, by 5.

PENN STATE AT SYRACUSE. The young and strong Orangemen soundly thrashed UCLA last week, 29-7. They are a coming gaint. Trouble is, Penn State, is coming off another tremendous upset by Army. I'll go Orange. Syracuse, by 10.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY AT BUFFALO. The Bulls failed to complete a pass last week as they lost their first to tiny Marshall. A future power, Buffalo does not want to be embarrassed at homecoming. Boston U. should oblige. Buffalo, by 9.

KENTUCKY AT LSU. You'd be foolish to pick against the Tigers at home. Herschel Turner, the fine tackle, won't tackle enough of them. LSU, by 16.

MINNESOTA AT ILLINOIS. The Illini have risen to eighth in the national polls. Strong defense has gotten them there. These teams are alike in that sense. And common sense says go with the home team. Illinois, by 5.

WISCONSIN AT IOWA. Replacing Ron VanderKelen hasn't been so hard after all. They've gotten a kid name Harold Brandt to do it. Ralph Kurek helps out with the rushing and they've badgered three opponents on the way to a number two rating. Tough, man. Wisconsin, by 11.

INDIANA AT MICHIGAN STATE. The Spartans, with a few breaks, could be 3-0. They haven't come, and 1-1-1 is the mark. Duffy better wake up the gaint or else OR ELSE. Michigan State, by 14.

PURDUE AT MICHIGAN. Another Big Ten clash at the fabulous stadium. Only 101,000 won't be there this time. Who is there will probably see a close football game. Purdue hasn't upset anybody yet. It's about time. Purdue, by 6.

UCLA AT NOTRE DAME. The Irish are fighting again. The kid that didn't play last year, Frank Budka, has 'em doing it. UCLA is weaker than it thinks. Notre Dame, by 17.

KANSAS AT OKLAHOMA. If they lose this one, Jimmy Grisham may be the next to go. In any case, Wilkinson's chances for the White House have suffered a severe blow. Oklahoma, by 8.

TEXAS AT ARKANSAS. This isn't a game. It's an institution. I got a letter from a guy that warns about selecting Texas. I agree that they just have to lose at least one this year. But when is the question. I prefer to wait. Texas, by 8.

SMU AT RICE. These Southwest deals make me sick. They don't play football. They play murder. SMU pulled a real honey over Navy in the Cotton Bowl. I don't know why I do this. Rice, by 5.

WASHINGTON STATE AT OREGON STATE. Creamed by Washington 34-7, the Beavers should not suffer again. Vernon Burke, one of the West's answers to Bob Lacey, will help the cause. Oregon State, by 16.

OHIO STATE AT SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. The Trojans have some problem that seems puzzling. What it boils down to is they aren't as good as they're supposed to be. Ohio State, however, will find out that they're better than they're not supposed to be. Confused? Forget it. Southern Cal, by 8.

OTHERS:
Dartmouth over Holy Cross.
Pittsburgh over West Virginia.
Missouri over Oklahoma State.
TCU over Texas A & M.
Washington over Stanford.

"My Darlings."

"There are around 100,000 women from ages 15-50 who train in these forces, each year," Le Thuy said. "I was the Major of my division."

The impromptu interview broke up when several television newsmen asked to interview Le Thuy.

As she was being escorted to another room, Hardy Berry, N. C. State Information Director, looked down at the wistful 18-year-old and said, "They love you."

We Must Bottle Up Rossi

by JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

The game with N. C. State is naturally an important game for Carolina year in and year out. This year circumstances (both teams tied with Duke for the ACC lead with 3-0 records) make this game's importance immeasurable.

For the first time in three or four years, we enter this game as an underdog, though admittedly a slight one. The boys on the team are aware of this and I think it might make them just a little tougher today. It certainly won't be to our disadvantage.

We've worked hard in practice this week and team spirit is skyhigh. The win over Maryland could well have "made" this football team. We're 3-1 now and the players realize we've got a good team. They are proud of themselves and they are going to work hard to uphold their reputation on the field.

Our No. 1 problem today is going to be in containing Jim Rossi, their quarterback. He's a good runner and a good passer, and above all, he's a scrambler in that backfield. You think you've got him and he scoots away. He likes to fake the run, roll out and throw the pass. His deception is great and he gives his receivers plenty of time to shake off the defenders.

Our ends are going to have to contain Rossi and they must make sure tackles on him. We can't afford to have him running around back there. It's not an easy task, but we put a good rush on those Maryland quarterbacks last Saturday. We should be able to do it again.

Their main receivers are split end Ray Barlow and wing-back Joe Scarpati. The latter will line up tight but will go in motion to the opposite side of the field. He also will carry the ball on end sweeps. On occasion State will use the unbalanced line, switching their tight end, say on the right, over to the left side as a split end. This would make Barlow ineligible as a receiver. But often when they do this they will move Scarpati up to the line, in the spot vacated by the tight end, and drop Barlow back a few steps, making him eligible—as a wing-back. This means we've got to stay alert as to who is eligible and who isn't.

Their fullback Pete Falzarano is their leading ground gainer. He works between the tackles, is a smart runner and is tough to bring down. Halfback Tony Koszarsky can go inside or outside. They both are very important in making Rossi's fakes effective.

The kicking game could be an important factor in this contest. They've got a great punter in Dave Houtz. He gets real good distance and he kicks them high. Our Bill Edwards does a real good job too, but State may have the edge in punting. However, I think we've got the best field goal threat in Max Chapman. He's dangerous from the 25 on in. Also he's really been getting his kicktimes at Maryland).

If we get an early lead today we don't plan to sit on it, though I think our defense is offs deep (in the end zone three capable of turning in a real good "defensive" type of ball game. But right now I don't have any particular strategy as to whether to play a defensive or offensive game.

I have shifted Joe Robinson and John Atherton again. Robinson will play tight end for the first unit, Atherton with the second. At left tackle, Cole Kortner will remain with the first team, Gene Sigmon with the second. The rest of the allignment will be the same as last week.

Tommy Ward is back in top shape and will play behind Ronnie Jackson at wingback. We did lose Roger Smith the other day. He tore his finger all apart in practice. He'll be out for about four weeks.

There's really nothing else to say. This is a big game, our most important to date. I think we're ready both mentally and physically, and though some of the boys might be a little tense at first, I'm sure we will settle down quickly and turn in a highly-spirited, hard-fought ball game.

State Just Couldn't Mooooove The Ball

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The signs all this week put it bluntly: DESTROY THE WOLFPACK. And children, you'd better believe it. Because North Carolina could've scored 'till the cows came home here yesterday.

But the cows went home after only sixty minutes of milking, and UNC had to settle for a 31-10 slaughtering of N. C. State before 45,500 screaming CU day spectators.

What was announced as the largest crowd ever to see a football game in Chapel Hill watched in astonishment as Carolina gave State a tying gift touchdown at the end of the first half, and then came back to thrash the Pack with three touchdowns to zip.

It was 10-all at halftime, and the close battle that had been anticipated was at hand. But UNC decided to play milkman in the second half—and Raleigh fans might as well have gone to the State Fair for their kicks from then on.

For Carolina took the second half kickoff, marched 63 yards in seven plays (with Ken Willard bursting from the six for the score—17-10); recovered a State fumble less than a minute later on the Cows' 22 (with Junior Edge then passing 22 yards to Joe Robinson in the end zone—24-10); and completely ridiculed Jim Rossi and the vaunted Pack offense into helplessness the remaining thirty minutes.

As if the third quarter blitz wasn't enough, the Tar Heels tore some more hide in the final period when they controlled the ball for all but six plays in two long-yardage drives.

One went from the UNC 15 to paydirt in 13 plays. Edge, on a replica of his second quarter gem, passed five yards to Robinson for a 30-10 lead. Dave Braine kicked the last of his four placements, and half the stadium had already begun to laugh.

But Carolina was still not through. With about four minutes left, Wolfpack punter Dave Houtz kicked out of bounds on the Carolina two. UNC then drove to the State 37, where State Coach Earle Edwards must have yelled MERCY. For Jim Hickey sent in his third unit.

But Max Chapman, the guy who's supposed to know only how to kick the ball, wasn't about to show mercy when he got it to run with. The rusty-haired sophomore looked like Choo Choo as he carried six straight times (35 yards) in 80 seconds to within inches of the goal. But the clock ran out as UNC was setting up again, and disgusted Chapman slammed the ball among the end one stripes. Damn!

For the first thirty minutes, this engagement was truly the "Big Game" it was billed to be. But after that, there was just no way.

UNC tallied first after forcing State's Houtz into a punting error which went out on his Pack's own 34. The Heels took it in quickly to the 11, but stalled when three bursts by Willard got only six. Braine kicked a 21-yard field goal for the 3-0 as the clock showed 9:42 remaining in the opening quarter.

That's the way it went into the middle of the second period with Houtz and Carolina's Billy Edwards playing Punt - Punt most of the time.

Things started opening up a little later when State defensive end Ray Barlow blocked an Edwards punt after a high pass from center on the UNC 19. There were almost nine minutes left in the half, and Carolina was in trouble.

A Rossi pass to Joe Scarpati got a first down at the seven, but the magnificent UNC defense held when the Wolves played footsy and got an illegal procedure penalty for it on a third-and-goal from the three.

State got the down over, but Scarpati dropped a bullet at the goal line, and they had to go for three. The Pack did and got the tie on a 25-yarder by Gus Andrews.

UNC didn't like it and unlocked the draw the next time it got the ball. The "second" team (Gary Black, director) pushed for the TD after Ron Tuthill returned a kickoff to UNC's 33.

It took nine plays. And the big ones were four passes by Black. The dark-skinned Charlotte junior, who was six for 11 for 103 yards on the day, hit Tuthill for 18 (a brilliant shoetops catch), Robinson for eight, John Atherton for 12 and Tuthill again for the 15-yard score. It was a rollout flat pass, and Ron beat Merrick Barnes to the corner of TD land.

Two minutes plus remained in the half when Braine's kick made it 10-3, and it looked like that would be it at the break—especially when Braine intercepted a ball intended for Scarpati at the Carolina 25 a little later.

The Heels called time with 30 seconds left and decided to gamble for more points. But Black's pass to Bob Lacey was ten feet high and right into the arms of Koszarsky at the N.C. State 26.

The swift halfback rambled to the left behind great blocking, saw he was trapped by John Hill, but escaped and turned toward mid-field where he ran away untouched into the UNC end zone. It was a shocking 74-yard runback, Andrews converted, and the half ended just like that. 10-10.

Carolina might have wilted. But Custer got off light compared to what happened to State in the wake of UNC's wrath after the intermission.

Eddie Kesler again gave UNC a good start on a kickoff return to the Carolina 37. And, from there, Edge took them down in seven manuevers. A look-in to Robinson picked up 12, a rollout right pass to Robinson got another 26, and Willard, in between, scrampered for a few more. After the big gainer to Robinson put the ball on the State six, big Ken got the honors and cracked over from six yards out at the 12:23 mark.

A 17-10 margin increased to 24-10 exactly 57 seconds later. Mike Clark returned to the State 24, but Rossi, badgered and beaten all day long, fumbled the first snap, and UNC's Lacey fell on it at the 22.

Man, it took just one play to put it away. Edge again rolled right and Robinson's pattern beat Scarpati for the catch that actually sewed this one up.

UNC's fourth-quarter score was just so much sour cream after all the milk that had flowed up to then.

The scoring play was again the "56-pass" to Robinson—this time for five yards. They were the final ones in the 85-yard, 13 play drive. Willard, who picked up 91 yards on the warm afternoon, carried seven times (of his total 19) in the march for 50 yards.

State's offense didn't moooove too effectively in the first half, almost not at all in the second. The Wolfpack got just 26 yards on the ground and 80 through the air. It's deepest penetration in the final half was to the Carolina 40.

Koszarsky was the leading rusher with 34 yards. Rossi was 11 for 17 passing. UNC's Black, in addition to his passing, picked up 76 yards rushing—a fine day for the improving quarterback. Edwards outpunted Houtz in the average by 46 to 32.7.

Accreditation Cops Due To Check UNC

By MARTHA ADAMS

The count-down for UNC officials who are preparing the University for its ten-year accreditation inspection has reached five months.

In March, a 12-14 man committee from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools will visit the University, look into its nooks and crannies, and decide whether to recommend re-accreditation.

The University submits itself voluntarily to this and other inspections of its standards, facilities and achievements. The Southern Association is one of the six regional accrediting agencies in the United States which operate on a geographical basis.

Not Formal

Accreditation is not merely a formal procedure. It establishes standards and criteria for universities and colleges throughout the nation. It serves to facilitate the transfer of students from one institution to another and informs those who employ the graduates of an institution about the quality of training they have received. It provides the layman with some guidance about the institution he may wish to patronize.

A "Steering Committee of 19" made up of faculty members and appointed by the Chancellor is currently in charge of preparing facts about the 14 colleges and schools and the approximately 100 departments, institutes, and affiliated academic agencies in the Universities. The material will be edited into an 800 page volume to be ready by the middle of January. Copies will be sent to members of the visiting accreditation committee and the UNC faculty.

High Officials

The visiting committee, which is appointed by the executive director of the Southern Association, will be made up of professors, deans, and administrative officials from other academic institutions within the Southern region. It will include one university president, three representatives for the arts and sciences, two for graduate studies and a number of specialists in such fields as libraries, extension education, business, student affairs, and research.

The committee will remain on campus three days and prepare a report to be presented to the University and the Southern Association. Re-accreditation will be made on the basis of the report.

Four Schools

Simultaneously with the overall accreditation procedure, four UNC schools will be visited by reviewing committees representing national professional organizations. They are the Schools of Pharmacy, Library Science, Business Administration, and Social Work.

Schools and departments that have been examined within the last several years and designated "fully-accredited" are School of Law, School of Medicine, Memorial Hospital, School of Dentistry (and its Department of Dental Hygiene), Public Health School, School of Nursing, Department of Psychology, Department of Music, School of Journalism, School of Education, Department of Chemistry. Other schools and departments are adjudged by the regional accrediting committee. The University, in each instance, has received full-accreditation, indicating top ranking in every case.

The 19 members of the UNC committee presently preparing the self-study report for January are Professors A. K. King, chairman: Herbert R. Baer, John N. Couch, Wayne A. Danielson, Fletcher M. Green, Bernard G. Greenberg, C. Hugh Holman, A. C. Howell, James C. Ingram, S. Shepard Jones, Alan Keith-Lucas, Eugen Merzbacher, George D. Penick (M. D.), Charles N. Reilley, John W. Thibaut, Arthur M. Whitehill Jr., William M. Whyburn (M. D.).

Council Hopefuls

The Honor System Commission has planned a program for training all Honor Council candidates desiring the endorsement of the Commission in the fall election.

Applications must be turned in by 10 p.m. Thursday at the Student Government office.

Three compulsory meetings are planned.

Jaene Yeager, chairman of the Commission will outline the study program at the first meeting and Bob Spearman, vice president of the student body, will explain the purpose and philosophy of the System.

Buzzy Stubbs, attorney general, will explain the function and mechanics of the Attorney General's Staff.

At the second meeting, Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council and Carolyn Pinion, chairman of the Women's Council will speak separately to their respective candidates to explain the function and responsibility of their councils.

A test will be given to all candidates at the third meeting.

Candidates must attend the programs to be candidates and must pass the test to be endorsed in the coming elections.

Northwestern U Poses Bias Rule

EVANSTON, Ill. (UPI) — The student senate at Northwestern University has proposed an 11-point "student rights" amendment to the university's constitution—an outgrowth of complaints by two African students who were refused apartment rentals.

Obi Wali, 31, Port Harcourt, Nigeria, and John Addico, 32, Prampram, Ghana, both graduate students, said they responded to more than 15 advertisements for apartments but were rejected because of their race.

They said landlords either told them they could not accept Negroes or raised the rents to prohibitive heights.

The amendment contained an item that would allow the university to withhold its approval from "any housing that does not have a policy of non-discrimination."

The amendment now has to be approved by the university's Council on Undergraduate Life, composed of seven teachers and two students.

"What shocked me most is that people made no pretense and simply said they wouldn't rent to a Negro," said Wali.

"The result is that we have come up to the reality of the race situation here. Nobody will have us," he said.

CUSC Asks Change

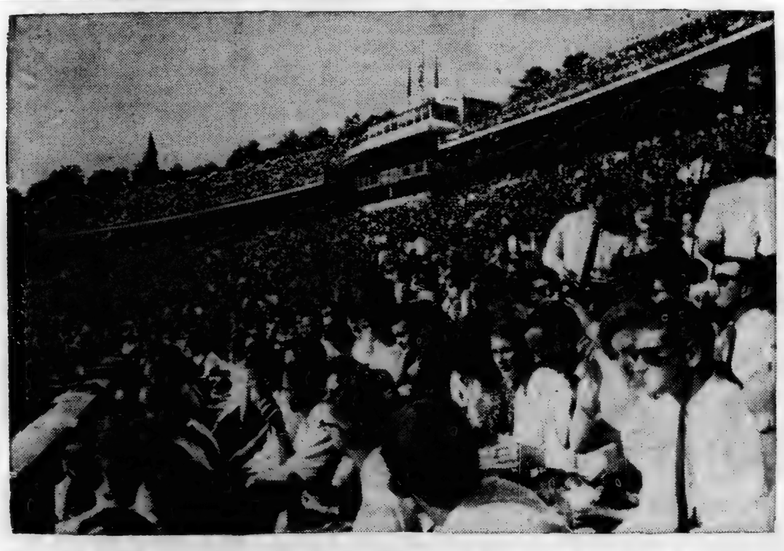
The Consolidated University Student Council voted unanimously Saturday to begin efforts to correct the timing problem of CU Day for next year.

Bob Spearman of the UNC delegation introduced a motion which will establish a committee to look into the problems resulting from a combination of late classes on the Greensboro campus and the early football game time.

The committee will investigate the possibility of cutting short the Greensboro class hours to allow visiting girls time for a proper reception in Chapel Hill.

The council also agreed to appoint a committee to draw up a resolution concerning the Council's stand on the controversial speaker ban bill. This resolution will be released in connection with the Oct. 28 meeting of University Trustees here.

The CUSC heard a report from Johnsye Massenberg, chairman of the UNC delegation, concerning CU Day. Miss Massenburg praised the council for its efforts toward improvements in the annual celebration and informed Council members on the schedule of events for the day.



A CAPACITY CROWD filled Kenan Stadium yesterday afternoon to watch the Carolina Tar Heels roll over N. C. State 31-10. The crowd was announced at an estimated 45,500, the largest number of people ever to see a ball game in Kenan Stadium. Extra grandstands were set up in the east end zone to accommodate the overflow from the regular stands.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Tax Cut Prospects Dim

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The slow opening pace set by the Senate Finace Committee has further dimmed prospects of Congress enacting President Kennedy's tax cut bill this year.

The tax-writing headed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), all but buried chances for speedy final senate action on the priority $11 billion tax cut program, 23 days ago by the House.

The committee scheduled less than four witnesses a day for the next two weeks of public hearings. At this rate, hearings would run at least seven weeks.

Lord Home Accepts Mandate

LONDON (UPI) — Lord Home accepted Queen Elizabeth's mandate Saturday to become prime minister.

He immediately said he would renounce his 348-year-old Scottish peerage and told the nation he would give it a stunt-free, "straight talking" government.

Informed sources said he had reached a truce with his Conservative party opponents but that no announcement of his cabinet could be expected before Sunday.

They said the former foreign secretary wants to announce the cabinet lineup in a "tidy package."

It was clear that Home's career as prime minister would not be easy sailing. Many Conservative party leaders were disgruntled because Harold Macmillan "dictated" the choice of successor. Labor was confident of a victory over what the pro-Labor Daily Mirror called "brand X's leadership."

'Fierce Fighting' Underway

ALGIERS (UPI)—The Algerian defense ministry announced Sunday that "fierce fighting" was underway with Moroccan troops in the disputed border area and that heavy troop reinforcements had been ordered to the south Sahara region.

The ministry reported heavy fighting raged in the region of Hassi Beida and Tinnjoub, 250 miles southwest of Colomb Bechar, and that 900 soldiers, 300 of them guerrilla veterans of the war with France, were en route to the scene by truck convoy from Blida, south of Algiers.

In Paris, the Algerian Embassy announced that more than 4,000 Algerians working in France had volunteered to fight against Morocco and that the first contingent was flown to Algiers Friday night.

Rockefeller Blasts Goldwater

HANOVER, N. H. (UPI)—New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller wound up his two-day barnstorming trip through New Hampshire Saturday by making it clear his views were far different than those of Sen. Barry Goldwater.

The governor said it would be a "disaster" to withdraw from the United Nations, a move he said Goldwater advocated, and also attacked the Arizona Republican on such topics as the World Bank and foreign aid.

It was clear, however, that the two-day trip was more than just for speechmaking. Rockefeller was plainly trying to determine New Hampshire's reaction to him and his wife, Happy, with a view to entering the state's first-in-the-nation presidential primary March 10.

On Honor System And Expansion

A survey of student attitudes toward the Honor System made last spring has come to the campus' attention, and it is time to summarize and evaluate.

The study was initiated because Grant Wheeler, last year's Men's Council chairman, "had some doubts as to whether the Honor System could work at a university as big as this."

The fact is that UNC is the largest institution of higher learning at which an honor system is in use.

The Honor System was begun back in 1870 when the University was considerably smaller and all the students knew each other. Most experts have agreed that such a system works best in a smaller academic community where social pressures can most effectively be brought to bear on violators.

The study, as drawn up by the sociology department, shows that some of Wheeler's misgivings were not without foundation.

Over half the students admitted violating the Honor Code at least once, and nearly 60 per cent said they had violated the more controversial Campus Code.

Yet about 70 per cent of the confessed violators had broken the Codes only "once or twice."

The survey also shows a slight increase in violations between freshman and senior years.

But despite the large number of violators, the vast majority of students repeatedly claimed the utmost interest in and respect for the Honor System and the Men's and Women's Councils. Those who didn't feel respect and interest were generally those who had "frequently" violated both Campus and Honor Codes, and this was a small minority.

A vast majority also said that they would prefer the Honor System over all others, particularly the proctor system. But nearly half of these felt that at least some changes should be made in the System.

The most general conclusion that can be drawn from the study is that the Honor System is still a very powerful thing, but with reservations. These reservations are symptoms of the University's growing pains. The System is going to have to adapt itself to a larger university community in which new sub-communities are popping up regularly with new standards and value systems of their own.

Wheeler once said that the main purpose of the Honor System was "an edunational one." Certainly this survey has helped further that purpose.

Political Expediency Inexpedient

Republican State Rep. Donald Bagley of Guilford last week tried to put the squeeze on House Speaker Clifton Blue, but ended up giving himself a black eye. Bagley's ploy came during a vote on redistricting in the legislature Thursday. He voted for the amendment bill on the second reading, bringing the total to 72, the required number of votes for passage. In so doing he rose and said, "The more I read about political expediency, the less I think of it . . . I am accountable only to God . . .I believe the people have a right to vote on this."

These are fine sentiments, but they turned out to be of no meaning whatever. On the third reading, Bagley realized that without his vote the amendment bill would be one vote short of passage and that House Speaker Blue, who is running for lieutenant governor, would have to cast the final vote and thereby lose some support with big county politicans. So just before the third and final reading, Bagley strolled out of the chamber and didn't come back for the roll-call. With the count at 71 to 43, Speaker Blue could have refused to vote, but he cast his "aye" and the bill passed.

Blue may have lost some support, but Bagley has lost a great deal of respect.

What Size Is Senator Clarence Stone?

Senator Clarence Stone's announcement promising he will "never return" to another General Assembly left us with mixed feelings.

His big mistake seems to be that he did not make that decision a year ago. If he had, both he and the State would have benefited.

His tacit admission of error was a sign that he has not completely written off as unfounded the many criticisms that have been levelled at him as President of the Senate.

"I may have made a few mistakes but I've never presided over a group before," he said. "Any mistakes I've made have been ones of the head and not the heart.

It helps to know that he was doing what he thought right when he performed such actions as ramming the Gag Law through the Senate, but we never doubted the integrity of his motivations in the first place, and neither did many others, however much we and they opposed his actions and political philosophy.

Admitting to mistakes, however, does not remove the results of those mistakes. It does not even make them easier to swallow. All it does is partially explain why the errors occurred.

This, for example, is why many people oppose capital punishment. It does no good to realize someone has made a mistake after the accused has been executed.

Sen. Stone, of course, did nothing that extreme during his tenure as President of the Senate. But he did aid and abet in the unthinking execution of some sound democratic principles, including the right of students and others on state campuses to hear about ideas and philosophies alien to our society.

Unlike human execution, however, these principles are capable of being revived and restored to their former place of honor among us.

Sen. Stone has shown he is a big enough man to, at least tacitly, admit he made some mistakes. We hope he is big enough to do something positive about rectifying them as well.

New Drink

Report To You

Congress Praised By Delegates

NOTE—The following are reports from more of the UNC representatives to the National Student Association Congress which met this summer in Bloomington, Indiana.

John Ulfelder

For a person who has never attended an NSA Congress before, such as the one held at the University of Indiana this August, the immediate impression is one of confusion. Yet, if the indivual delegate is willing to strike out on his own, he or she can get a fairly good idea of what is going on and the confusion dissipates to some degree.

Still, I am sure that there were some delegates there that did not know what was going at anytime during the Congress, but this cannot be said for the delegation from the University of North Carolina. Such immediate confusion is unavoidable at such a student meeting where so many people are involved, where the issues are important, and the time is short. The NSA staff is cognizant of this confusion when people first arrive and have set the Congress up in such a manner that this confusion can be overcome before the really important business at hand begins.

I am referring to the schedule of seminars for two days, Committees and Sub-committees for four days, and then the plenary sessions and election of the new officers for the remainder of the Congress. Such a schedule gives the delegates a chance to meet each other and discuss things together before the issues actually arrive on the Congress floor for debate and a vote. Thus the immediate confusion is overcome and the individual delegate is better prepared to meet the particular issues of that Congress.

At this point I would like to say something about the seminars and the one that I participated in. Quite frankly I think these seminars are one of the most valuable parts of the Congress. I was in the Freedom of Expression Seminar, which in my opinion had both excellent speakers and excellent discussions. This particular seminar was valuable to me because of my position with the Carolina Forum for the coming year. It was in this seminar that the question of the speaker ban was discussed and as most people know this subject has particular reference to the University of North Carolina. The other seminars which I attended were also of high caliber.

Following the seminars the interesting work of drafting and amending legislation began in the Committee and Sub-Committees. Although staff reports had been sent out to everyone ahead of time, I found that many of the delegates were not fully prepared to discuss the issues that came up at the Congress, at least not with a complete degree of initelligence. But I do not think that this was a failing of NSA as much as it was a failing of the individual delegates, who did not read the material they were given ahead of time.

Still, there were enough people present with enough knowledge to make much of the debate relevant and worthwhile. On the plenary floor a great deal of legislation was handled, some of it very well some of it not so well. The pace at this point in the Congress is quite fast and some of the delegates could not keep up with it. Although the method of handling legislation was changed for this Congress, I think that it could use further changes that would limit the amount of legislation still further and allow the Congress to focus more attention on certain items.

It should be noted that the purpose of this Congress is not just to deal with controversial and so-called political issues, as many of the Associations critics like to think. Students have the right to think and speak out on any issue they wish: it is only through the free discussion of ideas that people learn and are able to form opinions. Many of the issues dealt with on the plenary floor directly effect students, such as the Resolution on Student Welfare drawn up by a member of the Carolina delegation.

Also, the Congress serves as a meeting ground for most of the capable student leaders from around the country. It is a place where the leaders of this campus can meet with the leaders from other campuses and discuss mutual problems. Even though the student Government of the University of North Carolina is a leader in the Association and in many cases sets rather than follows the example of the Association, there are still important benefits for the University from its membership in the Association. If concerned people are sent to the Congress representing the University of North Carolina, then there will be a gain for the University through their continued concern and leadership. If this were not the case, then we might as well end any form of student government at Carolina.

My over-all opinion of the Congress is a favorable one. This is not to say that it was perfect, but on the whole considering all the problems that a Congress of this type can run into, it was a well run and valuable Congress. An important fact is that the Association itself recognizes the need for change and attempts to meet that need.

Phil Baddour

The 16th National Student Congress was for me both an exciting and informative experience. I should hasten to add, however, that there were times when I became concerned and frankly disappointed in the congress.

Because of its current importance and an obvious need for Southern representation, I chose to attend the seminar and Subcommittee on Civil Rights. The Seminar lasted for two days and was for me the most informative part of the congress. People directly involved with the Civil Rights movement gave their opinion of the problems in both the North and South. I did feel however that the seminar lacked objectivity and I would have liked to have heard presentations from people who saw the Civil Rights problem from a different viewpoint.

The Sub-committee and Committee were both interesting and stimulating. Legislation is drafted in the Sub-committee and then is passed on to committee which may or may not pass it on to the plenary floor. The whole process is very democratic and both sides of a question could be adequately presented in Committee.

One of my criticisms of the Congress was the lack of pertinent debate on the floor of the plenary. Time was unnecessarily consumed in Parliamentary hassels and sometimes meaningless amendments. I realize that much of this is inevitable in a body so large, however, without meaningful debate it is very hard for a delegate to make a decision as to how he should vote. There were many issues on which I am sure many of the delegates, lacked sufficient background. So in many cases the absence of intelligent discussion was indeed dissappointing.

There were certain groups at the congress, namely SNCC, ADA and SDS, who felt that NSA should become actively involved in the Civil Rights movement. The attitude of this group was oftentimes very distinctly one of "What can I get from NSA?" rather than "What can I contribute?" Particularly irritating to me was the willingness of these groups to act on certain pieces of legislation before adequate information had been presented to the Congress.

Although these groups were very vocal, they repeatedly found the Congress unwilling to go along with their radical proposals. As you will no doubt hear over and over again, the Congress was a moderate one as compared to previous years. There can be no doubt that the UNC delegation was a significant factor.

I would praise the Congress for the passage of several important program resolutions. A program resolution has the effect of establishing projects in areas with which the national staff will work in the coming year. As examples I would cite resolutions dealing with Southern education, aid to the schools of Prince Edward County, Va., and the study of higher education for the deaf.

In conclusion, I should say that in this report I have expressed how the congress affected me. I am sure that many others found it to be a much richer experience than I, and by the same token there was no doubt many who did not obtain as much as I. I think I can safely say that any person attending an NSA Congress will benefit from the Congress in direct proportion to the amount of effort that he puts into both direct preparation for and participation in the Congress.

Kellis Parker

In 1962, I attended a conference of international students which was held in Athens, Greece. At this conference I was amazed at the skill with which the students analized the many issues. My immediate reaction was that these students from the thirty different countries were more sophisticated in the art of parliamentary debate and more concerned about world affairs than the students of our own country.

At the 16th National Congress of USNSA, I discovered that there are students in our country who are not only concerned about current events, but also about the role of the United States in relation to these events.

Our primary concern was the plight of students in their role as students. As citizens of an affluent society, it is our responsible to have an active interest in the affairs of students in other countries. One argument that is gaining popularity throughout the student world is that students everywhere are linked by common bounds. It was this attitude which prevailed at the NSA Congress.

Too often students in the United States forget the international significance of NSA. Throughout Asia, Africa, Latin America and Europe, NSA is respected for the assistance it has given to the development of higher education in other countries. At the Congress, we considered resolutions that would enable students from Angola and Mozambique to study in the United States. Moreover we reaffirmed our support of many Latin American students to achieve academic freedom, expressed our strong disapproval of the maltreatment of hundreds of Vietnamese students at the hands of the Diem regime. Our attention was also focused on the attempts of 10 per cent of our population to gain equal job opportunities, equal educational opportunities, and all the benefits of first class citizenship.

These are but a few of the issues discussed at the Congress. They demonstrate the immense importance of NSA as a means of contact between the American student and the rest of the world. Whether we admit it or not, NSA reigns supreme as the voice of the American student that this voice has a liberal slant is due to the fact that the more concervative institutions have acquiesced by withdrawing from NSA. Fulton Lewis, Jr., who lectured almost every night of the conference, agreed that the conservatives had withdrawn when they should have fought for the cause. He promises, however, that the conservatives will return in 1964. Accordingly, I look forward to a more polemical and controversial congress next year.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

He Likes Us!!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I am business manager of our newspaper, The Ripon College Days, here at Ripon College, Ripon, Wisconsin. We have, in the past, requested from other colleges and universities, a copy of their newspaper in exchange for one of ours. However, a problem arises in this situation. Our newspaper is published once a week and I assume your paper is a daily issue. But the Daily Tarheel has been talked about a great deal in one of my political science courses taught by Mr. Merson. He suggested I get the Daily Tarheel because of its excellence in unbaised news of the situation in the South.

Defense Of State

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Before I came to U.N.C., I made myself a promise that I would not let the "wild-eyed liberals" that abound on campus bother me—assuming, of course, that they would go their erratic little way and let me go mine. This seemed to be the best policy since conservative graduate students from S.C. are in an over-whelming minority (so much of a down-trodden minority, in fact, that I wonder why some of your soapboxers haven't marched down Main Street for us).

However, I can't follow this course of a mutual laissez faire any more, because in every direction I turn I find myself actively ridiculed and scorned for my political beliefs along with any other conservative segregationist on campus. The general consensls around here seems to be that we—and I say "we" in the fond hope that there is at least one other kindred soul in existence up here—are a bunch of red-necked, ignorant, cornbread-dippin', bigoted cotton-pickers who haven't got enough sense to come in out of a shower of burning kerosene from the shanty we just blew up. The mere fact alone that I am from S.C. classes me with "idiots" and "trouble-makers" in your unbiased and comprehensive viewpoints.

Not at all! Most South Carolinians are very warm, intelligent people who would no more dream of forcing someone to concur with their particular religious or political beliefs then they would laugh at him for his own ideas.

What astounds me the most about the liberal faction at U.N.C. is the violent representation it gets in the DTH. The first few days I read it I wasn't sure if I was reading a campus newspaper or the Organ of Truth to the entire Free World whose staff, in spite of dire persecution, was valiantly rolling the presses to save the oppressed masses. Certainly, a campus newspaper should have controversy—indeed, it is almost mandatory—but it seems to me that the DTH takes pains to go to ludicrous extremes.

Gentlemen, gentlemen! Granted, you are the "chosen representatives" of some 10,000 students—minus one—but, after all! You are still college students and have a long way to go before you achieve full status in the adult world around you. Don't burn yourselves up before you have a chance to live on your own, making your own way in the world—someone once said. "People don't become conservatives until they have something to conserve." We of South Carolina have found our something—I hope you find yours.

Ed. Note—The limits of good taste required that the following letter be heavily edited.

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In as much as I advocate democracy with its ever increasing tendency toward socialism, I must protest what I consider an invasion of privacy in the lavatory facilities of this campus. To put it bluntly, the "open door" policy in the bathrooms is too much. . . .

Now, in Saunders Hall and the Library, the partitions separating the privies are completely void of a door. For this, I curse the bureaucrats who placed me in the long, exhibitionist line of rank and file thus causing the loss of identity I feel now. . . .

I don't know why doors are not in the lavatories this year, but I know from experience that no evil has been remedied, no sanitation has improved. . . . Mother Nature just didn't mean the natural processes were for open display. Even many of the lower type animals find a tree or fire hydrant for concealment.

Such an infringement of privacy here violates the individualism which UNC attempts to develop. I am not an introvert or an ascetic, but I would like to know that there are some things that I can do alone. This letter could be the butt of much humor, but I'm really serious. So come on fellows, support a little solitude and segregation among our sex!

Playmakers' Janice Moore

Twinkly Actress Brightens Play

By JOHN WHITTY

Janice Moore, senior from Beaufort, S. C., adds more than her share of twinkle to "Little Mary Sunshine," the Carolina Playmakers' musical comedy which opens for a special Student Night performance Tuesday night.

She has, as a matter of fact, landed the role of Nancy Twinkle in this light-hearted spoof of those syrupy operettas which used to feature such stars as Nelson Eddy and Jeannette MacDonald.

Fresh from a summer stock season of old "meller-drammers" in Myrtle Beach, Miss Moore has returned to the Playmakers' stage with a great deal of gusto. Her delivery of "Mata Hari" one of the show's memorable tunes, is comically energetic.

Last season, Miss Moore appeared with the Playmakers in "The Cherry Orchard" and on tour with "Rhinoceros." In between performances with the Playmakers, she manages to find time to serve on "Mademoiselle" magazine's national college board, and on the Women's House Council from Whitehead dormitory. She is also a member of Angel Flight, the Air Force ROTC hostess group.

After the special Student Night performance on Tuesday, "Little Mary Sunshine" will continue its run for the general public through Sunday evening.

Student Night tickets are available through Tuesday in Y-Court, Lenoir Hall, and at the Graham Memorial Information Desk. Any remaning tickets wil be sold at the door.

Hootenanny

WUNC Radio's second Hootenanny will be staged Monday night at 8 p.m. in Classroom I, Swain Hall.

Students and the general public are invited to attend. The performance will be taped for later broadcast.

The emphasis of the hootenanny this week will be on country and western folk music.

Kent Evans, program director and director of special events at UNC, will act as Master of Ceremonies.

Guest singers and guitarists include Charles Pettis, Alan Pike, Dave Joyce, Paul Collins, John Wenberg, and others.

Also appearing is a bluegrass band, yet unnamed.

WUNC's hootenanny is recorded Monday night with live audience participation. It is broadcast Tuesday night at 10:15 on WUNC Radio, 91.5 FM. The tape of last week's show was broadcast twice, once Tuesday and again on Thursday.

The hootenanny is designed to make WUNC radio more a part of student activities at UNC. The show enables students to perform in front of a live audience and a radio audience.

They Need You, They Want You

Several graduate and post-doctoral fellowships and scholarships have been announced for 1963-64.

Nominations for candidates for Woodrow Wilson Fellowships are now being accepted. University faculty members may now nominate academically qualified senior students.

October 31 is the deadline for nominations, announced Dr. Frank M. Duffey, UNC professor of romance languages and campus representative for the foundation.

Any member of the faculty in any college or university in the U. S. and Canada may nominate a fellowship candidate who shows potential for college teaching. Each fellowship covers a year's tuition and fees at a graduate school of the fellow's choice plus a living alowance. Fellowship winners are announced each spring.

Ten four-year medical scholarships to qualified Negro men are available, it has been announced by National Medical Fellowships Inc. and the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation. Qualifications include scholastic achievement in college, admission to a medical school, U. S. citizenship.

Registration cards and other information can be obtained from pre-medical advisors and from National Medical Scholarships, Inc., 951 E. 58th St., Chicago, Ill. Registration deadline is March 1, 1964.

Graduate Fellowships for training in the social sciences relating to Asia and The Near East, the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, Africa (south of the Sahara) and Latin America are available from the Foreign Area Fellowship Program of the American Council of Learned Societies and the Social Science Research Council.

Qualifications are: U. S. and Canadian citizenship, U. S. residents who give evidence of securing citizenship status, maximum age of 35. Applications are due November 1, 1963. Deadline for applications is Dec. 16. Information and application forms may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Academy of Sciences — National Research Council, 2101 Constitutional Ave., N.W., Washington, D. C.

Around The Campus

By PETE WALES

Parties ran rampant yesterday as UNC students mingled with 1,000 WC girls and assorted N.C. State students to celebrate Consolidated University Day.

Nearly every dorm had some kind of a party with everyone having an open house.

This is the first weekend that all dormitory social rooms have been open this year. They were opened Wednesday but were not in full use until yesterday.

The largest afternoon party was a post-game gathering in the lower quad.

All five dorms, Stacy, Lewis, Graham, Aycock and Everett, shared expenses for refreshments and music came from hi-fi sets in the dorm windows.

Stacy, under President Carl Adams and Vice-President Bill Robinson, took charge of getting the refreshments and setting up the party.

Ruffin organized their own party under President Les Bailey and Social Chairman Greg Davis.

There was a post-game mixer with Jamison Dormitory of Women's College and assorted UNC girls.

At 5 p.m. the fire was stirred up and the cookout began.

Supper was followed by a "Ruffinanny," Ruffin's own version of a Hootenanny. Home-bred folk-singing talent was the fare, and the party broke up about 7:30 so that the couples could attend the IDC dance in Woollen Gym.

Ehringhaus competed with the IDC dance last night with a combo party in the main lounge for the entire campus from 8 to 12.

The Jammers supplied the music and once again WC supplied a number of the girls.

The party was organized by President Dave Rendleman and Vice-President Val McWhorten.

Other dorms having open houses with refreshments and their social chairmen were: Alexander, Jim Wygand; Joyner, John Roney; Mangum, Tom Peterson; Manly, Doug Perian; Parker, Mac Karesh; Teague, Everett Baucom; and Winston, G. C. Petree.

Alexander had the added attraction of their own combo of Bill Carpenter, Doc Fields and Joe Goodman. The group has no name as yet.

In another corner of the campus, Pi Beta Phi had its annual Pledge Dance Friday night.

A cocktail party started things off at 4 p.m. at the Chapel Hill Country Club.

The party had moved to the Carolina Inn where there was a steak dinner and formal dance. Music was by the Jammers.

The main feature of the evening was the presentation of the new pledge class and their escorts just before the dance began at 9 p.m. Bill Dunlap, a Duke medical student, made the formal presentation of the 25 new girls.

Duke Student Gets Break

BARNSTABLE, Mass. (UPI) — Two University of Toledo students have been placed on probation for the theft of President Kennedy's golf clubs and other items during a break-in at the Hyannis Port Golf Club last July.

James B. Mather, 21, and Larry D. Coffin, 20, both of Toledo, Ohio, pleaded guilty this week to charges of breaking, entering and larceny.

Superior Court Judge Eugene A. Hudson placed them on probation for two years. He filed Coffin also pleaded guilty to four other counts of larceny and two of breaking and entering. He was placed on probation on all counts.

Police said the three youths, who had summer jobs in Hyannis, broke into the exclusive golf club's pro shop July 11. They were arrested a few days later.

the case of a third youth similarly charged, former Duke University Student William L. Goodwin, 20, of Durham, N. C.

In Jubilant Dressing Room, A Sweet Smell Of Success

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Nine-One- It seems impossible. But these guys believe they can do it. Bedlam was the name of the Carolina dressing room Saturday afternoon, and confidence was what it was filled with.

"You know who's gonna win the AAC title this year — Carolina," said a happy, sweaty Gene Sigmon.

"I can't wait to play the rest of the season," broke in a slightly jubilant Junior Edoge.

Dave Braine summed up the general feeling with "This is the greatest."

And it was the greatest. Jim Hickey felt it was the team's best performance since that 50-0 Thanksgiving Day massacre of Duke in 1959. A bubbling alumnus pounded Chuck Erickson on the back and said this was the best thing that had happened in Kenan Stadium since Choo Choo Justice and the Tar Heels ran over Texas, 34-7, in the 1948 season opener.

All of the happiness came at the expense of NC State's Wolfpack who had just seen their unblemished record disappear down the drain. They had been soundly thrashed by a better team —a North Carolina team which showed every sign of being the powerhouse of the AAC.

As little boys shook hands with Ken Willard and Gary Black and friends and reporters mingled with half-dressed and fully-satisfied football players in the room below, a quiet Coach Hickey talked with sports writers in a second floor room of Kenan Field House. He talked about the sleeping giant which is now awake—his football team.

"I am very proud of this team. Right after the Maryland game they started thinking about State and how they were going to beat them. They wanted this one more than any we've played since I've been here. They worked hard all week in practice then they went out there this afternoon and played and thought good football.

"State has a strong football team. Their record shows that. But we knew we could beat them. I think it's only fair to say that they missed Wilder (tackle Bert Wilder, ineligible in this game because he had already played three times against Carolina).

Hickey sat in a chair in front of the group and played with his Carolina blue baseball cap as he answered the questions. Once he turned to the blackboard behind him and diagrammed his "56 pass" play which proved a bonanza for the Tar Heels several times during the hot afternoon.

On this play the tight end throws a block on the man in front of him, then rolls out and takes a pass from the quarterback who is himself rolling out to the same side. After faking to his fullback off tackle, Edge and Joe Robinson worked this play to perfection—twice for touchdowns.

"I thought we put a great rush on Rossi," he continued. "He completed a few passes but our men were always there to bring down the receiver.

"Another thing which really pleased me was the way we took the ball there on our own three-yard line in the game and never gave it back to them. In the past we've had to run three plays then punt. But it doesn't seem to bother this team when they're behind or when they have their backs to the wall. They come right out of there.

Hickey also had words of praise for his two quarterbacks, Edge and Black.

"I have equal confidence in both of them. This was Edge's best game so far and Black—didn't he look great on those roll-out runs?"

The big backs, Eddie Kesler and Willard, also drew favorable comment from the little coach, who has already won more games this year than he did all last season.

Max Chapman and Chris Hanburger and Frank Gallagher—you name 'em—they all won verbal trophies. After all, how can you say anything bad about a team which has just crushed a previously undefeated team by a score of 31-10?

And what does Hickey see in the future?

"We've got a long way to go," said "Gentleman Jim." Not as definite as Sigmon—but you can tell he's thinking in that direction.

Duke's Glacken Big Cheese In 35-30 Win Over Clemson

DURHAM, N. C. (UPI) — Sophomore sensation Scotty Glacken tossed four touchdown passes, three to senior end Stan Crisson, to give Duke a 35-30 Atlantic Coast Conference victory over Clemson Saturday.

Glacken, who moved to a starting job when Dave Uible was hurt in the first game of the season, hit Crisson with touchdown passes of 24, 11 and 28 in one of the most free-scoring games in the 10-year history of the series.

Jay Wilkinson, son of Oklahoma Football Coach Bud Wilkinson, caught the fourth Glacken touchdown pass, this one for 28 yards for the first score of the game.

Wilkinson also ran 67 yards on the opening play from scrimmage in the second half to account for another Duke touchdown.

Clemson's Jim Parker and second team quarterback Thomas Ray gave Glacken a run for his money in the passing contest. Parker hit end Mike Troy in the final period for a 37-yard scoring play which brought Clemson within five points of Duke with five minutes to play.

Ray hit end Johnny Case for a 68-yard touchdown toss but the passing of both kept Clemson in the game because Duke's line stalled Clemson's inside drives.

Halfback Mack Matthews scored on runs of 11 and three yards for two more Clemson tallies and Frank Pearce kicked a 34-yard field goal in the second period to account for all of Clemson's scoring.

Clemson staged a final attempt in the last one minute of the game.

Terps Win Thriller; USC, Virginia Draw

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (UPI) —Maryland upset Air Force 21-14 Saturday on a 36-yard touchdown pass from Dick Shiner to flanker Darryl Hill in the last two seconds of play.

The electrifying play, giving the underdog Terps their first victory of the season, climaxed a second-half rally during which Maryland completely outplayed the Falcons, who had jumped off to a 14-0 haltime lead.

The winning points came after Maryland had battled back to a 14-14 tie and then got the ball on halfback Ernie Arizzi's interception of Terry Isaacson's pass on the Terps' 38 with 55 seconds to go. Shiner hit Hill with a perfect pass in the Air Force 28 and three plays later, with the clock running out, rifled one down the middle to Hill again, the speedster catching it on the two and diving over.

Howard Humphries' meaningless conversion was kicked five minutes later after officials cleared the field of Maryland fans.

Shiner and Isaacson waged a brilliant aerial duel with the Falcons' ace dominating the first half and the Terps' quarterback turning the game around in the second half.

CHARLOTTESVILLE (UPI) — South Carolina capitalized on a nullified punt Saturday to battle Virginia to a 10-10 Atlantic Coast Conference tie.

South Carolina quarterback Jack McCathern punted to the Virginia 8 but the play was called back by a holding penalty and on the next play halfback Marty Rosen dashed 34 yards for the tying touchdown.

The two teams exchanged field goals in the first period before Virginia went ahead when halfback John Pincavage plunged over from the 2-yard line.

The Virginia touchdown came shortly after South Carolina got into trouble defending its own territory. Virginia ran out of offensive steam inches from the goal line but South Carolina had to kick out.

Virginia quarterback Tom Hodges directed his team to the two where Pincavage plunged over.

Several games have already been scheduled with Virginia, Baltimore, New Zealand Embassy and Washington Rugby Clubs. The ultimate aim is to establish a ruby club at U.N.C.

All interested report this afternoon at 2 o'clock on the Duke soccer ield, or contact V. Germino (1504 Ruffin St., Durham, 286-8572).

The next game is against Virginia at the Sweet Brier College Fall Festival, November 3.

Two Records Set In Meet

By AL KAPLAN

Sam Hunt of Aycock and Pete Worthen of DKE set new records in the Intramural Track Meet held Wednesday and Thursday.

Hunt shattered the old record in the 100-yard dash with his time of 10.9 seconds. Worthen added 9 feet to the old discus record on a throw of 133-6.

Everett, which led the dorm division at the end of the first day, held on to win the dorm division title. NROTC was second with 25.5 points, two in back of the Rogah.

Aycock took third place on the running of Hunt, who also had a first on the 60-yard dash. Parker finished third and Alexander fourth, with 7 and 6.5 points, respectively.

In the grad division, Law School took three firsts and a total of 29 points to win. A close second was Med School with 25 points and Physics finished third on 23.

Phi Delta Theta won the frat title. Beta with 13 points was second, eight points behind. DKE scored 12 points for a third place finish.

The grad 880 run was the most exciting event of the day. Maurice MacDonald and Larry Henry finished in a dead heat, a rare occurrence in such a long race.

The Dorm 880 was also a good race with Don Boal holding on to win. Ken Kirby of AFROTC was second, Mike Stewart of Alexander third and Jim Hugesschmitt finished fourth.

Bud McLamb of Med School had a good day in the dashes and helped his team move from fourth, at the end first day, to second place. In the 60, McLamb finished first and in the hundred he placed second.

Famed Track Coach Dies

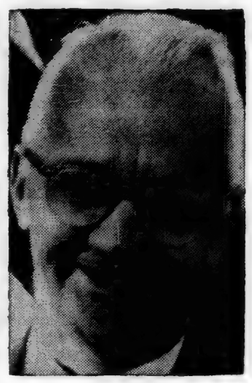
Funeral for Dale Ranson, 61, will be today at 4 p.m. at University Methodist Church. Burial will be in Chapel Hill Memorial Cemetery.

Ranson, a former track coach here, died yesterday morning in Memorial Hospital after prolonged illness.

Survivors include the widow; two daughters, Mrs. Charles Richard Engle, Miss Laura Etta Ranson; one son, Murphey Dale Ranson II, all of Chapel Hill; two sisters, Mrs. Kate Cronue, Huntersville; Miss Nell Ranson, Salisbury; three brothers, Paul Ranson, Durham; Don Ranson, Huntersville; Jack R. Ranson, Spencer; and three grandchildren.



DALE RANSON

Dale Ranson

By LASZLO BIRINYI

Two men moved easily through the crowd. Looking at them you might have thought they were father and son, but you knew they weren't. The younger of the two was Jim Beatty, the other gentleman was Dale Ranson.

Coach Ranson died yesterday and somehow it's only fitting that whenever I think of him this scene comes to mind, for it illustrates not only his coaching ability and the caliber of runners he produced, but also it shows his devotion to his runners.

For the record, let it suffice to say that his teams won 52 championships, 4 of his boys went to the Olympics, and Dale was named to the Helms Hall of Fame.

But the Dale Ranson story is really the story of a man, a man who regularly worked 70 hours a week writing letters, turning out articles, conducting interviews, and doing anything else he could to further interest in track.

Perhaps his love for track and his indefatigable energy are best illustrated by the story of Milaly Igloi, the great Hungarian coach who now coaches Jim Beatty. After the ill-fated Hungarian revolution, Igloi was literally a man without a country, so Dale, in his typical manner, raised the necessary funds to enable Igloi to come to Chapel Hill. In addition, he saw to it that the Hungarian coach was always provided for, often at a considerable expense to himself.

No team ever loved its coach more, for Dale was not just a coach who saw to it that they got their equipment, and got excused from classes. No, not Dale. Last year when I covered cross-country and winter track, he was constantly on my back to get more coverage, more pictures, and longer stories. It wasn't that he wanted or needed publicity; it was just that he felt that his "boys" should be taken care of.

The highest praise I have ever heard about any coach here were the words expressed by a member of the physical education department several weeks ago: "No coach ever loved his teams half as much as Dale Ranson. It was more like a father-son relationship with him and his runners."

I could go on and on with Dale Ranson stories, and so could anyone who knew the gentleman. Perhaps the best known stories are those which tell about his long speeches.

Coach Dale had a great reputation as a talker. I'll never forget the night of Beatty's banquet last fall where Ranson was to give a 4 minute speech.. I, and everyone who knew him, enjoyed a great big laugh and thought to ourselves, "It takes four minutes for Dale to clear his throat." But the last laugh was on us as the white-haired mentor talked for less than 3 minutes.

I'll miss him and so will everyone who knew him. All of us who knew him will never forget his slow, southern drawl, his fantastic memory for sports events, his ability to get along with everyone and above all, his sincerity and Christian outlook.

Dale Ranson is dead. Standing down at the Navy Field yesterday and all this fall, is not like it has been in past years, there's something missing. The short, white-haired gentleman carrying a stop watch in one hand enough correspondence to keep four secretaries busy in the other no longer holds court by the stone wall.

Dale Ranson is dead. The world and the University which he loved are the worse for it.

Program Planned For Candidates

The Honor System Commission will conduct a training program for candidates for the Men's and Women's Councils for the next three days.

With the exception of members of the Honor Councils who plan to run for re-election, all candidates wishing their name to appear on the ballot must participate in the training program, Arthur Hays, Election Board Chairman said yesterday. Upon completion of the program they must either take and pass an examination given by the Honor System Commission or they must submit a petition signed by themselves and 25 other students living in the judicial district in which they plan to run, Hays said.

Incumbent Honor Councilmen do not have to participate in the training program but they must either take and pass the examination or submit a petition.

Applications for the training program must be turned in by 4 p.m. today at the Student Government office in GM. Petitions must be submitted by 10 p.m. Thursday at the Student Government Office or to Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hays in 308 Ruffin. Petitions should state the district seat which the petitioner seeks.

Three compulsory meetings are planned for the training program. The meetings will take place at 6:45 p.m. in 203 Alumni Building on tonight, Wednesday, and Thursday nights.

At the first meeting Jaene Yeager, chairman of the Honor System Commission, will outline the study program. Bob Spearman, vice-president of the student body, will explain the purpose and philosophy of the system. Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs will explain the function and mechanics of the Attorney General's Office.

The second meeting will feature Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council and Carolyn Pinion, chairman of the Women's Council who will speak separately to their respective candidates to explain the function and responsibility of their councils.

A test will be given to the

Playmakers Open Tonight At Cut Price

Tonight is Student Night at the Playmakers Theatre as the Carolina Playmakers present its opening night performance of of the musical comedy "Little Mary Sunshine" at 8:30 p.m.

The play is scheduled to open to the general public Wednesday and continue through Sunday night.

With costumes designed by William Hanna, a UNC graduate student, and settings designed by Tommy Rezzuto, "Little Mary Sunshine" creates a scenic aumosphere of the operettas it satirizes which is just as appropriate as the performances of the cast.

The cast includes several UNC students, including Randolph Umberger of Burlington, Janice Moore of Beaufort, S. C., Granam Pollock of Gatesville, and Robert Ivey of Durham.

Ticket sales for the special opening performance tonight are reported brisk and a few of one dollar student tickets are available today in Y-Court, Lenoir Hall, and at the Graham Memorial Information Desk. Tickets will also be available at the door tonight prior to curtain time, if any tickets remain.

HOUSING EXPERT

L. B. Gelpke, Secretary-General of the International Federation of Housing and Planning in Amsterdam, Holland, will speak Tuesday at 4 p.m. in 400 Gardner Hall.

Gelpke, a former official with the Netherlands National Planning Office, will speak on national planning in Holland with emphasis on the western Holland metropolitan planning area.

Craige dormitory will soon receive the pool tables that they have been working for since early last year, according to Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial.

"The tables will be here within six weeks, hopefully," Henry said.

The three new tables will be placed in one of the two study rooms in the basement of Craige. They will be operated and maintained by Graham Memorial.

The playing fee will be 75 cents per hour, the same as in the basement of Graham Memorial.

The move to obtain the pool tables for Craige was initiated last fall by Gary Grosboll and Larry McDevitt.

Henry and the GM Board of Directors showed interest from the start and agreed to install the tables last spring with the understanding that the profits made from the tables would go towards paying for them.

"We agreed to the proposal because we realize that GM is quite remote to these people," Henry said.

However, it was learned that the provisions under which Craige was built stated that all profits from revenue-producing equipment in the dorm had to be used to pay off the bond on the building.

This fall the Board of Directors reconsidered the issue and decided that the tables would be installed and operated at no profit.

When a new student union is built nearer to Craige, the tables will be transferred to that building.

Residents of Ruffin dormitory were surprised and infuriated when they awoke last week to find a four by seven foot banner on the side of the dorm reading: "Ruffin says ROGAH house best dorm on campus."

The banner was hung on the building from a step ladder at 3 a.m. by men from Everett "ROGAH house" dormitory, according to Paul Dickson, Everett president.

At 9:30 a.m. a Ruffin man climbed the ivy to pull it down.

Everett beat out Ruffin last year for the best dorm on campus award, and the rivalry is still strong.

The local chapter of Tau Epsilon Phi has received the fraternity's National Publications Award for outstanding articles in the fraternity's national magazine, "The Plume."

The award was made at the TEP national convention Aug. 23 through 25.

A local TEP alumnus, E. J. Evans, was elected international president of the fraternity at the convention. Evans is a past mayor of Durham.

World News Briefs

Red China's Bid For UN Seat Rejected

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. — (UPI)—For the 14th consecutive year, the General Assembly Monday rejected Communist China's bid for a United Nations seat. The majority in favor of retaining the Nationalist Chinese was larger than in 1962.

By a 57-41 vote, with 12 abstentions, the assembly rejected a resolution by Albania and Cambodia to expel Chiang Kai-Shek's Formosa government and seat the representatives of Red China.

Last year's vote on a similar motion, sponsored by the Soviet Union, was defeated, 56-42.

Senate Approves College Building Aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Monday passed, 60-19, a bill that would authorize 1.9 billion dollars in construction aid for colleges. It would allow the courts to decide whether any of the money goes to church-controlled institutions.

The House last month approved a $1.2 billion "brick and mortar" aid program without attaching any such restriction to the grants or loans that could be made to church-related colleges.

The dispute over whether there shall be judicial review of the constitutionality of such aid is expected to delay for many weeks the drafting of a final compromise measure by senate-house negotiators.

Viet Govt. Smashes Conspiracy

SAIGON, South Viet Nam — (UPI) — The government said Monday it has smashed another Communist - masterminded conspiracy by students aimed at overthrowing the regime of President Ngo Dinh Diem.

The government-controlled Viet Nam press agency said the plot was nipped by the arrest of Phan Xuan Hoang, 20, identified as the leader of a group called "The League of Free High School and University Students in Viet Nam."

Incident Threatens Negotiations

RABAT, Morocco (UPI) — An international incident touched off by capture of five Egyptians aboard an Algerian helicopter deep inside Morocco threatened Monday to block mediation of the Algerian-Moroccan border dispute by various African and Arab countries.

Moroccan officials said capture of the Egyptians was "proof" the United Arab Republic is actively supporting Algeria in its border conflict. They said the five prisoners were Egyptian army officers although all wore civilian clothes.

Almost Quiet Weekend Leaves One Injured

Campus Police Chief A. J. Beaumont said that the weekend here was unexpectedly quiet. "We were prepared for anything," Beaumont said, "but we weren't called on and that suited us just fine." However, Chapel Hill Police did report several accidents:

A 21-year old University student received lacerations and abrasions early Monday morning when he was struck by a car, knocked in the air and then grazed by another car. The accident occurred near the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house at 12:20 a.m. Monday.

A spokesman at Memorial Hospital said Monday afternoon that Harold Charles Woerner Jr. was "all right." The spokesman declined further comment on Woerner's condition.

According to Chapel Hill police chief W. D. Blake, Woerner was hit by a car driven by Ford Rowan, 20, of Metairie, La. Woerner was knocked in the air by Rowan's car, Blake said, and was then struck again by the side of a car driven by Phillip Wade Wooten.

Rowan's car was traveling north on Columbia Street, Blake said and Wooten's was traveling south.

Blake said that Rowan was charged with failure to yield to a pedestrian. He will be tried in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Nov. 1.

Daring to be different sometimes just doesn't pay.

Just ask Theodore Turner (Bubba) Fountain, who was charged late Sunday night with careless and reckless driving, driving without car lights on and driving on a sidewalk.

Seems like Fountain, according to Chapel Hill police, was driving along near the University Baptist Church when he suddenly decided that it was too crowded on the main drag and that there is more room on the sidewalk.

So, the police report continues, Fountain wheels his car onto the sidewalk. Sgt. C. L. Edmonds, who was an eyewitness to the whole affair, said the matter was brought to his attention when scream as Fountain pulled his he heard two women and a child car on the sidewalk.

According to Edmonds' report, Fountain drove on the sidewalk, passed the Beta house and up to big fraternity court where he turned his lights off, pulled off the road and then pulled back in the court itself.

Fountain then jumped out of his car and started running, police said. He was apprehended shortly afterward. Fountain was released on $200 bound. His trial will be held this Friday in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

UP, SP Kick Off Fall Politics

UNC's two political parties will meet tonight to select candidates for class offices.

The parties will vote for president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman of the freshman, sophomore and junior classes.

Neal Jackson, Student Party chairman, and Mike Chanin, University Party chairman, refused to discuss possible candidates, although there was speculation that there would be a record number of entries in the annual derby.

The Student Party will meet in Howell Hall at 7:30 p.m. and the University Party will meet in Carroll Hall at 6:45 p.m.

Nominating procedures in the two parties vary greatly. The University Party employs the "delegation" system, in which living units vote as a unit with one vote for each of the first five delegates and an additional vote for each 10 other delegates.

The Student Party chooses delegates by individual votes.

Speeches will be limited in each party, the UP allowing two minutes for both nominator and nominee and the SP one and three minutes respectively.

Both party chairmen urged members to attend the conventions.

Lawler Says Committee Is 'Interesting'

Mike Lawler, student body president, said yesterday that he felt his participation in the meetings of the committee to select a new chancellor had been "very interesting and informative."

Lawler was invited by the committee to sit in as an observer and represent the student body in the initial proceedings of the committee.

"Many students have expressed an interest in the proceedings and their concern for the selection process," Lawler said.

"In fact, I have had a number of students ask me if I would be able to continue in this observer status. I certainly must agree with them that the students have a vital interest in the committee's activities."

"I am very appreciative of the opportunity to express the interests of the student community in this observer capacity," he continued.

Lawler concluded that "the character of our proceedings has of necessity made these meetings Executive Sessions, and the discussions must be confidential."

YRC MEETS

Rep. William Osteen, Guilford County Republican and House minority leader of the General Assembly, will address the Young Republicans Club tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

The club will also elect six delegates to attend the North-Carolina College oung Republicans Convention in Greensboro Friday and Saturday.

The weekend meeting will be a "workshop Convention", according to YRC President Charles Hooks.

"It will provide students with practical training in campaign work and precinct work. A history of the party will also be included."

NAACP MEETING

The campus chapter of the NAACP will meet Tuesday to report on a conference with UNC Trustees over segregated facilities at Memorial Hospital.

A discussion of future plans with reference to the hospital is planned for the 8 p.m. meeting.

Also scheduled is a report of a meeting with Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey regarding the use of student government funds to finance off-campus functions at segregated premises.

The meeting will be held in 205 Alumni Building.

Wallace: 'Kennedy Must Go'

By JOEL BULKLEY

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama Sunday night slammed the federal government for "usurpation of authority" and forecast a smashing defeat for President Kennedy in the 1964 election in an address at Duke University.

The fiery segregationist governor claimed federal intervention in internal state problems was both illegal and unnecessary. He said he expected the next election to bring a return of a conservative constitutional government which would emphasize liberty, freedom and property rights. He added "millions of Americans will join together to put the federal government on the right track."

He said he believed "President Kennedy will get the shock of his life in any primary he enters next year and I believe he will be defeated." He added that, "Kennedy will not carry a single southern state."

Gov. Wallace said he felt sure President Kennedy would have his "hooks hung on civil rights next November" and added that if the proposed Public Accommodations section of the President's Civil Rights Bill is enacted "we will have a nation of lawbreakers."

His speech, which for the most part was received with mixed reactions from the crowd, drew overwhelming 'boos' from the audience when he claimed "there is more racial peace in Alabama than there is in North Carolina at this moment."

He indicated that he thought the "left-wing press" was responsible for distorting racial news to make his state look especially bad.

Gov. Wallace accused the present Supreme Court of "working strongly to enforce the 14th Amendment to the Constitution while the 10th Amendment, is really forgotten."

He noted that the proposed Court of the Nation, which was passed in Alabama and defeated in North Carolina, couldn't be worse than the one we have now.

In a question and answer period, Gov. Wallace said "there is no such thing as federal aid to a state" and elaborated saying "the federal government has never made a dime. They tax you and me and carry all the money to Washington and then they say they'll give it back to us if we do what they say."

A group of about 150 students from North Carolina College in Durham provided an anti-climactic conclusion to the program by singing "We Shall Overcome," as the crowd filed out.

One minor incident was reported at the end of the program when a student carrying a Confederate flag was jostled by another student. The incident, however, was quickly broken up.

An estimated 1,200 students jammed Page Auditorium at Duke to hear Wallace deliver a 50-minute speech similar to the one he gave earlier in the day at a Durham County Citizens Council rally.

The National Student Association (NSA) at Duke sponsored his address.

'Bomb The Ban'

The interim council of the N. C. State Student Legislature unanimously adopted a resolution Sunday in favor of repeal or amendment of the controversial speaker ban law passed by the General Assembly.

Wake Forest senior Bill Constangy of Atlanta, Gr., president of the student legislature, introduced the resolution at the council's annual fall meeting at Wake Forest College.

The resolution also urges ". . . student governments of the colleges and universities of North Carolina to cooperate in informing the members of their respective student bodies and the citizens of North Carolina of the seriousness of the ban and its meaning for North Carolina higher education."

Forty-seven delegates representing 19 college and university student governments attended the session. There are approximately 30 student governments affiliated with the North Carolina State Student Legislature.

The delegates set March 12-14 as the date for the next state student legislature in Raleigh at the Capitol. At this session, schools prepare and enact bills, following regular state Legislature procedure.

The Di-Phi Publishes A Weakly Paper

The most eminent Di-Phi Senate, which really represents the University student body as no other organization can since it has a total of 13 active members, has gone into the newspaper publishing business.

Yesterday their first paper hit the streets. It also hit many sidewalks, gutters, drain pipes, wastebaskets and fireplaces. The name of this venture is "A Voice In The Wilderness," and we think it is most aptly named, since the Di-Phi has been in the wilderness for the past fifty years. As a matter of fact, the Di-Phi and reality haven't been on speaking terms in twice that long.

The Di-Phi claims parenthood of the Daily Tar Heel, and their claim is legitimate, but they now bemoan the fact. What they actually bemoan is the fact that the DTH hasn't remained in the 19th Century with the Senate.

Anyway, we're glad to have the new paper around, since it comes on Monday when we don't print, and Monday is always good for comic relief.

Congress: Grave Danger To The Country?

By Walter Lippman

In The Durham Herald

THIS IS ONE of those moments when there is reason to wonder whether the congressional system as it nows operates is not a grave danger to the Republic. There are two great measures before Congress, and in all probability Senator Goldwater was right when he said the other day that "the President has to make up his mind whether he wants the civil rights bill or a tax cut, because he cannot get them both."

This situation is a reflection on the Congress. For the truth is that the two measures are not competitive, but complementary. If the tax bill can do what its advocates believe it can do, that is to say stimulate business and reduce unemployment, it will reduce some of the pressures which are making it so difficult for the leaders of the Negro people to continue to be moderate, non-violent, patient and reasonable.

The civil rights bill promises the Negroes the chance to vote, better schooling and an end to humiliation in public accommodations. But the tax bill promises the Negroes jobs. They need them. The rate of unemployment among Negroes is a little more than twice as great as among the whites.

THE NEGROES, THEREFORE, have an acute interest in a measure that promises to overcome the sluggishness of the economy. Today, for example, the Negro rate of unemployment is over 11 per cent; during 1951-53, when the economy was booming, Negro unemployment was less than 5 per cent.

Anyone who is serious about dealing with the Negroes' grievances must, therefore, be distressed to find that he has to choose between the tax bill and the civil rights bill. A competent Congress, which was equal to the realities of our time, would see that the two measures are closely related and would act on them accordingly.

But there is something more in all this than the lack of serious and realistic understanding of what is at stake. This Congress has gone further than any other within memory to replace debate and decision by delay and stultification. The President first announced his plan to seek a reduction of taxes in order to stimulate the economy on Aug. 13, 1962. That was over a year ago. A tax bill passed the House last week, but the Senate has not even begun to hold hearings.

THE REASON FOR this delay is that there is a considerable body of strong opinion in Congress and in the country which is opposed to any tax cut until spending is cut down. Though I happen to think that it is impossible to balance the budget when the economy is running so much below capacity, and that an attempt to deflate now would produce a recession, the views of the opposition to a tax cut are honorable and deserving of respect. The issue, which is real, should be debated for as long as it takes to debate it thoroughly. But there should be a roll call and a decision at the end of the debate.

I do not see how a modern government can be conducted successfully if on a major issue, such as fiscal policy, the Executive is refused for more than a year a debate and a decision. If Congress agrees with Senator Byrd, it ought to debate and then defeat the tax bill. What is becoming alarming and intolerable is a Congress which will smother and stultify rather than debate and decide.

This is a furtive and degenerate form of the filibuster. In my view, the open filibuster — that is to say, protracted debate — can normally be justified and accepted as a way of mitigating the absolutism of numerical majorities. If I were a senator, I would be very loathe to vote for cloture. But I would vote for it now, because the times are not normal and a critical emergency exists.

THE NATIONAL SECURITY requires, I believe, the passage in the near future of a civil rights bill which constitutes a declaration by the federal government that all the remaining badges of slavery and servitude are outlawed.

Party Chairmen View Congress

Mike Chanin

Chairman Of The University Party

My first impressions of the 16th National Student Congress were of mass confusion and, at the same time, great organization. Upon arriving at the Congress, its immense size becomes all too clear and an individual begins to feel rather unimportant and just a part of a great organized machine that only the national officers and those "professional" Congress delegates really understand and control.

However, during the first three days of seminars, I began to become acquainted with some of my fellow students there and soon began to feel at least somewhat at ease with the procedure at the Congress. The individual — as much as he is willing — can make his own place at the Congress.

My seminar dealt with campus political parties and was, on the whole, rather disappointing to me. The only real conclusions reached were that UNC's campus political parties are more campus oriented than those at the other campuses represented in the seminar. The point that was made quite clear was that a political party which deals with social action in the community around the campus and with national concerns is much more akin to a social action group like the Student Peace Union in Chapel Hill than to a campus political party like the University Party or the Student Party.

The next phase of my role in the Congress was in the committee on Student Welfare. Out of this committee and committees like it would come the resolutions to be considered by the Congress as a whole. Here again theimpression is one of mass confusion. No specific legislation is assigned to a committee or a sub-committee and I wondered for a time if our subcommittee would get anything done. The national officers and staff had some specific legislation that they wanted written and what these resolutions were became obvious as the committees met.

Our sub-committee was very fortunate in that very little programming or policy within our area of student on-campus economic welfare had been acted upon previously by NSA. We were in a position of being able to write programs and a policy declaration in an area where NSA has been very justly criticized for inaction.

My particular desire was to write a basic policy declaration on student welfare for the NSA. I was amazed that an organization which claims to be a national union of students and which should be a national voice for students had no statement of policy on student welfare although it has plenty to say about integration, foreign affairs, and the House Un-American Activities Committee. So my purpose in writing this policy declaration was to give NSA a policy that it by all means should have had.

The declaration said in effect that a student should be given as great a chance as possible for an adequate education good jobs while studying, and good jobs while studing, and fair federal laws. Other points of the declaration enumerated NSA concern for medical facilities, for students to have a role in the planning concerning their economic welfare.

Our committe also turned out resolutions and programs concerned with higher education for the deaf, the National Service Corps, cultural affairs, and someprograms dealing with specific student economic problems. The committee and sub-committee does give each person a feeling of personally participating in the Congress and makes each person a type of expert in at least one area.

The delegate's last role is on the Congress floor — or, as it is called, the plenary sessions. Here my greatest concerns were for the program for deaf education and, of course, for the basic policy declaration on student welfare. Both these pieces of legislation passed unanimously.

The first because of the great amount of admiration developed for the two deaf delegates from Gauledet College was the first piece of legislation passed by the Congress. This program will lead hopefully to an extensive program for handicapped students to be acted on next year.

The second, the declaration on student welfare, passed unanimously not because of a great interest in the bill, but because the delegates were more anxious to discuss foreign policy or integration than student welfare.

In introducing the declaration I said, "NSA will become a true union of students when it returns a balance of its program to the campus." This policy declaration I seriously feel will provide a start in that direction.

One national officer told me that the reason for NSA's greater concern with national and international issues is that it is much more exciting to deal with them than with on-campus issues. This might not be true, but I maintained that NSA will not be effective until some of its leaders are willing to do some of the less exciting but more direct work — that is, the programming that directly touches on the campus. I was greatly encouraged when Joel Sharkey, while running for a National Affairs Vice-President, spoke out for taking out action on the student welfare policy declaration. He won and I hope that this next year will see him live up to his words.

The other legislation dealt with in the plenary was, as I said before, very exciting to deal with and very educational through the discussions on them. It was especially interesting to observe the conservative — liberal politics on the floor and I feel that the educational aspects of the presentation of the two opposing viewpoints was the most important value that could be gained at the Congress.

In conclusion, I would say that the NSA is definitely moving in the direction of an on-campus concern balancing a national and international concern. However, to me, the greatest value of the Congress is its educational role through the discussion of legislation, the informal conversations, and the meeting of students from all parts of this country and abroad. I feel that this last aspect of the Congress — its educational role — does alone justify the attendance of North Carolina at the Congress and our membership in the organization.

Neal Jackson

Chairman of the Student Party

It is hard for one delegate to accurately evaluate the entire congress. If the single delegate could have attended all the seminars, all the committees and subcommittees, and all the plenary, then he might be able to give a more accurate account of the congress in general. However, no single individual could attend all these functions since he was assigned to one of each and one only. This is why I shall have to confine my remarks to those functions of the congress in which I was directly involved.

The particular seminar in which I participated was that one entitled Campus PoPlitical Parties. Our group consisted of some twenty students, and was fairly well representative of the geographical segments of the country. Mr. Mike Chanin was also in the seminar, and we found that the campus political party system on our own campus is rather different from that on the other campuses represented. In fact, our concept of the role of the campus political party was very different from that of these other representatives. These other representatives had had experience with such well known campus political parties as Polit, Voice, and others not as well known.

The one overriding difference in our concepts of campus political parties was our attitude toward the electoral process. These people from Voice, Polit, etc., viewed the role of a campus political party as being that of a fermenter of social change OUTSIDE the university community. They seemed to have very little interest in putting the most capable people up for governmental offices. Their main function, it seemed, was to organize liberal thought into an active, mobile social force.

Another striking difference was the general naivite of these students to the political facts of life. They did not perceive the role of student governments as that of mature people who worked through respectable channels to obtain benefits for the general student populace. They conceived of the student community only as something that they could belong to while they were being dynamic social reformers. I found this a little strange in the light of the significant gains in student welfare obtained by our own student government. Yet these students were rather oblivious of the problems within their own community of students.

To summarize the seminar, I think that it was interesting and informative and there was a general desire to grasp the concepts which were being espoused. The leader of the seminar was somewhat swamped by the dialogue which broke forth as soon as we attempted to define our individual ideas of the role of campus political parties. This left us without the leadership which we needed and there was too much debate and not enough discussion. However, I feel that this was the fault of the leader and was not due to any inherent faults in the seminar structure. Nonetheless, I feel that all those participants who were in this seminar went home considerably wiser with relation to the differing concepts of the student's role in modern society.

Personally, the seminar was the most worthwhile part of the congress. However, since each representative was allowed to attend only one seminar on only one topic, I did not learn as much as I would have liked to concerning the whole of a student government's activities. In the future, I think that it would be a good idea to have the seminars occupying a greater part of the congress' time, and that representatives be allowed to attend more than one seminar during the congress.

The subcommittees and committees were both disappointing to me. The attitude of certain members of the subcommittees which I had contact with, seemed to be that presently codified legislation had to be changed, regardless of what it had said before. This led to debates that were often rather couched in trivia and definitely petty, and many of the members of the subcommittee quickly lost interest in the proceedings in which they had no direct personal interest. However, one also must add that the subcommittee is where the hard, unglorious work is done and this always tends to disenchant people.

The full committee, though, was a little bit more active since it served as a priorizing body and was allowed by the congress rules to pass out only a certain number of bills. Thus, each faction of each subcommittee attempted to have his pet legislation among those which received a high priority and were passed out. This resulted in more action but often the debate became somewhat petty here also.

Here, in order to explain what I thought was wrong with the committees and subcommittees, I must attempt to describe the congress as a whole, in so far as possible.

The general plenary of the congress was interesting, but I found it often bogged down in rather dilatory parliamentary procedure. Naturally, this tended to dampen enthusiasm within the body. In fact, I sometimes doubted whether the delegates had listened well enough to the debate to even vote on the question intelligently. The debate was not as good as that which I have heard in other bodies, but I feel that this may have been due to the general lack of preparation on the pertinent subject matter by the delegates.

However, the international affairs debate was very interesting with the participants very well versed and articulte in their views. This is probably due to the fact that these participants tended to be specialists within the international field, and they had already become quite knowledgeable about the issues involved. In fact, I began to look forward to each of the international resolutions as they came up on the calendar of legislation, because I was sure that there would be interesting debate forthcoming.

In summary, I thought the congress was a most enlightening experience and that I, personally, benefitted a great deal from it. However, the most important part of the question remains, i.e. what will my campus benefit from my presence at the congress? In answering this, I should point out the many program mandates that were passed by the congress. Most of these will benefit the member schools directly. Although each individual student on this campus may not feel the effects of these programs immediately, he will feel them in the near future. New programs dealing with book co-operatives, foreign and domestic exchange programs, and student welfare are about to be initiated by the national staff and soon we will be able to partake in them ourselves.

In closing this report, I should make one note. I have criticized the congress a bit more than it deserves, but I must point out that to list all the points which I considered good about the congress would require reams of paper. But there are many very fine and democratic values apparent to me in the congress, and I am rather proud to say that my school is broad-minded enough to belong to NSA.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Not Resistant

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Student thinking at the University of South Carolina is as varied and as uniform as thinking at the University of North Carolina. If Dennis Myers and his editorial writing indicate one aspect of student opinion at South Carolina, then certainly the campus religious organizations and their long-range activity to promote better race relations are representative of another. Also, I remind you of Gamecock Editor Joan Wolcott's forthright position during last Fall's events at Ole Miss, and of Editor Jo Ann Coker's policies to create a sensible and communicative climate during the proceedings which culminated in the University's integration this semester. I'm sure there is no need to remind you of the orderliness with which the registration of the Negro students was carried out, except to report that since then there has been no incident.

The University of South Carolina in its rapid development is sensitive to change, but not resistant to it.

Clarification

Editors, The Tar Heel:

In my talk to the Student Party, I neither slammed nor blasted the University Party. While the quotations attributed to me in the DTH article were for the most part accurate, there were important and unfortunate omissions. My references to the University Party were quoted entirely out of the order in which I listed them, and contrary to the impression which I intended to convey — and which I am told I succeeded in conveying—to those present.

What I said was this: "I do not want you to misunderstand me. Not all the members of the SP can be described as partisans of discontent. Furthermore, not all partisans of discontent are in the SP. The fact is that some of them work in non-political organizations such as the Y, and some of them choose to work through the University Party. In fact, the present Chairman and the immediate past Chairman of the UP are members of their party precisely because they wish to see it become more of a force which attempts to remedy the causes of discontent on the UNC campus. The present Vice-President of the Student Body, Bob Spearman, is one of the foremost partisans of discontent I have ever known, eloquently articulate in his views and dedicated in his beliefs.

That may be heresy for me to say here, but I do not wish to be less than frank with you. The three of them, and others who agree with their views, are currently working to infuse in the UP more concern with the matters causing discontent. Although I wish them well in their mission, I do not believe that they will succeed because the basic constituency of the University Party is the least discontented element on the campus."

I do not wish to belabor a point; my desire is only to set the record straight.

Joel Fleishman

Picking Up

Editor, The Tar Heel,

Regarding Mr. Paul McQuade's letter concerning littering on campus:

The trouble lies not with the maintenance department but with the student body. The maintenance department is so overworked by "picking up" after childish students that a 24-hour work day would still leave the campus resembling an expensive pig sty. Students should make the small effort to walk the necessary ten feet or so to place trash in the proper receptacles which are conveniently placed around campus.

PORTRAIT OF SIR WALTER RALEIGH—This portrait of the famous colonizer now hangs in the Raleigh rooms of the University of North Carolina Library's North Carolina Collection. The portrait is believed to be the one which has not been seen since the early 19th century at the time when the Duchess of Dorset owned the portrait.

Welcome Home

Has the lost "Dutchess of Dorset" portrait of Sir Walter Raleigh been found?

Opinion at the North Carolina Collection of the University of North Carolina Library is that the portrait of the famed colonizer, navigator, courtier and historian of the 16th century may be the famous Duchess of Dorset portrait which has not been seen since the early 19th century at the time when the Duchess owned it, according to William S. Powell, head of the collection.

The Raleigh portrait arrived at UNC by coincidence. A visiting Australian woman, Miss M. Thomson, saw the Raleigh rooms in the North Carolina Collection—rooms which are named after the famous colonist—and she was reminded of a portrait she had seen of Raleigh housed in a New York City art gallery. The picture was located and acquired for the N. C. Collection and it was stated by the gallery "with virtual certainty that this is the lost Duchess of Dorset 'Raleigh' and in our opinion its value is now at least three times greater than the price we have agreed."

The artisti of the portrait is unknown. The portrait was purchased with money of the John Sprunt Hill endowment of the North Carolina Collection. The price of the portrait was $3,500.

The portrait has just been hung in the Raleigh rooms in observance of the Carolina Charter Tercentenary Celebration during October and will remain permanently on display.

The Raleigh portrait is only one of the attractions the UNC Library is featuring as a celebration of the Charter Tercentary. Ten exhibition cases on the main floor of the library are filled with samples of maps, coats of arms, book leafs, and bookplates all dating from the time of the Lords Proprietors or thereabouts. The exhibit, arranged by Powell, is open to the public and is accompanied by notes explaining the historical significance of the displayed items.

State-Duke Big One

North Carolina football fans will have one eye on Columbia, S. C., and the other on Raleigh this Saturday as the ACC football race heads into the home stretch.

The top two contenders for the crown at the present are UNC and Duke, and both will be on the road this weekend. The Tar Heels travel south for a meeting with South Carolina, while Duke visits N. C. State in the most important ACC contest this week.

For the Wolfpack a victory over Duke is a "must" if they expect to stay in the race. If the Blue Devils win this one, a 6-1 conference mark will be almost mandatory to finish first, as Duke, already 4-0, will have only Wake Forest left on its conference slate before the big game with UNC.

Carolina will of course be cheering for the Wolfpack. A Duke loss would take some of the pressure off the Heels, who have a meeting with always-rough Clemson sandwiched in between the games with USC and Duke.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

ONE OF THE great ones passed away yesterday, and the effects of a lengthy illness ended an era in UNC track which goes back some 53 years.

I didn't really know Dale anson too well, but what I did find out from his interviews, telephone calls, etc. was enough of the man to impress me. ....

An inductee of the Helms Track and Field Hall of Fame two years ago, Coach Ranson was 61 years old when he passed early Monday morning. In his 38 years as a coach, he was associated with 52 championship teams and countless individual standouts.

Four of his students were Olympic performers. They are Harry Williamson, Chuck Simmons, Bill Albans and Jim Beatty.

It seemed only proper that Beatty, the beloved coach's favorite pupil and America's greatest miler, was at Ranson's bedside just before death came. The only enemy Coach Dale ever had in his life was the incurable cancer which took it. May he rest in peace.

JIMMY ROSSI got up off the seat of his pants with about ninety seconds left in the third quarter Saturday and decided it's much easier to pass a football standing up.

Rossi, for four weeks and four wins, had been the Atlantic Coast Conference's number one star. He came to Chapel Hill with a total offense accumulation of 408 yards, 369 of them coming through the air on 30 of 49 passes.

But all this was done upright on two feet. Prone, it's a bit harder. In all fairness, the NC State quarterback did go 11 for 17 for 80 yards, but they were not damaging. And, the efforts of Gene Sigmon, Chris Hanburger, Bob Lacey and others in rushing, harassing and many times simply creaming Rossi showed much stronger in the final statistics than the 80 yards.

Looking at this and the 26 feeble yards the Wolfpack gained on the ground, you can't find too much fault with the Carolina defense. But they still must correct a flagrant mistake.

Their defense of each other when trying to grab Jim Hickey after these ballgames is all wrong. Guys, when you rush him, you go gently, two at a time, the first two taking him up on the shoulders, the next two supporting him, the rest keeping him up there to midfield. For the past two weeks, you've been surrounding him with massses, pushing and fighting and getting mostly nowhere.

Keep it up, and you'll murder the man before we get to Georgia. But then, practice in the art has been a long time coming.

THE LINE PLAY, where State was supposed to win this game, was no contest. The Pack, true, has one of the best walls in the ACC. But UNC has two of them, and they just wore down the opposition much of the sultry, 80-degree afternoon.

Beside having two lines of almost equal ability, it now turns out that UNC has two very good quarterbacks.

Junior Edge had probably his best game of the year, and Gary Black, well Gary Black looks more and more like Roger Staubach every game.

Edge threw two TD passes (for 22 and five yards) to Joe Robinson, and a third could have easily gone for another touchdown. It was a 26-yarder which carried to the State six and set up Ken Willard's third-quarter score.

Actually, as Hickey explained later, it was Willard who set up the particular play which was the "56 Pass" pattern on all three passes. Big Ken's rushes into the line (19 for 91 yards) forced the Pack to send both a linebacker and a defensive halfback up to meet him.

As they came, Robinson (the tight end) brush-blocked the defensive tackle and cut right on a short pattern. Bob Lacey, meanwhile, went deep from split end, taking two men with him. Edge rolled for a run or pass, and he hit Robinson all three times.

That Black scrambles like Staubach is fact; that he is as effective at it still remains to be seen. But the kid did get 103 yards through the air (six for 11 —one TD) and 76 more running. That's 179 yards playing about half the time.

Out of Carolina's mid-season 4-1 has come Black's record of 28 completions for 48 attempts and 315 yards. That's close to 60 per cent, baby, and he's also got 146 yards on the ground. Even Hickey didn't know he had that kind of material sitting on his bench.

UNC now has taken a commanding spot in the ACC race. If NC State can knock off Duke next week, and the Tar Heels win at South Carolina, it'll look even better.

But, past USC, there is a two-week layoff from ACC action against Clemson. It will be filled by two of college football's glamour boy passers (Georgia's Larry Rakestraw and Miami's George Mira) who should, along with Carolina's awakened giant, draw plenty to Kenan Stadium.

It is notable to mention here the Georgia-Miami game (31-14 Georgia) of last Friday night. Rakestraw threw 38 passes (26 hits) for 405 yards; Mira threw 44 passes (25 hits) most of which, as usual, were dropped. That's the kind of thing that pads university bank accunts. And Vernon Crook must be going around smiling these days.

Publicists Are Candid—At Times

COLLEGE SPORTS PUBLICISTS are a funny breed. I don't know whether they're supposed to, but you don't see them expressing vocally (in private) the greatness of their teams too often. For newspaper, TV-radio publications, yes. But, private conversation, not too often.

In the press box Saturday, Frank Weedon (NCS publicist) and Bob Quincy (UNC counterpart) showed just how much they bleed for their schools.

When Tony Koszarsky ran 950 yards with that intercepted pass before halftime, Weedon jumped and hollored the whole way, screaming TONY! TONY! at thetop of his lungs. His team had just tied, 10-all.

Later (in the fourth quarter), even though Carolina had locked it 31-10, Quincy had his turn.

Rossi, back to pass on second and 17 (UNC's Frank Gallagher had just dumped him), was again creamed by John Atherton who kept plugging away, keeping Rossi on his feet and forcing him 20 yards back down the field.

But Carolina was penalized by a personal foul, nullifying the play and the Wolfpack loss. With this, Quincy, who wanted no blood wasted, scowled, turned from the scene and in no uncertain terms cast sincere aspersions on the referee's parentage and dining habits.

Ah, such is the life of the press box.

Anybody Got A Spare End??

ATLANTA (UPI) — Georgia Tech's once-vaunted end corps was reduced to tatters Monday when Ted Davis, one of its two stars, was dropped from the squad for kicking an Auburn player in Saturday's football game.

The other end, Billy Martin, suffered a knee injury two weeks ago against Louisiana State and is not expected back in the lineup before the Duke game two weeks hence.

Two reserve ends, Steve Copeland and Dave Sewell, are out indefinitely with injuries and two others, Frank Sexton and Dave Austin, are on the doubtful list for Saturday's game at Tulane.

Georgia Tech came into this season beating the drums for Davis and Martin as being the best two ends on any one team in the nation. Martin, a 236-pound, 6-foot-5-inch senior, was being heralded for All-American honors.

Davis, a 225-pound senior from Memphis, Tenn., moved squarely into the spotlight after Martin was injured and was regarded as a candidate for post-season honors.

But Monday he admitted he kicked Auburn halfback Dave Rawson in the head during the fourth period of unbeaten Auburn's 29-21 upset Saturday of the sixth-ranked Yellow Jackets. And, although it was not known at that time, when he was led from the field by an official it marked the end of his collegiate career.

Georgia Tech Coach Bobby Dodd Monday sorrowfully announced he was accepting Davis' resignation. Dodd said Davis would remain in school under his grant-in-aid and complete his work for a degree in industrial engeneering.

What's This? Fiends Finally Win A Game

By AL KAPLAN

The Physics Fiends, Wake Forest of Intramural football, won their first game in two years, as they defeated the Peacocks 7-0, Friday.

In the only other game Law School downed Law School 419-2. Pacing the attack were Charlie Jonas, Richie Vinroot and Mason Dixon, who each scored one touchdown.

The next point activity on the intramural calendar is volleyball. Frat Blue and White entries are due by Wednesday, October 23. Dorm and Grad entries must be turned in the following week, Wednesday, October 30.

The Co-Rec Sports Carnival, one of the special intramural activities, will be held Thursday, October 31. The Sports Carnival will have teams comprised of members from the fraternities and women's dorms and men's dorms and sororities.

The events scheduled are badminton, table tennis, volleyball, tether ball (women only), box hockey (men only), and archery. Another event called "carnival games" will be held. Teams made up of men and women will compete together in eight events.

Tag football, playoffs to determine an intramurals champion will begin next week, following the conclusion of the regular season's play.

In the dorm leagues, the teams which seem to have the best chance for a go at the championship are Aycock (3-0), the Parker Panthers (3-0), the Emerson Cardplayers (3-0), the Manly Riverrats (2-1), the Navy Mermen (3-1), the Navy Sea Lions (2-0) and the AFROTC (2-1).

The Med Schools continue to dominate the play in both leagues of the Grad division. Med I has a record of 2-0, and Med II leads League 2 with a 3-0 mark. Law II with a record of 2-0 is deadlocked with Med I for first in League 1.

In the Frat division, which resumed play after rush, DU has the most wins—three—against no losses. Also undefeated at 2-0 are Kappa Sigma, Chi Psi, Phi elt, Zeta Psi, ATO, Sigma Nu and DKE.

American Owned Freighter Strafed Off Cuban Coast

WASHINGTON (UPI) — An American owned freighter flying the Liberian flag was attacked by an unidentified plane — presumably Cuban — 12 miles off the coast of Cuba Tuesday on the anniversary of the 1962 missile crisis.

No casualties were reported from the hour-long strafing of the vessel J. Louis in the early morning darkness. But the ship's captain radioed that the superstructure and hull were damaged and that a resulting fire took two hours to bring under control.

The State Department denounced the incident as an unprovoked attack on a vessel operating in international waters. It said the attacking plane was presumed to be Cuban and that the government was investigating to determine whether a protest should be made.

The department said a distress messag from the ship reported that the attack area was illuminated by orange flares before the strafing off Cape Corriente on the southwestern tip of Cuba.

American jet fighters were sent out from Key West, Fla., when first word of the attack was received, but the State Department said "activity had ceased" when they arrived. The planes are on standing orders to retaliate against any attack over international waters.

The incident came a year to the day after President Kennedy, in a dramatic radio-television speech, demanded that Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev withdraw Russian missiles from Cuba.

The attack also came less than 24 hours after Cuban Premier Fidel Castro appealed to the United States to lift its economic embargo against Cuba. In a Monday night radio - television speech, he said such action was needed to help Cuba recover from hurricane Flora's devastation.

The J. Louis, which normally carries a crew of 49, is chartered to the Caribbean Steamship Co., a Reynolds Aluminum subsidiary. It was said to have been making four voyages a month from Jamaica to Texas for the last two years, passing each time along the southern Cuba coast.

U.N. CELEBRATION

A full program of a banquet and addresses by United Nations officials will be sponsored today by the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, honoring U. N. Day tomorrow.

Sam Leverin, "a well-known proponent of word peace through world law," will speak at the banquet which begins at 5:30 p.m. in Lenoir Hall (upstairs).

Maurice Liu, public relations man at the U. N., will deliver the main address in Gerrard Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Leverin will speak again at 9 p.m. over Channel 4 television on "World Peace and World Law."

Banquet reservations may be made at the CCUN office in Y-Court, according to Doug Tilden, CCUN regional director. Tickets are $1.50 each.

COUNCIL VACANCIES FILLED

Audrey Bunce of Stedman, and Sara Anne Trott of Kennapolis, will fill vacancies on the Women's Council, Student Body President Mike Lawler announced Tuesday.

Miss Bunce, a resident of West Cobb will represent Judicial District IV.

Miss Trott, a Whitehead resident, will represent Judicial District II. She is a transfer from W. C.

Both appointments are subject to approval by the Student Legislature, Thursday night.

Christy Minstrels For Germantime

The New Christy Minstrels, well-known for their appearances on television's "Hootenanny," will appear here as the lead half of the Germans Club program, Nov. 22.

The ten-member folk-singing group, eight men and two girls, will perform at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall to kick off the Germans Weekend, Watts Carr, president of the Germans Club, announced yesterday.

The second half of the program will be announced at a later date.

The New Christy Minstrels are an "amplified recapitulation" of the Christy Minstrels, started in 1842 by Edward Christy.

Called the Virginia Minstrels at the start, Christy's group toured the South and West and ended up in New York. They popularized such songs as "Oh Susannah" and "Camptown Races."

Minstrelry, as the Christy Minstrels originated it, was defined as "singing in harmony and introducing various acts within the show."

The New Christy Minstrels are made up of performers from smaller groups and individual acts. As one member explained:

"We're not just singers and we're not a choir . . . nor are we a sing-along group; we're a new concept of an all-but-forgotten tradition.

Dean Long Shoots Bull With Dormies

Dean of Men William G. Long confirmed Tuesday that he intends to meet a group of students from the lower quad residence halls tonight at 9 p.m. in Graham Dormitory.

The meeting, which Long describes as part of his program to study the needs and suggestions of the dorm residents, will consist mostly of "off the cuff remarks and questions."

Among the topics which Long said might be brought up include the questions of intramural sports, academics, recreation, coed residence halls, and other problems concerning residence hall life for men.

It is believed that this program is the result of a stepped-up interest by the UNC administration in the improvement of dorm social and recreational activities for men. The administration is said to be working towards a closer harmony and unity among male residents by arousing interest in residence hall improvement.

Dean Long said that many male residents are plagued by an "inferiority complex." "The individual must learn to toot his own horn and think positively," Long said. The success of this program depends on the individual and his realization that, with the length of his residence considerd, cooperation is necessary.

Ragtime Jazz "Folk Hero" To Appear

Max Morath, a man described as the "ideal spokesman" for ragtime by "Variety" magazine and the "folk hero of the spreading ragtime cult" by "Time," will come to Memorial Hall Thursday night at 9 p.m.

Morath will bring his one-man show, "Ragtime Revisited," to re-create authentic songs and piano solos of the energetic turn of the century.

Obviously genuinely fond of the era, Morath dresses with eye-catching flamboyance—a pearl-gray derby, red ascot tie flowing out of a wing collar, and a light blue suit lined with a faint pin stripe.

Morath has no personal memories of the period (he was born in 1926), but first heard piano rags played by his mother. Now, h sings songs with honest enthusiasm, without poking fun at them. He has no need to gild the humor of amusing songs, which still stand on their own merits.

Subjects of the popular songs include the telephone, booze, and theoretically "dirty" songs in a time when people "thought a four letter word was a three-letter word in the plural."

Ragtime began as a definite style in the early 1890's, and the first rag was published in 1897. A derivative of the Negro spiritual, it opposed a syncopated right hand to a marching bass, and it talked, as one wag observed, of the six days of the week the spirituals ignored.

When he turns his attention to the playing of a piano rag, Morath is careful to avoid the contemporary stereotype of ragtime, which he describes as "good to bad ragtime arrangements of popular tunes of the twenties played on a ricky-tick piano." There is no ricky-tick in Morath's piano and he goes back beyond the twenties to the works of the classic composers of rags — Scott Joplin's "Euphonic Sounds." Joseph Lamb's "Ragtime Nightingale." He plays them with a measure of feeling and body that may come as a surprise to those who know the classic rags mainly through piano-roll performances by their composers or in performances influenced by these piano rolls.

He does not shy from the sentimental songs that could be obvious subjects for caricature. He gives them point by placing them in the context of the illustrated colored slides that were typical of turn-of-the-century entertainment. The slides that Morath uses are a particularly fascinating part of his performance. Beautifully preserved and cleanly reproduced, they have been chosen from a collection of 30,000 slides assembled by John Ripley of Topeka, Kan.

Two Honor Code Surveys Call Each Other Cheats

By PETE WALES

Another study on the Honor System has come up that contradicts in part the study of the Men's Council and the sociology department made last spring.

The study, based on 30 students from different departments, is the result of a project by students in Dr. W. A. Danielson's Journalism 165 course, "Communication and Opinion."

One strong contradiction with the Council's survey stands out.

The Danielson poll found that more seniors than freshmen supported the Honor System, and that the student's confidence in the System increased as his time passed at the University.

"The longer you stay in the System, the more respect you have for it," Dr. Danielson concluded.

Last spring's survey by the Men's Council and the sociology department found slightly less respect and more violations among seniors than among freshmen.

However, the freshmen of the Council's survey were freshmen last year. In Dr. Danielson's study the students were freshmen in 1960.

The Danielson poll consisted of a questionnaire passed out to 91 freshmen in 1960 by two students, William H. Miller and Donald L. Dotson.?

Last spring four students in Dr. Danielson's course looked up 30 of the original 91 students, who were by then seniors, and gave them the same questionnaire to compare with the 1960 results. The pollsters were: Susan Grosser, Doris Smith, Ernest Stepp and Alvin Daughtridge.

"They didn't really have enough people," Dr. Danielson said, "so that one has to be extremely careful about drawing any conclusions from it."

However, the J-165 poll revealed that there were several drastic changes in student opinion between their freshman and senior years.

While 53 per cent of the students as freshmen preferred to have individual professors handle cheating cases in their own classs, only 23 per cent felt this way senior year. About 57 per cent of the seniors preferred trial by the Honor Council over other means.

Students in their senior year generally advocated stronger penalties for cheating than they did as freshmen. The majority of students in both instances felt cheaters should receive a probation for the first offense and expulsion for the second.

None of the freshmen and 24 per cent of the seniors felt suspension should be given for cheating.

The students were evenly split in their feelings about the partiality of the Men's and Women's Councils. The students as seniors tended less to feel that the Councils were partial. A slight majority felt that the Councils were "probably" partial to some groups and individuals.

Grant Wheeler, a member of the Men's Council in 1960 and now assistant Dean of Men, pointed out that there were more lenient decisions in 1960 than in 1963.

"There has been a distinct trend toward greater severity in penalties given for cheating violations," Wheeler said.

This may have had some effect on the majority of freshmen of 1960 selecting probation as the best penalty for first-offense cheaters.

About 53 per cent of the students in 1960 felt that trials should be open to the public if the defendant so desired. About 47 per cent of the students as seniors felt this way while an increase from 20 to 33 per cent felt the trials should be open to a reporter only.

Last year was the first time trials were open to reporters.

Concerning a student's grade after a cheating violation and probation sentence, 50 per cent of the freshmen and 47 per cent of the seniors thought the student should fail only the work cheated on. None of the freshmen and a third of the seniors thought th student should fail the whole course.

A slight majority of both freshmen and seniors felt that students should not have to report cheating violations.

In the conclusion of the study, the students conducting it said that the study was not complete and that:

"To find the true feelings of the student, a different questionnaire should be administered. The new questionnaire should strive to ask more pertinent questions to a large sample."

These students were not aware at the time of the survey conducted last spring by the Men's Council and the Sociology depart ment.

To Disclose Contents On October 28

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The University Faculty Council yesterday adopted a strong resolution voicing its opposition to the recently enacted Speaker Ban Law.

The exact contents of the resolution will not be made public until the Board of Trustees meets here Oct. 28, but informed sources said that the resolution "was very reasonable and calm and was not intended to inflame anyone."

Another member of the Council said that the resolution was designed to "educate rather than agitate."

The resolution was passed unanimously, an official said. There were only a few verbal amendments to the measure and these were designed simply to correct or change some of the wording.

After the final draft of the resolution is completed, it will be presented to Chancellor W. B. Aycock then to Consolidated University President William C. Friday and finally to the Trustees.

Indications are that the trustees will also propose a resolution, voicing their opposition to the "gag law". It is not known whether they will adopt a resolution separate from the Faculty Council's or whether they will draw up a new resolution.

The resolution was fairly long, about four type-written pages, sources said. It was drawn up by a special seven-man committee headed by Dean of Law School Henry Brandis.

Some 60 council members voted on the measure yesterday, although around 100 were present. The 60 voting members are part of the 75-member council. The council members are elected from various ranks of the faculty (professors, instructors, lecturers, etc).

The meeting was conducted in a friendly atmosphere, sources said, and there was "no opposition to the measure, except for grammatical ones."

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Algerian Troops Hurled Back

MARRAKECH, Morocco (UPI) — Algerian troops lauched a major offensive to recapture the Sahara fortress of Hassi Beida Tuesday but were hurled back n a "savage" daylong battle, the Moroccan army high command announced.

The new border fighting was reported as Algerian dispatches said Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie's efforts to mediate the border crisis in talks with Algerian President Ahmed Ben Bella had collapsed andd that he would leave Wednsday for Tunisia.

Earlier Tuesday the Moroccan government announced the defeat of Algerian forces it said had attacked at two more points along the border in a spread of the undeclared war to the outposts of Hassi Taghoucht and Oussada.

Vote Expected Today On Rights Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI)—A militant, bi-partisan group moved Tuesday to ram a civil rights bill through the Judiciary Committee that is so strong some leaders doubted the House would swallow it.

Short-cutting the long process of voting on a bill line by line, the advocates of legislation even tougher than that sought by President Kennedy, set up a quick showdown on their proposal for Wednesday.

The relatively low - ranking Democrats and Republicans who have banded together for the stronger bill and against their committee leaders believed they had a good chance to win.

King Withdraws Plan

BIRMINGHAM (UPI) — Integration leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Tuesday withdrew his ultimatum to Birmingham city officials demanding they immediately hire 25 Negro policemen.

King said he was taking the step as a "face saving" device for city councilmen and because he had inside knowledge the city plans to add several Negroes to the force in the near future.

Tito Cancels Reception

NEW PORK (UPI) — Yugoslav President Tito Tuesday called off a Thursday reception at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel charging that New York City police could not adequately protect him from outbreaks of violence from anti-Tito Communist Yugoslav refugees.

Angry police officials immediately denied the charge.

The announcement that the party had been called off came after three days of anti-Tito demonstrations and fist-fights between anti-Titoists and the Yugoslav president's bodyguard.

Trial Procedure Biggest Query

What is the procedure of the Honor Council trials?

This is the question most frequently asked at the discussions being held at the dormitories and fraternities by members of UNC's judicial councils.

A re-definition of the Campus Code and a talk on the philosophy and penalties of the Honor Code have been the main points of the discussions.

The discussion groups are led by two representatives of the Men's Council and one of the Women's Council.

Whitney Durand, chairman of Men's Council, said that the response has been good at the fourteen discussions held so far.

Tonight discussions will be held at Ruffin and Grimes at 10:15 p.m. There will be one at the Sigma Phi Epsilon, Thursday at 7 p.m.

The schedule for next week has not been announced.

Durand said that the discussions will be completed within the next four weeks.

UNC Student To Headline UN Program

By HARRY DeLUNG

Harry DeLung, outstanding UNC senior and regional chairman of the U.S. National Student Association, will be the keynote speaker at the United Nations Day program at Randolph-Macon Women's College.

Today at noon, he will present a criticism of the U.N. from the viewpoint of the Soviet Union. According to DeLung, the audience will not be told that the 30-minute speech is a communist viewpoint until it is over.

The purpose of this topic, according to Janet MacCutcheon of Randolph-Macon, is to provide a stimulus for discussion groups that will follow. She added, "We hope the speech will make our students more aware of the problems of disunity that face the U.N. All 750 women here will be present for the program."

MacCutcheon said DeLung was invited to make the pro-Soviet talk because he was a well-known speaker at the school and would not be personally linked with Communism. He was chairman of the USSR delegation to the Mock U.N. Assembly of 1963.

AWARD WINNER

For the third consecutive year, the Naval Research Reserve Company 6-6 in Chapel Hill has received an award from the Sixth Naval District in Charleston, S. C. for General Excellence. The unit received the second place award.

M. E. Woodard, of the UNC business office, is commanding officer of the group. He accepted the award on behalf of the unit, which draws its membership from the Durham, Raleigh, and Chapel Hill areas.

Natanson: He's Tough But Popular

Dr. Maurice Natanson

By KAREN PARKER

Ask some of Dr. Maurice Natanson's philosophy students about him. Chances are they will answer, "He's real neat," "He's very good," or "He's a great guy."

Then ask why Dr. Natanson seems so "boss" and they will probably look puzzled and answer, "I don't know. He just is."

Why is he admirable? One student explained: "There is a type of professor who is expert on his subject and yet is so strict that nobody likes him. There is another type that is so lax that he becomes 'one of the gang.' Dr. Natanson knows what he is teaching, we can talk to him, and we respect him."

"I have no techniques, gimmicks or devices in teaching my students," the blond-bearded professor explained. "The student often feels he isn't seen as a person or as an individual. He is just fulfilling a role as a 'student'.

"If this situation exists," he said, "the teacher doesn't have much of an impact with the student. One student can be replaced by any other, or any teacher by another. It won't make any difference. If you follow this line you end up with machines. I'm opposed to the automatic line of relations.

"You don't need a good personality to be a good teacher," he said. "I'm not saying you need a bad personality. Who are the students the professors are attracted to? Some of them are disappointments and don't challenge the professional competence of the teacher. It is a double relationship and there is a need on both sides."

Natanson neither advocates or disapproves of social relationships with students. "Larger universities like this one do not limit professors by charter in their social relationships with students," he said. "A university contains diverse temperaments and professors are different kinds of people. Some like social relationships and others want isolation.

"Anyone who strives to be a popular professor," he continued, "is lost before he begins. If you have to develop technique you're a fraud."

He does not feel that he has been especially blessed with good students. He said of the UNC student body: "I think there is great openness and considerable willingness to listen. There are some gangsters, but there are people who want to look at themselves and their problems philosophically.

"Students try to live up to 'images' — something that is expected of them. Courage is involved in being a student. He requires courage to accept change. This need doesn't apply to regional groups and races. This is a part of being educated."

The New York native has taught here seven years. In undergraduate school he majored in English and psychology, but he turned to philosophy because "all my questions in both subjects led to philosophy."

Dr. Natanson is married and has three children.

Court Will Be Knocked For Justice

The Supreme Court has made what will obviously be another unpopular decision. The Court instructed the Federal Appeals Court of New York to consider a contention by Vito Genovese, leader of the nationwide crime syndicate Cosa Nostra, that notes of pre-trial interviews with the government's main witness were wrongfully withheld from the defense during the trial.

The granting of the hearing does not automatically give Genovese freedom or even a new trial, as he is currently serving a 15-year sentence in federal prison in Leavenworth, Kan., but says simply that the handling of the case by the Justice Department merits investigation.

The Court's mandate will be well publicized due to all the recent storm over Genovese stemming from the Vallachi hearings, and opponents of the Court will use this as they use anything they can to prove that it is anti-God, anti-Country and pro-big time crime.

The real point is, of course, that the the Court must protect the most evil members of our society from infringement of their rights if it is to protect the most innocent member. There is no double standard; one for the innocent and one for the guilty. If the Justice Department can't get Genovese legally, regardless of how evident his guilt is, then the should not be permitted to get him in any fashion.

It is a shame that in our country such an obvious fact as this will be ignored and the Court's detractors will use this latest decision as further grounds for attack.

Facts Behind The Image

That apparently elderly graduate student from South Carolina, who wrote recently to correct what he considers to be the false and stereotyped image of his fellow South Carolinians, undercut himself without realizing it.

"Most South Carolinians are very warm, intelligent people who would no more dream of forcing someone to concur with their particular religious or political beliefs than they would laugh at him for his own ideas," he wrote, apparently oblivious of the segregation laws in his state which force whites not to mingle with Negroes in certain situations under pain of fine or jail.

Does this not amount to "forcing someone to concur with . . . particular religious or political beliefs . . .?"

And if, as our correspondent alleges, most people consider "conservative segregationists" to be "a bunch of red-necked, ignorant, cornbread-dippin', bigoted cotton-pickers who haven't got enough sense to come in out of a shower of burning kerosene from the shanty we just blew up," then whose fault is it? Certainly we have not heard lately of any liberal integrationists burning shacks or blowing up shanties.

Undoubtedly there are many "warm, intelligent" people in South Carolina, just as there are all over the world. Until they make their presence felt more strongly, however, they will continue to be lumped with the ignorant maniacs who have been able to perpetrate acts of violence unhindered by restraints, legal or verbal, from their more rational fellow Southerners.

Known Communist Talks At Statehouse???

The Greensboro Daily News

The North Carolina Council of Women's Organizations plans to meet at Raleigh's new Statehouse this year; and on November 13 they are to hear a talk by Mrs. G. M. Frolova of the Russian embassy in Washington.

Obviously, the ladies of the council have little fear that Mrs. Frolova will contaminate their minds and we suspect they are right. But the appearance at the Statehouse of a Russian embassy official, presumably a "known Communist," does raise a few delicate questions. The Statehouse, as everyone knows, is the home base of the General Assembly and the General Assembly has recently declared North Carolina's college campuses off limits to "known Communists."

By what twist of legislative logic, then, do the legislators countenance the appearance of Mrs. Frolova at the Statehouse?

Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody has been most emphatic on the point. On page two of his recent memo to the attorney general regarding the Speaker Ban, Mr. Moody severely reproved the state's "institutions of higher learning" for disregarding a 1941 statute. That statute provides, among other things, that "It shall be unlawful for any public building in the state . . . to be used by any person for the purpose of advocating, advising or teaching a doctrine" that the government should be overthrown by force or violence.

Of course no one knows in advance what doctrines Mrs. Frolova will teach November 13. But the recent Speaker Ban, though it applies only to state-supported college campuses, treats all "known Communists," whether embassy officials or ballerinas, as potential wreckers of the American Way. (One of the milder inanities of the Speaker Ban — as well as Section 14-11 of the 1941 statute—is that it imposes on guardians of state property the nigh impossible task of finding out in advance what visiting speakers want to say.)

To come to the nub of the matter, however, we wonder whether Sen. Thomas White and other legislative managers of the Statehouse are getting themselves into hot water with Mr. Moody by permitting the use of the Statehouse for a "known Communist's" speech. Is one to conclude that the legislators who run the Statehouse "pay no attention to these statutes," in Mr. Moody's words, while any college official who allows a Communist to speak on a state-owned campus risks harsh condemnation?

We have no wish to disrupt the program of the Council of Women's Organizations, who can no doubt weather the talk of a lady Communist. But there is a matter of consistency to be established here — which, upon being established, would doubtless show once again the silliness of this tissue of repressive laws.

But it does seem that the legislators who lord it so mightily over the free colleges and universities of this state are exempting themselves from the very rules they lay down for others. If Caesar's wife should be above suspicion, all the more should Caesar — his night-glowing license plate notwithstanding.

On Civil Rights And Reforms

Bob Spearman

The USNSA has made its commitment to the cause of civil rights clear from its beginning. It has long urged that college admissions be predicated without regard to race. It has urged federal legislation to insure voting rights. It has endorsed the student sit-in movement and has conducted various civil rights projects of its own. These include a voter registration project held in Raleigh last summer and a training institute which was run for civil rights leaders. A great deal of time was spent at the 16th National Student Congress in redefining the role of USNSA in civil rights and in articulating new programs.

In the area of civil rights programming, four resolutions were passed by the committee, and all of these were subsequently adopted by a plenary session of the Congress. The first, entitled "Cooperation with Student Civil Rights Organizations", concerned the relationship between USNSA, SNCC (the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee) and NSM (Northern Student Movement.) It provided for NSA to aid SNCC and NSM by helping to procure office supplies, food, clothing, and by assistance in fund raising. It also provided for the establishment of a Civil Rights Desk in the national office to supply civil rights information to member campuses and to coordinate NSA civil rights programming. The resolution called for the establishment of exchange programs between segregated and non-segregated institutions and set up a Civil Rights Leadership Institute. This resolution was important in its providing for direct help from NSA to different civil rights groups. It represents, however, much less than what these groups desired. SNCC had pressed for $12,000 to help finance their programs, but this was rather sharply turned down. The majority of delegates seemed to feel that NSA should undertake programs in the area of civil rights, but they were skeptical of underwriting particular organizations for large sums of money. Most felt that NSA would lose its organizational integrity by undertaking all the projects desired by SNCC.

The second resolution adopted concerned education in Prince Edward County, Virginia. (The public schools in Prince Edward were closed in 1959 to avoid integration, and Negroes in the county have been unable to receive an education since that time. White students have been attending a private white school.) This resolution called for aid from member schools to help a non-discriminatory private school system which has been established in the county. It also provided for the establishment of an adult education program and voluntary summer tutor projects there which would employ students from member schools to serve as teachers.

A third resolution urged schools to establish educational projects among minority groups in the communities surrounding their campuses.

The final such resolution concerned desegregation in public schools. It provided for a series of interracial conferences on the problems of desegregation in education, and instructed the national officers to distribute information on the legal aspects of school desegregation to member schools.

The committee passed four major policy resolutions in the field of civil rights, two of which were adopted by plenary sessions. One of these resolutions failed and the other was not considered. The one which failed was entitled "The Role of the Students and Universities in Civil Rights". Liberals objected that the resolution was too mild and was more a call to thought than a call to action. Its defeat on the floor stemmed from this opposition in part, but was due primarily to objections that the wording of the resolution was vague or incomprehensible.

The plenary adopted the resolution entitled "Omnibus Civil Rights". This was an endorsement of the Kennedy civil rights bill now before the Congress, but it also called for certain additions to the bill. These included strengthened guarantees for voting rights, and a time limit to end school segregation. In the committee and on the floor additional strengthening amendments urged by SNCC were defeated. (These contained provisions of the so-called Kastenmeier bill, the strongest civil rights legislation ever introduced in the U. S. Congress.)

The final civil rights policy legislation passed was "Cooperation with Student Civil Rights Organizations". This called for member schools to cooperate with SNCC and NSM in a manner consistent with the by-laws and constitution of USNSA. (This was the counterpart policy resolution to the program previously discussed, which mandated specific programs which would help those organizations.)

Not considered by the plenary was a resolution entitled "Civil Rights 1963." This resolution would have brought NSA endorsement of various forms of compensational treatment for Negroes and NSA support of campaigns of civil disobedience. It was strongly opposed by a minority in committee, and was not considered on the plenary floor.

Civil Rights issues at the 16th Congress were marked by intensive efforts by SNCC and SDS (Students for a Democratic Society) to throw the weight of NSA's influence and financial resources behind SNCC programs. Ultimately the Congress refused to do this, in part because some people took sharp issue with certain of SNCC's activities and partly because some felt that NSA could accomplish more in the field of civil rights by its own work. Certainly NSA's commitment to civil rights was continued and intensified by the 16th Congress. But it was also clear that the Association was becoming increasingly selective about the methods and actions which it endorsed.

(A final note should be added about NSA financing. Aside from the funds to maintain the national office, almost all NSA financial backing stems from foundation grants. This is true for field projects undertaken by the Association. Thus when certain projects are called for in resolutions, these are almost always contingent upon the national officers' securing of foundation grants.)

Harry DeLung

There are few who would not agree that the most significant legislation passed at the 16th National Student Congress was the structural reform of the National Student Association. A similarly small number were entirely satisfied with the reforms which were finally passed as a result of many compromises.

Two broad objectives were in mind when the national officers and the National Executive Committee met in December, 1962 to discuss the possiblity of proposing reforms to the 16th Congress. These were (1) to answer a number of charges from right-wing organizations, most notably the Young Americans for Freedom, and (2) to increase the communication between the national office in Philadelphia and the 400 member campuses.

The only consensus that was reached at the December NEC was that under the present regional structure, there was little or no leadership provided for NSA (and NSA-assisted) programs on member campuses. This was considered to be a major breakdown in the utilization of the first and second level leadership of the Association.

The background on the right-ist charges stems from an effort of the right, which began in force at the 14th Congress, to take over the organization of NSA. They claimed that the Association had concerned itself too much with non-campus issues and that a "power elite" controlled the policies of NSA in this area. Over the period between that Congress and the December meeting, this became an opinion held, at least in part, by most of the Association's leaders.

By the time of the Congress in August, a number of reform "programs" had been proposed by members of the national staff. They all had in common the abolition of the National Executive Committee. This body, composed of the chairmen of the 23 regions of the Association and additional delegates elected from the larger regions, had administrative and policy making powers, in addition to serving as a check on the national officers.

The large size of the NEC and the limited familiarity of some of its members with the functions of the Association made it relatively incompetent in most administrative matters. Also, it had become the opinion of most of the first and second level leadership of NSA that the power of the NEC to pass on a substantial number of policy resolutions served no worthwhile purpose.

To replace the administrative duties of the NEC, all reform proposals included the formation of a National Supervisory Board and a Congress Steering Committee. As they were actually established, the NSB was composed of ten members, elected from four geographic areas, and the CSC was staffed by the regional chairmen.

Despite the existence of a $19,000.00 deficit in the Association's economy, it was felt necessary that money be appropriated for new, full-time members of the national staff. The central controversy dealt with the nature of these positions. Most agreed that the two elected positions of Program Vice President (officers of NSA who travel to member campuses) could be abolished.

Dennis Yeager, a PVP who spoke to the Student Legislature of UNC last spring, backed a plan which would have created at least four elected student Government Vice President positions. These officers would not work out of the Philadelphia office, but would have their headquarters on various campuses around the country, and they would make several visits a year to campuses in that area. Their function would be to offer assistance in problems and issues that were facing member student government projects on a regional basis. These persons, elected by the Congress, would have extensive experience with student affairs, often having previously served as student body presidents on their own campuses.

At the other extreme was a proposal by NSA academic freedom project director Neal Johnston. His plan was that all of the new positions would be held by "desk" personnel; that is, national staff members who would work in the Philadelphia office in specialized areas, such as student welfare, academic freedom, civil rights, etc. They would spend a comparatively small amount of time traveling to member campuses, and would do so only in regard to what ever area was their specialty.

A compromise was worked out by NSA President Dennis Shaul and other staff members by which three SGVPs would be elected, and two "desk" jobs would be created. In this structure, the regions (such as Carolinas-Virginia, Kentucky - Tennessee, etc) would be abolished, and four large areas would be created. These were the North-east, the South, the Mid-West, and the Far West, and a SGVP would be assigned to each, except the Northest which would be administered out of the Philadelphia office.

About midway through the 16th Congress, it became evident that there was still too much division of opinion for this plan to be safely passed by the plenary of the Congress. It was withdrawn and a final proposal was submitted.

This plan, which was adopted by the Congress differs from the first compromise in that it retains the regions as a medium of area programing and communication, the four areas are not formally established, and the number of SGVPs is cut to two. In addition, three "desk" positions are provided for, with the understanding that these persons will be available for more frequent trips to member schools.

Less tangible alterations in the character of the Association included a feeling that more decisions should be made by the Congress plenary, and less by the officers and staff of the organization. This led to the abolition of the "referal" practice by which the plenary could refer any legislation that it did not act on to a smaller body. It is significant that neither of the new administrative bodies, the NSB and CSC, have any formal policy-making powers.

In the interest of allowing more time for consideration of legislation, the plenary limited the amount of policy resolutions that may come out of all of the five committees to 30. In the past, as many as 150 resolutions had been reported to the plenary.

As every Congress or legislative body has its conservative and liberal years, this year was relatively conservative for the National Student Congress. However, most observers do not attribute the passage of reforms to this characteristic.

It became apparent in 1962 that the suggestions for change offered by the Young Americans for Freedom were not made in good faith. At the YAF's national assembly at Madison Square Garden, a resolution was passed urging conservative students to participate in NSA and try to change its structure and policies. This decision was soon reversed by the executives of YAF who refused to cooperate in any way with the National Student Association, and have, in fact, urged that campuses disaffiliate from NSA.

There is little doubt that the structural reforms were entirely due to the work of moderates and liberals who were seeking to improve the one and only national union of students in the United States. It should, however, be encouraging to conservatives to note that despite the official position of the YAF executives, many conservatives exerted strong leadership at the Congress. An announced Goldwater-supporter from Cornell came within one vote of being elected chairman of the 1964 NSA Coordinators' Conference.

To some, the most notable characteristic of the 16th Congress was the often-clear separation between those delegates who had their first concern in the interest of NSA, and those who were seeking only to use NSA as a vehicle for their own causes. It became evident by the end of the Congress that the future of the Association rested on those students of all political persuations who were, and are willing to let their particular causes be subsidiary to the goals set forth in the Preamble of the Constitution of the United States National Student Association:

—To maintain academic freedom, academic responsibility, and student rights;

—To stimulate and improve democratic student government;

—To develop better educational standards, facilities, and teaching methods—to improve student cultural, social, and physical welfare;

—To promote international understanding and fellowship;

—To guarantee to all people, because of their inherent dignity as individuals, equal rights and possibilities for primary, secondary, and higher education regardless of sex, race, religion, political belief, or economic circumstance;

—To foster the recognition of the rights and responsibilities of students to the school, the community, humanity, and God;

—And to preserve the interests and integrity of the Government and Constitution of the United States of America.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Bad Ol' Us

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I believe the legislature of North Carolina made an error in the subject matter of the gag law. What it should have attempted to gag is the writers, students and other guilty parties that allow such bad taste and an 'udder' obnoxious article as appeared by Curry Kilpatrick (sic) in the Sunday edition of the Daily Tar Heel, headlined, "Moo U. Goes Down To Udder Defeat, 31-10." Some other acts as seen this weekend were the efforts of the Carolina cheerleaders leading such yells as "Castrate State," and "Screw Moo U."

The past few years, N. C. State's football team and student body won victories in their ball games with UNC. This year, only the Carolina football team won a victory while the student body lost as it only reasserted itself as an impudent, non-conformist group of persons (if one can call them persons) which can act with no better judgment than a five year old child.

Are these the "Carolina Gentlemen" which we wish to have run the affairs of the state in the future? Or should we not turn to the real "Carolina Gentlemen" which seem to reside at State, Duke and Wake Forest?

Indecency

Editors, The Tar Heel,

After reading John F. Hollingsworth's letter in Sunday's paper, a protest that has been smoldering within me for a long time was aroused. Now that I've thought about it for several hours, I am red—hot about the whole thing.

I feel that UNC males are being forced to be exhibitionists—a forced showing of the body in public—and certainly the men's room is public when 30 people are in there at a given moment.

If every student would write a letter home about it, perhaps their children could be saved from indecency — FORCED INDENCY.

Renaissance Work Shown At Ackland

Now on permanent display in the Main Gallery of the Ackland Art Center of the UNC-CH is a fifteenth century Italian Renaissance altarpiece, The Madonna and Child with Saints Lucy, Sebastian, John the Baptist and Catherine of Alexandria, by Jacopo Sellaio (1441-1493).

Concerning the significance of this major addition Joseph C. Sloane, director of the museum, says, "In the first place it's the only fifteenth century Italian work the museum has and it fills a considerable gap in the collection. In the second place although the painting has suffered a great deal of damage through the years the key parts, that is, the Madonna and Child, are in good condition. It's an important piece of that size—90 inches by 86 inches including the frame—and the sacra conversazione was a typical type of altar painting during the Renaissance Period. There is no similar picture in all North Carolina and thus it complements the collection in Raleigh in this respect.

"Not much is known of the history of the painting but it's attributed to Sellaio who is one of the more mysterious painters of the middle and latter part of the fifteenth century. Sellaio was an eclectic painter who was influenced by almost all the major styles around him—particularly in his early work. He was a pupil of Fra Filippo Lippi and was in the group that included the young Botticelli. The Madonna and Child show the lingering influence of the International Style and there are traces of that influence, particularly of Domenico Veneziano in the Madonna. The coloring is unusually fresh and vivid.

The museum is open to the public Tuesday through Friday from 2 until 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m. Closed Monday.

Laughs Pepper English Movie

"Murder at the Gallop," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, produced by George Brown, directed by George Pollock, starring Margaret Rutherford.

By STEVE DENNIS

How English are the English! Even for those who dislike Agatha Christie, there must be something exciting about the prospect of Agatha spoofing Agatha in the movie now showing at the Rialto Theatre in Durham, "Murder at the Gallop."

Starring the invincible Margaret Rutherford, this is a movie with a positively therapeutic value. One of the funniest women around today, Miss Rutherford has the face of a bloodhound and the talent of an unreconstructed laugh.

Milchester has problems—murder, murder, and murder. Or so Miss Marple (Margaret Rutherford) thinks. A blustering old busybody who sees the world through the murkily tinted spectacles of Agatha Christie's vision of the murder mystery, Miss Marple is concerned.

A wealthy, eccentric old man dies. One of his four heirs states that he has been murdered, only to be spitted on a long hatpin for all her pains. Now there are three. Miss Marple is sure she knows THE ONE, until he is murdered. Finally, after a wild twist in the ballroom of an English inn, she KNOWS. But it would be unfair to reveal the conclusion to this mad wave of crime.

After solemnly pronouncing her opinion that "The books of Agatha Christie should be required reading for the police force," Miss Marple sets to. At first the Inspector is politely tolerant, then frankly alarmed, and finally jealous as Marple succeeds where he only approaches. Meanwhile, we, the audience, have seen some of the most delightful comic scenes in any recent English film cavort themselves across the screen.

If you have never seen Margaret Rutherford, you owe it to yourself to experience this movie. If you have, you will anyway. As if Rutherford were not enough, the other characters are sufficiently crotchety and "English" to amuse even the most hardened Anglophobe.

A poignant French short, "Children Adrift," serves as an hors-d'oeuvre to this irresistible main course. "Attendez-moi," cries the waif who is here the hero in a world of beauty, squalor, death, and love.

'Fat, Happy, We Are Not'

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

"Fat and Happy" was the expression Jim Hickey used yesterday to describe the feeling he hopes his team will not have this week in preparation for Saturday's game with South Carolina.

"We'll have to forget all about our win over State and worry about this game in Columbia," Hickey said in his weekly press conference at the Carolina Inn.

"You guys hear this all the time, but it's especially true this week. South Carolina has a big team — probably the biggest we'll face — and their youngsters have been improving every game."

Emmett Cheek, UNC head scout, also pointed out the Gamecocks' size and strength and mentioned that "their personnel dictates they should be winning more than they have.

"South Carolina has only won one game (21-13 over Maryland) this season, and this has largely been due to their own miscues," Cheek said.

"Fumbles and intercepted passes have hurt them all year. And, of course, the inability of Dan Reeves to measure up to last year's play has also been a big factor.

"Reeves had his knee operated on last spring. It's supposed to be okay now, but he definitely has not been as sharp running or passing the ball."

Cheek said Jimmy Rogers (from Charlotte) filled in well for Reeves against Maryland and actually won that game for USC. "But," he said, "Rogers did not look good at all in the game with Georgia." (South Carolina lost that one, 27-7).

This problem with their quarterbacks has been a big one in every game for the Gamecocks. Reeves has been injured off and on, necessitating the use of Rogers. Most of the time, the alternating has not been successful.

South Carolina sets an offense much like the NC State slot T the Tar Heels pounded last week. The Gamecocks also use an occasional pro set similar to UNC's. Rollouts are what initiate most of the passing plays, with a lot depending on Reeves.

USC's chief threats along the ground are running backs Marty Rosen (third leading ACC rusher) and Larry Gill. A third man, fullback Carl Huggins, is a large 220-pounder who starred in the Maryland win.

Hickey singled out Ron Tuthill along with UNC's wealth of tackles and guards in handing out his verbal rewards yesterday.

"I was a little worried how Ron would take it when we switched (Ken) Willard to halfback this year. He (Tuthill) had done such a fine job for us last season. But he's been even better this year. He's one of our finest blockers and a tremendous all -round ballplayer."

Hickey also said the good blocking in the State game and the fine defensive work all year has been the result of having so many lettermen at the interior line positions.

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

There's just no getting around it — Ken Willard is big. Whether he's shuffling through the cafeteria line at Ehringhaus, keeping the baseball team in stitches with his rendition of an Aqua-Velva commercial or sitting in Howell Hall taking notes on a Poli Sci 41 lecture, Ken Willard remains the same — big.

Put this 6-2, 220 pound congenial bulldozer on a football field and you're asking for trouble unless the jersey on your back happens to be the same color as his. He's got enemy linebackers around the ACC putting in for emergency federal aid and at the same time he's causing visions of Cotton Bowls to dance in the heads of Carolina football followers.

Using nothing more than sheer power and determination on many occasions, Ken has charged through the opposition for 288 yards in 75 carries so far this fall. This performance has placed him second only to Duke's Jay Wilkinson in league rushing, and if he is able to continue the pace through the last half of the season, Ken will top his own 1962 production of 466 yards by more than one hundred yards. And one has a feeling he'll do it with no trouble at all, because each week Ken gets better and better.

Exploits Of The Willard Boys

Progress has always been a part of Ken Willard. Born to Mr. and Mrs. Russell Willard 20 years ago, Ken grew up in the outskirts just east of Richmond, Va. Mr. Willard, an insurance agent in and around Richmond since the age of 15, had a keen interest in sports, and he instilled this interest in both of his sons — Ken and his older brother Dick.

Both of the Willard boys became four-sport stars when they attended nearby Varina High School, a small school of about 450 students, but one with a reputation of turning out good football teams. Dick, three years Ken's senior, graduated from Varina in 1958, and headed for Virginia Military Institute.

That same year Mr. Willard passed away, but he had left with his sons the desire to work hard and thereby succeed. Dick went on to athletic fame at V. M. I. where he was an All-Southern Conference halfback in 1960, and a southpaw pitcher on the Keydets' baseball team. He graduated from the Lexington, Va., institution in 1962, and is now a sophomore at the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

Meanwhile brother Ken had shattered all of Dick's records at Varina. Ken was a football fullback, a basketball forward, a baseball outfielder and a three-event man in track (unusual combination of shot put, discus and 100-yard dash), while garnering an unbelievable total of 16 letters. His combination of size, speed and coordination had baseball and football scouts gathering on his doorstep almost as fast as the trophies piled up on his book case.

Joe Mark and Bob Thalman, UNC assistant coaches, were there. So were scouts from Duke, VMI, Virginia and other schools. So was Ted Williams.

Greatest Thrill — Meeting Ted

"Having Ted Williams come and see me play baseball was the greatest thrill of my life," said Ken, as I talked with him one day this fall. "He had always been one of my idols as a boy. As a hitter he was the best.

"Anyway, he came and saw me in a semi-pro game in Richmond, then came over to my house and talked baseball for a few hours. The Red Sox, Pirates, Indians and Yankees all seemed interested in me, but no concrete offers were ever made. I had always thought in terms of going to college first."

For North Carolina, the decision to get a college education first was almost like manna from heaven. During his junior year in high school Ken visited the Duke and UNC campuses, and in the spring of 1961, he signed a Carolina grant-in-aid ("Duke seemed cold to me and I thought Carolina had more to offer.").

In his freshman year at UNC, Ken learned a lot — more progress . Under George Barclay, Ken worked as the fullback in a Tar Baby backfield composed of quarterback Ron Tuthill and halfbacks Dave Braine and Tommy Ward.

"When I was in high school I was able to break away consistently because I was so much bigger than most of the players. As a freshman I learned to get 10 or 15 yards — to give myself more to picking up valuable yards rather than trying to go outside," Ken explained.

Success From Start On UNC Grid

Whatever Ken learned as a freshman, it was good. He broke into the starting line-up right from the start of his soph year last season and he's been there ever since. Against Clemson last year, Ken alone picked up 113 yards in 15 carries. But he got the most satisfaction out of beating South Carolina.

"We didn't have too much to cheer about last year, though I feel that we had a much better team than we showed. I think we all felt best after winning the South Carolina game. You'll remember that was our first win after losing the first four. And losing the Duke game — that was my biggest disappointment since I've been at UNC."

This year things have been different — for Ken and the Tar Heels. Ken is the first to admit that he was a little unsure of himself last season, but he feels that this uneasiness is gone now. As for the team, Ken expresses the optimism which surrounds the whole squad (and the whole student body) these days.

"I don't like to sound like a bugler, but I believe this team has the greatest chance of any team I've ever played on. We've got the material, the experience and the winning attitude. We're taking each game one by one."

From a 3-7 season to a possible 9-1 season is a big change for all involved, but it hasn't been the only change for Ken. This summer the big history major, who likes steak dinners, golf, Peter, Paul & Mary and off-tackle plays, took time off from city league baseball and his job as a carpenter's helper in Richmond to get married. He and his wife, the former Bonnie Lee Smith of Richmond (it was a high school sweethearts affair all the way), now live in Victory Village. Bonnie Lee is a receptionist in Dean Long's office.

Looking to the future, Ken has a lot to look forward to. There's baseball in the spring ("We should have a real good team.") another year on the UNC gridiron and the possibilities of law school at the University of Richmond and pro football or pro baseball. Whatever the decision, Ken will make the most of it. He's big and he's good. He may not get any bigger, but he's always getting better.

Harriers Entertain Gamecocks

South Carolina's football team will find out just how tough UNC is this Saturday, but the Gamecocks cross - country contingent doesn't have to wait that long to discover an even stronger Carolina power.

UNC's unbeaten, untied and almost-unscored upon harriers face South Carolina this afternoon on the UNC course. The UNC and USC freshman teams also have a meet here.

Carolina will be out for win number six, after rolling over Wake Forest, Clemson, Maryland, NC State and Virginia. The harriers also will face Duke before entering the State and ACC championship next month at Raleigh.

Yanks Promote Houk To GM

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ralph Houk replaced Roy Hamey as general manager of the New York Yankees in a surprise shakeup Tuesday and Yogi Berra was expected to be named manager on Thursday.

Hamey, who at 61 has spent more than half his 39 baseball years in the Yankee organization, fulfilled his wish of the past few years to retire.

Houk, who guided the Yankees to three pennants and two World Series championships during his three seasons as field boss, signed a four-year contract as general manager, largely for reasons of "security," he said.

President Dan Topping of the Yankees, who made the announcement, said that Houk's managerial successor already had been decided upon and will be announced at a press conference Thursday at noon EDT.

Berra Almost Certain

It was regarded almost certain that the new manager will be Berra, 38-year-old Yankee catcher who doubled as a coach during the past season. Both Topping and Houk dodged questions about the identity of the new manager and Berra made himself unavailable for comment.

Houk will start his new duties as general manager on Nov. 1. Hamey will stay on to work with Houk until the end of spring training in 1964. After that, Hamey and his wife will move to Tucson, Ariz., although he will continue to serve the Yankees "in a consulting and advisory capacity" for another five years.

Houk's promotion to general manager first was proposed to him on a rainy day in San Francisco during the 1962 World Series, Hamey revealed.

"To tell the truth, I didn't think he'd be interested," Hamey said. Houk mulled over the offer all winter and agreed during last spring training in Florida to accept it.

"It was not a spur-of-the-moment decision on our part or Ralph's" Topping said.

Candidates Meet Tonight In Howell

A compulsory candidates meeting will be held at 9:30 p.m. tonight in Howell Hall for all persons seeking an office in the fall elections.

The main purpose of the meeting is to acquaint candidates with the relevant provisions of the General Elections Law dealing with restrictions on campaign expenditures.

The only absences that will be excused are those caused by illness in the infirmary and such other excuses as approved by the Chairman of the Elections Board. Written absence excuses must be submitted to the Elections Board in the Student Government Offices, GM by 10 p.m. tonight.

Candidates not attending this meeting and not having approved excuses will be dropped as candidates. They may be reinstated by contacting Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hays at the Student Government Office or 308 Ruffin within 48 hours after the compulsory meeting and paying a $5.00 fine.

Persons seeking a class office as an independent candidate must submit a petition stating the office they seek and signed by themselves and 25 other members of their class.

Candidates for Honor Council seats who have not been endorsed by the Honor System Commission must also submit petitions. Petitioners must either be incumbent honor councilmen or must have participated in the Honor System Commission's training program for candidates

Petitions must state the seat of a particular judicial district the petitioner seeks.

In the case of Women's Council seats, it should be specified whether the seat is for a year or for half a year. The petition should be signed by the petitioner and 25 students living in the judicial district.

All petitions and nominations must also be submitted at the Student Government Offices or to Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hays at 308 Ruffin by 10 p.m. tonight.

The tumult and the shouting finally died down at 11 p.m. Tuesday night and the University Party and the Student Party emerged with 15 candidates each for class offices.

Hot floor battles featured the UP meeting, and the SP was a study in contrast. Both parties had close elections, and both had a few unopposed candidates.

The UP, meeting in Carroll Hall, had its hottest moments in the election for the Junior Class vice-presidency. Johnsye Massenburg, legislator and secretary of both the Freshman and Sophomore Classes,, edged out Jim Bunn after a half-hour floor battle.

The SP split almost evenly between Gene Barrier and Paul Chused for the Junior Class presidency. Barrier finally won out after extended speeches for both candidates. Chused was a near-unanimous nomination for the vice-presidency, defeating Richard Ross and Jeff Crowell.

The only run-off of the night was in the University Party, when Ken Traub defeated Tim Payne, Charles Garley and Bill Woodall for Freshman vice-president.

Other presidential nominees are Sammy Leggett (UP), who will oppose Jim Brane (SP) for the freshman class top spot, and Larry Ehrhart (UP), who takes on Bill Diehl (SP) for the sophomore class. Harrison Merrill (UP) will oppose Barrier for the junior class office.

Other junior class nominees are Judy Allen (UP) and Kay Hoyle (SP) for secretary, Susan Powell (SP) and Pat Wilson (UP) for treasurer and Cynde Wright (UP) and Matilda Gholson (SP) for social chairman.

Bernard Baldwin (UP) and Dick Baddour (SP) will contest the sophomore vice-presidency, Priscilla Patterson (SP) and Faryl Sims (UP) will oppose each other for secretary, Jerry Teele (UP) and Jeff Davis (SP) vie for the post of treasurer and Ruthie Parrott (SP) and Camilla Walters (UP) are candidates for the post of social chairman.

Other freshman nominees are Mickey Gamble (UP) and John Hedrick (SP) for vice-president, Mary King (SP) and Susie Warren (UP) for secretary, Jim Hubbard (SP) and Ken Traub (UP) for treasurer and Maureen Shannon (UP) and Ann Clemmons (SP) for social chairman.

Several independent candidates are also expected to enter the elections. These will be published in the DTH on Saturday.

Area Closed

The University's recreation area on Kerr Lake has been closed until further notice.

Walter Rabb, who has charge of the UNC facility, said the area had to be closed due to extremely hazardous fire conditions.

"What we need is a good soaking rain," Mr. Rabb said. The recreation area will remain closed until the fire danger has lessened considerably, he added.

SL To Meet Early Tonight

Student Legislature will consider only four bills in tonight's meeting in the Di-Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m., due to a conflict with the candidate's meeting, to begin at 9 p.m.

A resolution asking for an amendment to the UNC student constitution will be offered. If approved, it would authorize the Elections Board to place the proposed amendment on the ballot. The amendment, if passed, would delete several words from the portion of the constitution dealing with the IDC.

Another bill would allot $240 to the National Student Association for the formation of a Leadership Institute. The Institute would investigate methods in which student government could be operated more efficiently.

Campus Queens To Vie For Yack Beauty Title

More than 100 girls are expected to compete in the 1964 Yacketty-Yack beauty contest Tues., Oct. 29 in Memorial Hall at 7:30 p.m. Roy Armstrong, director of the Morehead Foundation and former admissions officer, will be the master of ceremonies.

The number of girls that will be in the court this year has been set at eight, plus the queen.

Late permission will be granted to all girls who are either in, or attending the contest.

Rehearsal for the Yack beauty contest will be Monday night, at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Attendance is compulsory for all contestants.

All contestants may have their hair done free by Town and Country Beauty Salon, but it is each girl's responsibility to call for her appointment, a Yack official said.

Decision Is Made In Private Meet

By PETE WALES

Students have been removed from the Student-Faculty Review Board, Dr. Gordon Cleveland, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, revealed Tuesday night.

The announcement, made before student leaders and members of the three student judicial councils, took the students by complete surprise.

The Board, created as an experiment by the faculty committee in 1956, handles all cases that are appealed from the Men's and Women's Councils.

It was composed of three or more faculty members, along with the President of the Student Body and the chairmen of both the Men's and Women's Councils.

Dr. Cleveland said that the Committee's power to make such a decision came from the University Administration Code approved by the trustees in 1957.

Final Authority

The Code delegates "full and final authority" in matters of student discipline to the chancellor and faculty.

Under the new organization presented by Dr. Cleveland, the following changes are now in effect:

(1)—The Review Board will be made up of a minimum of three faculty members and no students.

(2)—The chairman of the Faculty Committee on Discipline will be required to sit on each case.

(3) — Student representatives will be allowed to observe each case but can not examine witnesses.

(4)—Members of the press will be admitted if the defendant does not object.

(5) — The Dean of Men and all student observers will be dismissed during the deliberation of the case.

(6) — All requests for appeal will go directly to the Review Board. They have previously been made to the Chancellor who had the power to grant or deny requests.

"The Committee felt that it had responsibility in this area," Dr. Cleveland explained, "and it has come to conclusions, some of them reluctantly.

"The Committee tried to consider every possible aspect of review and to check due process.

"It felt that the mere presence of those who had a stake in student government and the Councils . . . might be prejudiced for the student.

Rights Of Defendants

"We are more concerned with the rights of the defendant than with the rights of students to sit on the Board.

"It's not a case of the faculty wanting more jurisdiction — it's within our jurisdiction — but rather it's a question of due process for the defendant.

"Every member of the Committee is deeply committed to the Honor System and Student Government."

Both Dr. Cleveland and Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey said the experiment of having a Student-Faculty Review Board was not in itself a failure.

"It was a success," Dr. Cleveland said. "But the members of the present faculty committee feel that it should never have been tried.

"This Board has been quite effective. In fact some of the faculty have commented that the students are occasionally better than the faculty members.

"We hope to restore some of

SG Reaction Is Surprise And Shock

Student leaders reacted with surprise Tuesday night to the announcement of changes in the Student-Faculty Review Board; surprise that the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline had acted without consulting students.

"I can't understand why there was no confrontation of the students in the formulation of this decision," said Mike Lawler, president of the student body.

"This was a decision the committee felt it had to make itself," Dr. Gordon Cleveland, chairman of the faculty committee, told students.

"We felt we had to take the responsibility. We felt there was sufficient reason to take these steps."

Chancellor William B. Aycock said he had not heard that the faculty committee was discussing the change until Tuesday morning.

"This is entirely the faculty's business. Their decisions in this area don't have to be okayed by either myself or President Friday."

Dr. Cleveland expressed the committee's unwillingness to discuss the situation with students because it had already made up its mind.

"The committee felt that it knew what it had decided ahead of time and that it would not be quite cricket to have negotiations when we knew the negotiations would not be in good faith.

"The committee has made its decision without negotiation and within the areas of its own jurisdiction.

"We were very much aware of the fact that there would be some objection to it."

Lawler expressed the feelings of several of the student leaders when he said:

"My reaction is a reaction to the process by which the decision has been reached.

"The content of the proposal itself should be discussed on the merits of that proposal."

Student Body Vice-President Bob Spearman objected to the committee acting in conflict with the Student Constitution.

"I am both shocked and alarmed at what they've done.

"The committee has made a decision to abrogate a section of the Student Constitution without a single word of consultation with student officials.

"The Student-Faculty Review Board was set up by the faculty committee in 1957 as a joint enterprise.

"Now the faculty has just decided to end this joint enterprise without a word of consultation with their partners."

Dr. Cleveland replied that since the faculty committee had originally set up the joint board under a trial basis, they now had the power to end the experiment.

He questioned the wisdom of the students in writing the Review Board into their Constitution, but he added: "It was done with the knowledge and the apparent good wishes of the committee at that time."

Lawler also expressed fear of a trend of similar unilateral de-

Redistricting Plan Hit By Rep. Osteen

By J. A. C. DUNN
In The Chapel Hill Weekly

Rep. William Osteen told the UNC Young Republicans Tuesday night that the redistricting bill passed last week by a special session of the Legislature was good; that the Constitutional amendment also passed in the special session was bad; that young Republicans were good; that one-party government was bad; and that in recent years the people of North Carolina have deserved the kind of representation they have gotten.

On the redistricting bill, he said: "Not the best, but I think it will pass the test in the Federal courts.

"But the Legislature went a step further and passed a Constitutional amendment." He called the "Little Federal" amendment, to be voted on in a Statewide referendum Jan. 14, perhaps the Legislature's most inequitable act, and explained its proponents' thinking:

"They say, 'This is what we need because it copies the Federal Congress.'"

The amendment would reduce the present 120-member House of Representatives to 100 members, one for each county; and increase the present 50-member Senate to 70, distributed by population.

"But the sponsors of the amendment overlooked one thing. The Federal government was not the autonomous government these advocates would have it be." The original union of 13 states intended the distribution of representation according to both population and geography to insure reservation of some powers to the states, some powers to the Federal government. The states, sovereign in their own boundaries, surrendered some powers to the Federal government, and vice versa.

"But the same argument doesn't apply to counties and states because counties are not autonomous. The counties are not entitled to representation — they ought to have it, of course, but they're not entitled to it, because they are not sovereign. They are creatures of the Legislature. They can't surrender some powers to the State government in return for keeping other powers, because they haven't any powers to surrender."

The proposed amendment, said Rep. Osteen, would improve Senate representation, but would harm House representation by eliminating the 20 "floater" representatives.

"The result would be that 19 per cent of the population of the State, in the least populated counties, could dominate any legislation in the State."

". . . By and large the people of North Carolina have gotten the kind of representation they deserve, because there is not very much interest in politics."

Telephone Company Ends Beeper Line 'Service'

The local phone company has apparently launched a counter attack against students who use the "beeper line."

The "beeper line" has been described thusly: All telephone calls that reach a busy number are channeled into a central circuit where the busy signal is produced.

Someone found that conversations could be carried on between callers while the busy signal beeps on endlessly in the background—and the number of possible connections is apparently limited only by those patient enough to listen.

The result has been a nightmare for the phone company and many of its customers.

Beginning early in the evening, and continuing until about midnight, dormitory residents, fraternity men, coeds and an occasional town resident have jammed the busy signal line with all types of conversation.

But, no more.

The local phone company has installed a special current that comes on when a busy signal is reached. It increases the loudness of the busy signal so that it is impossible to keep the reciever up to the ear without great discomfort.

Chapel Hill telephone manager John Cox said that the powerful busy signal would operate only during the night hours and would continue operating until the phone company discourages the practice.

"Students are about the only ones in on this" Cox said. "I guess they are enjoying it. But too many phones are being tied up and we had to do something to stop it."

Carolina Roundtable

Carolina Roundtable begins a new season on WUNC-radio tonight at 7 p.m., with a discussion on "The Educational Horizon, 1963-1964."

As in the past, listeners are invited to phone in questions to the panel while the program is on the air.

Dr. John S. Clayton, associate professor of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at the University of North Carolina will moderate the program which is in its fourth year. The panel will analyze the problems, goals, contributions, and short-comings of education on all levels with an emphasis on the needs of the pupils and adult citizens of North Carolina.

Featured panelists are Dr. W. W. Edmonds, principal of the Frank Porter Graham School of Chapel Hill; Dr. John C. Otts professor and director of graduate studies of UNC's School of Education; and Dr. Fred M. Weaver, secretary of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

COMMUNICATIONS

The Communications Committee of Student Government will meet this afternoon at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker I.

Plans will be made for John Motley Morehead Day and subcommittees will be set up. All members are urged to attend. Any who cannot should contact Fred Seely at 968-9062 between noon and 2 p.m.

HIT AND RUN

The Durham Police Department requests the nurse who gave first aid in the hit and run accident on the 15-501 bypass yesterday afternoon to contact Lieutenant Jones or officer Martin at the Durham Police Department.

LIBERAL ARTS

James G. Harvey of the Harvard School of Education will speak at two group meetings this morning in 204 Gardner.

Harvey will discuss the teaching program for a MA at Harvard. All interested liberal arts students are invited to attend.

Discipline Group Imitates Gag Law Methods

No University educator worth his mortar-board would appreciate being compared with the drafters of the Gag Law. Yet, by their actions as announced Tuesday, those faculty members responsible for drawing up the new Honor Council appeals procedure invite such comparison.

Out of the blue, the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline announced that students were being removed from the University's review board in favor of returning to the pre-1956 system, where the Faculty Executive Committee alone passed on appeals from student Honor Council decisions.

This may or may not be a wise move. We intend to study it carefully before commenting upon it. What was patently not a wise move, however, was the technique used in effecting this return to the old system.

The Faculty Committee simply decided that this was the way things ought to be, and that was that. There was not even an effort at consultation with student leaders—or, for that matter, with the faculty itself.

If this is not a thwarting of the democratic process, equally as high-handed and arbitrary as the methods employed in the quickie passage of the Gag Law, then we would like to know what is. For the patent assumption is that the faculty members who made this decision have considered all the angles and are aware of all the possibilities and ramifications involved in returning to the old system.

That, of course, is nonsense, no matter how wise the faculty members are. They are still human, and therefore susceptible to error or oversight.

Of equal importance, however, in this matter of how the change-over was effected, is the impression of bad faith it is bound to leave in the minds of many. We believe the faculty members were acting on the highest motivations and meant no slight to student leaders, but their actions make such a judgment arbitrary and justifiably far from unanimous.

If this matter is as important as the faculty members apparently believed, and as it has been so long in coming anyway, then what was there to be lost by consulting with student leaders to the end of reaching a fair, intelligent decision? If the case for revision of appeals procedure was as convincing as the faculty members would have us believe, then it would have carried anyway, so why all the secrecy?

Finally, what makes this whole matter of technique even more regrettable is the fact that the Faculty Committee's action was presided over by a man who ranks high not only on the campus, but within the County and the State, as attested by his election to the Board of Orange County Commissioners. Commissioner Gordon Cleveland, professor of political philosophy, ought to be having some second thoughts on this whole matter, if he already hasn't. And so, for that matter, ought the rest of the Faculty Committee.

Third Rate Dramatics From Faculty Council

Many questions are being asked about the way the Faculty Council has handled its Gag Law Resolution. Primary among the questions is why the faculty decided to withhold the text of its resolution until they are able to present it to the Board of Trustees next week. Spokesmen for the faculty tell us that the resolution is being kept under wraps because it might irritate the Board of Trustees to read something in the paper that they hadn't yet heard, and that unveiling the resolution at the board meeting will add impact to it.

Now we may be wrong, but we have never heard that the faculty had to clear all its actions and pronouncements with the Board of Trustees before they could make them public. If the faculty has decided this question to their own satisfaction, drawn up and passed a resolution, will it then keep the resolution secret if the trustees don't approve? We hardly think this is the case. The faculty has acted on public business and there seems to be no reason why their actions should not also be public.

We are fortunate to have an enlightened Board of Trustees, and it would never even consider the idea of stifling the opinions of the faculty. The State College Faculty Senate acted a long time ago, and immediately made its opposition to the law known. Why then does the UNC faculty feel it must wait to tell the Trustees what it has done before it tells the rest of us?

The second point they make is that their resolution will have more impact on the Trustees if it is sprung on them. We feel that the Faculty Council carries enough weight on its own not to have to play at third-rate dramatics to get their point across. It would seem that the resolution actually will lose some of its efficacy by the Council, in effect, saying 'here is what we believe if it is all right with you.'

Another question that is often raised is why the faculty took so long to act. The answer they give is that this was the first chance the Faculty Council had to act this year. Now, we are sure the faculty feels that this Gag Law is of major importance and constitutes a gross indignity to the good name of the University, and we would submit that a meeting should have been scheduled at the earliest possible moment to underscore just how strongly the faculty does feel on the matter. Waiting tends to put the resolution in the category of less important Council business. It obviously isn't.

Many people in this state have waited anxiously for the faculty to speak on this matter, and it seems grossly unfair for these people to speak only to each other. The faculty always demands freedom of speech, they have it, but don't speak. We don't advocate that they raise Hell on this issue since we aren't convinced that is the best approach, but if a faculty becomes afraid to raise Hell its university is in serious trouble.

When an administration fails its university, which ours neither has nor will, the faculty becomes the last line of defense of academic freedom. We have witnessed several occasions when that line of defense turned out to be a little spongy. We doubt that this would ever happen at Chapel Hill, but we have seen few, if any, encouraging signs as yet.

"We're Sure Overcoming That Old Reputation Of Being The Colossus Of The North"

Winds Of Change

By RALPH McGILL

Washington Notes: That there are changes of far-reaching implication and of immediate and profound impact in our own lives is every day evident. That the rest of the world is not spared this same experience is daily spread before us on the pages of our newspapers. Some of it comes in small news containers. Still others of these events are in the form of several actions, not always too obviously related.

The test ban treaty is a modest thing, promising only to abandon, until and unless aggression comes, atmospheric detonations of nuclear devices. But there are serious students of Soviet affairs who believe the Russians are preparing for some rather major changes in an effort to make their own system more nearly respond to the needs of their country and its future. Once the test ban is concluded, these long-time observers of the Soviet twists and turns believe there will be determined efforts to remove much of the cold war tension from the Western world so that the Soviets may build up their own resources and confront the problem raised by Peking.

These indicated changes do not necessarily mean the men who govern the USSR are directly concerned with the needs of their people. They have shown in the past that state needs come first. But this may be just what today's Soviet problem is — the whole apparatus of the state is in trouble. This does not mean that the people are restive. It does not even indicate that the Khrushchev regime is in jeopardy. It is agreed that Mr. Khrushchev's successor is settled upon and the Kremlin is prepared for that change-over when death comes for the chairman.

The Soviet problem is, as the various political economists view it, one of making the Soviet system fit the people and their allies and produce consumer goods of quality. Actually, these experts point out, things otherwise are very good for the Russians. They now are producing oil in increasing quantity and quality. They are being uncomfortably successful in getting this oil into world markets. The Kremlin gold supply is massive and they have no real problem in adding to their stockpile of this unique metal. The Soviet army is vast. Its submarine force is enough to cause a certain uneasiness.

But the Soviets have not been able to make their farm program produce what the country needs, and the consumer goods still retain too much shoddiness and inefficiency. The recent purchase of almost 300 million bushels of Canadian wheat was necessary — not so much to enable the Russians to have bread; there is enough wheat in this year's crop for that — but the Kremlin has admitted that wheat stocks are low. In addition, the satellite countries of Europe also are having crop inadequacies and will require help from Moscow. Not to be able to deliver this wheat would have been for the Krimlin a political calamity. Also, if the Chinese situation worsens, it will be necessary to have large wheat stocks in storage.

There are other straws in this Soviet wind. Aid to North Korea has about ceased. The Chinese must now pick up this burden. Russian experts to China are reaching the vanishing point. Purchases from Cuba, chiefly sugar have been stepped up, but Cuba remains a long way from the USSR, and maintaining the Castro economy may become, if it has not already done so, less and less of a political asset. There are evidences on the other side of this coin that Kennedy policy of strict supervision of the island and its trade is paying dividends.

Meanwhile, at home wheat growers are irritated, but interested, by the sale of Canadian wheat to Russia. Their interest already has reached Washington and the halls of the Congress. Would the American taxpayer like to be relieved of the burden of paying several billion dollars in storage costs? If both he and the U.S. grain farmer decide that putting surplus foods into the world market is not a bad thing, the results on the economy and on the political thinking would be many and varied.

The cold war is not going away. Russia remains a major power with enormous capacity, both economic and political. But she, like everyone else, is up against change and the need for revisions in her policies, both domestic and international. She is face to face with a Chinese dragon that will continue to snort fire until the present Peking regime is shaken down by economic distress and the realism of its people. This may take quite a while.

The winds of change and chance are blowing everywhere.

A POEM

By UNCLE TIPPING

i was talkin' to god yesterday about kindness and compassion.
we talked for hours.
god said — "I'll show you a good example, look — over there (he pointed)
i looked.
god said, "the little girl's name is Life."
she was cryin'.
god said, "watch this young man."
i watched.
The young man went over to the little girl and asked, "Why are you cryin'?"
"Because people abuse me and don't really care about what happens to me!"
The young man picked up Life in his arms and kissed away her tears.
From his "pocket of understanding" he brought out
"a red lollipop of caring" and gave it to Life.
she smiled.
she picked a rose (god's symbol of love) and gave it to the young man.
Holdin' hands, they walked away together.
i noticed the young man's face.
i whispered to god, "hey, god, i know him."
"course you do," said god, "he's an ATO at Carolina — folks call him the "non-conformist of the ATO's."
know who he is???? (God and I do!!)
god was happy — he said, "it's good to see someone love life."
. . . after this, i went back to my dorm, bought a Coke, and began to study . . . after all . . . isn't that why we are all here??

Rapid Turnover

By PETE WALES

The National Student Association and its annual summer congress face one basic problem: that of the rapid turnover of personnel.

The people who set the policies of this one American Student union are necessarily for the most part unfamiliar with their jobs because of lack of experience in its very complex operation. This is particularly true of the congress where delegates from member colleges and universities must draw up and vote on the policy that determines the nature of the association for the coming year.

Many of those I met this summer and I myself were new to the congress and the association. They were not prepared sufficiently to know how to get things done or how the power structure of the congress worked. In fact many of the second and third year people were also hard-pressed to keep up with the rapid pace set by the NSA leaders.

This feeling was reflected in numerous resolutions attempting to define and codify more precisely the nature of NSA and its goals. The NSA constitution is no more help to the novice in this area than the Constitution of the United States is to a foreigner trying to understand the U. S. Congress.

Also many delegates frequently wasted valuable time because of lack of knowledge of procedures and of the background of issues being discussed. Many issues were quite complex and the vast majority of delegates were forced to rely on the word of a few who were extensively informed on the matter at hand. As is to be be expected, some of the people relied on for information had strong prejudices in the situation, and a clear picture could not be attained. Nor was there time for the main body to look up the necessary information. Delegates could not know enough about the majority of issues handled to vote intelligently.

What usually happened in cases where the informed debaters were also the extremists on a given bill would be that the national officers would take the floor and would generally lead the moderate vote. This worked in this year's congress because the national officers, who are the best informed on the operation of NSA, were all intelligent, articulate and, most important, politically realistic.

NSA is often criticized for being a leftist organization and in this year's congress there was a very strong liberal contingent. There were few rightists attending and the majority were moderate liberals. The main danger of the liberal group was that they tended to present issues in black and white terms and would propose solutions that were totally unfeasible in social, political and economic terms. The measure of the capabilities of the NSA leadership was that they were able to curb the extremist resolutions and amendments and were able to guide the congress to taking strong but for the most part practical action.

The question in the minds of many Carolina delegates was whether next year's officers will be able to do this job. There was a general feeling that none of the major officers were extremely well qualified or particularly good leaders. However, they are untested and could not be expected to look good next to the outgoing leadership..

The general criticism to be drawn here is not that the new officers are no good, but that NSA will always be hard-pressed to come up with outstanding leaders who have the time and the interest to do the job. The national officers must take a year off from their studies with very little pay to perform their full-time jobs. It is difficult to find capable people with a working knowledge of the association who can make these sacrifices.

My overall impression at the end of the congress was amazement that so many really good and workable resolutions could come out of the hectic two weeks spent working on them. The experience for the individual delegate is tremendous and the problem for each of us is to communicate some of this experience back to our member campuses. Reports such as this will help, but the main link between the association and the individual campus is the NSA coordinator and his committees. It is through him that the programs and policies outlined in the resolutions passed at the congress are adapted and applied to his campus. It is at this level that NSA succeeds or fails.

The point is though that it can be a very great success and that a poll of national student opinion, such as this congress is, can be most valuable to a campus where the students and student government are as active as they are here at UNC.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

She's Back

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Today, Saturday, October 19, 1963, was a perfect day in more ways than one. I went over to the stadium, at the half, to see the bands perform, then watched the game for a while. The weather was gorgeous, the stadium was packed to the gun-wales, and we won in a walk over the favored Wolf Pack of UNC-State.

I hope the die-hards will now appreciate Coach Hickey and stop clamoring for his scalp because our team lost to Michigan. I think we had no business out there playing that old collosus team. We should stay in our conference and fight sombody our size.

When I left the stadium, I went as usual, to an open house at one of the fraternity houses. Two old grads came in and one of them began to abuse Kennedy. I said I liked Kennedy. That just set him wild.—"Kennedy was a communist—the worst man ever to have been in the White House, etc." I told him, "You don't discuss politics at a party, because people always get mad and disagreeable. You go to a party to enjoy yourself, not to get in a fight." He kept up his diatribe. I finally told him he was no gentleman or he would know better than to talk politics at a party. That got him. He and his friends sat down and were very demure for the remainder of the party.

I hoped I was going to get through one day without calling somebody on his manners. It looks like some people have always got to be behaving in such a way that I have to correct them, or bust!

A Tear

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Last Sunday night my roommate suggested that we should go to see The Marriage of Figaro at the Duke University Quadrangle. We arrived approximately 10 minutes before curtain time to find a huge mass of people milling around outside.. My only thought was that the movie had attracted this large number. There were whispers that no one without a Duke I.D. card would be allowed inside, but my friend and I remained from sheer hope. Eventually, the doors were opened and the crowd surged forth like their very lives depended on their entry into this theatre. Mike and I found seats far to the rear of the top balcony. Strangely enough, the stage was set for some sort of speaking program and not for a movie. Mike thought a minute and then whispered to me that the Marriage of Figaro had played Saturday; he had read the wrong paper.

It was only 7:00 p.m., so he suggested that we leave before the program began. I had begun to notice the crowd, and my curiosity was aroused. There seemed to be an undefined tenseness in the air, and there was an overly large number of colored folk in attendance. An old colored gentleman sat quietly to my right, and since I was interested in knowing what I had come to see, I asked him about the program. He turned to me with moist eyes and said, "I'm sorry, sir, I don't know either." His answer compounded my curiosity ten-fold so I decided definitely to stay and see what it was all about.

Finally, four speakers took their seats, and I knew. So did the old Negro, for a small tear ran down his wrinkled cheek as Governor George Wallace was being introduced.

the benefits of having the students' opinions by having them remain on as observers."

Under the new system, the observers would not be allowed to speak or ask questions unless they were heard as witnesses.

Dr. Cleveland said that the faculty committee had not been under any new outside pressures in its decision, but that it had been considering the change for "the last two or three years."

Reverts To Old System

"The Committee in 1956 set up the joint Review Board on a trial basis and the present Committee wants to revert back to the old system.

"It is unfortunate that the students wrote the joint Board into the Constitution in the form of an amendment in 1957.

"It was done with the knowledge and apparent good wishes of the faculty committee. But the committee was still considering the measure on a trial basis.

"The question is whether this should have been done . . . whether the faculty was in a position to delegate something like this to the Student Constitution.

"It was essentially an illegal amendment, if there can be such a thing."

On the procedure for requesting an appeal, Dr. Cleveland said:

"In a sense this is automatic review. If the defendant's argument for appeal is too far-fetched, I doubt his appeal will get through.

"The Dean of Men can serve to keep down the number of the reviews if everyone decides to appeal his case.

"Of course there is always some chance that an appellant may come out of a review with a stiffer sentence."

cisions by the faculty developing.

"What has shocked myself and other students is the process for the decision," he said.

"This is not a reaction to this decision as an isolated instance. Much of my reaction is based on the rationale for this procedure as it has appeared in several other instances.

"To many students this is a pattern, and it is the pattern that has caused the reaction.

"This pattern challenges the students' faith in student self-government.

"There is no question about where the ful and final authority lies.

"But the spirit and not the legalism of the institution is paramount. The two cannot be divided this much."

Lawler added that he had planned to set up a committee on judicial reforms later this week. The committee would include faculty and administration advisers. One of the topics to be dealt with was the Student-Faculty Review Board.

Several students felt that further reforms and work in general to be done by Student Government would be retarded by this action of the faculty committee.

To this Dr. Cleveland replied that Student Government had been presented with a "fait accompli."

He urged student leaders to devote their efforts to explaining the decision to the students and to repealing the section of the Student Constitution involved.

"Actually, you're being better protected somewhat this way . . . but then maybe you don't want to be protected.

"We felt that we were acting in the best interests of Student Government."

In Gear Now, Heels Host Strong Pfeiffer

By RON LOGAN

Still gathering momentum after sweeping to two straight impressive wins, North Carolina's soccer team battles a strong Pfieffer College at 3 o'clock today on Fetzer Field.

The big Blue of Carolina jelled in the second half of last Thursday's game with N.C. State, and they are now playing the impressive brand of soccer that was predicted of them at the start of the season.

A quick, aggressive starting line has made a world of difference between the team which suffered losses to Navy and Davidson and the one which overpowered Washington University and State College.

Coach Marvin Allen's Tar Heels will be starting the same lineup which performed against State —center forward Pete Blake, insides Drew Murphy and Harbie Moore, wings Marty Krumming and Jim Talbot, fullbacks Park McGinty and Charlie Battle, halfbacks George Beim, Bill Haywood, and Steve Painter and goalie Buddy Siegel.

Pfeiffer, coached by Nick Lefko, will field one of its better teams, and among their victories was a convincing win over State College.

"I was most pleased with our performance in our last game, and I hope that our sophomores continue to show rapid improvement," commented Coach Allen.

"Marty Krumming, Harbie Moore, Drew Murphy, and Tom Roberts all played a fine game for us. Murphy has adapted well after his switch from center forward, Moore and Krumming have added a lot to our offense, and Roberts filled in well after our goalie Buddy Siegel became ill," he continued.

Senior Frank Lankford, the only man who will be unable to play, reinjured his left knee in the training room early this week and will be out until the Virginia game next week. He injured the same knee last season and the State game was his first action this year.

He was just working himself into good shape and impressed the coaches with his progress. Last Thursday he played about half the game and showed flashes of the form which earned him a starting spot in each of the past two seasons.

If Carolina comes through with a win as expected this afternoon, the Heels should be in a good position to make a run for the conference title. The biggest hurdles will be Duke and Maryland's defending conference champs.

Although the Terps were runnerup to national champ St. Louis U. last year, UNC will have its best chance in several years to topple the mighty Chesapeake Bay crew.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

SOMEONE ONCE SAID you can't please all of the people all of the time. The Daily Tar Heel, daily, does a pretty good job of proving it — to the opposite extreme.

Chuck Erickson, Jesse Helms, motherhood — all have been taken to issue at one time or another by this paper, and all have fought back yelling "foul," "communists," and other probably-factual epithets.

This year, the sports department made up its collective minds that the intramural program, long the doormat of advertising capitalists, news-editing morons and countless other creeps who fill up the sacred spaces of the fourth page, would receive the coverage it so urgently wants in its capacity as doormat of the advertising capitalists, news-editing morons, etc.

We decided that in addition to regular stories much of the time on intramural sports, we would have the scores of all the games published the next morning after they had been played.

Never before has so much outraged wrath fallen upon such great and noble intentions.

Poison pen letters, drugged apples and sincere threats to our lives have been only a few of the dangerous incidents we have encountered on the way to covering murals.

Now, guys, you must understand it's just not as easy as you think.

There are Alexander Playboys, Alexander Bunnies and Alexander Poobahs. There are Ehringhaus A Skcums (SMUCKS spelled backwards) and Ehringhaus B Knights and Ehringhaus A Horns and Ehringhaus C Extras. There are Victory Village Belchers and stacy Studs and Teague Terrors and Joyner Giants and Lewis Lions. There are Winston Reds and Town Lodgers and Mangum Redskins.

There are Parker Panthers and Parker Playmakers; Everett Grossmen and Everett Hustlers and Everett Rogah (and you know what that stands for); Avery Antics and Avery Admirals. There are Craige A Crusaders and Craige B Casanova, and Craige B Steelers and Craige A GDI's. There are Aycock Aardvarks and Aycock Aardwolfs.

There are Old West Packers and Old East Primogenitors and Grimes Gallantones and Grimes Gigolos and Graham Gargolyes and Town Rats and Manly Rats and WHEW!

That's just the dorms.

Scores Travel A Rough Road

This situation, added to the fact that the final scores go through about fifteen people (some of them probably deaf mutes) before they reach the printer, adds up to mistakes — some of the time.

However, the critics point out, we are wrong more often than we are right which may be right more often than wrong. (Note I say "we" because "I" am never wrong).

In one case earlier this year, we really hit it off with Ruffin, which goes by the name of the "Rogues" when they take the field of battle.

One Rogue was waiting in the office for us one afternoon. Machine-gun poised at our bellies, he proceeded to inform us that every game his team had played up to that time had been incorrectly reported in the paper.

Gosh, Jack, we didn't mean it. But a thorough check showed that Ruffin's first two games were entirely wrong (one being a forfeit win for the Rogues that the DTH gave to Graham) and that the third had also been somewhat mistaken.

Seems Parker beat Ruffin 18-6 instead of the reported 18-0. Aw, come on buddy. Give us a break.

An incorrect Grimes-Navy contest (and don't ask me WHICH Navy team — THEY can't even make up their minds which are the first and second teams) was also published. Navy beat Grimes, 21-0. Grimes did not beat Navy 21-0. And we certainly are NOT partial to the dormitories, for Pi Lamb did NOT beat Sigma Chi's by forfeit. The mural office did NOT advise Sigma Chi's manager of the game, so it was played after rush, NOT forfeited.

Just the other day, Old East did NOT bet Avery's Admirals 13-8. Avery's Admirals beat Old East 13-8 (I think).

And finally, the smart guys are starting to come around now and ask if I'm going to predict the winners of the mural games. Buddy, a better prediction would be whether they're even going to PLAY the mural games.

But this guy, tongues in mouthes, asked who I was picking, in the fraternity race. So, trying to feign knowledge of who the heck was IN the race, I checked the morning paper (a faulty source of there ever was one), saw Pi Delt had beaten TEP 61-0, and named Pi Delt.

Well, he snickers, says I'm quite mistaken, and goes out and has his SAE mates beat the ½y. $) ..* %$ out of TEP again. It was 64-0 this time. Smart Guy.

This is the kind of thing that tries the soles of people misfortunate enough to work up in the confused Hellpot that is the DTH.

Law School I Clinches Title With 9-1 Win

By AL KAPLAN

Law School I defeated Med School 2, 9-0, Monday, to clinch first place in grad division's League II. Ron Randall's TD and Sam Sullivan's safety were all the scoring.

In another grad game Physics made it two in a row, as the Fiends edged Law School III, 7-6. Charley Cook scored a touchdown and Sam Sullivan a PAT for Physics' 7. Law's six came on Dave Irvine's tally.

Bob Cornwall provided the only scoring, a touchdown, to lead the Foobahs of Alexander to a 6-0 win over the Winston Reds. The victory gave Alexander a 2-1 record and sole possession of first place in their league.

SAE continued to win and the scoring duo of Brooks Reed and Bob Segrest continued to produce as Phi Kappa Sig was the victim this time, 33-6. Reed and Segrest each scored two touchdowns to preserve SAE's undefeated record.

AKPsi won its first game of the year, in overtime, without scoring a point, by defeating Pi Kappa PHi. 1-0.

Scott Booth scored two touchdowns and Joe Wagoner three PATs as the Aycock Aardwolfs overwhelmed the Joyner Giants 35-0.

Zeta Psi knocked ATO out of the unbeaten by upending them 3-0. Zeta Psi's scoring came on Sam Williams TD and a safety by Sam Thompson. ATO now has a record of 2-1, while Zeta Psi is still unbeaten at 3-0.

In other games, Chi Phi slipped past Lambda Chi, 19-13. Alex Little, Ken Wilkenson and Tom Clark all scored touchdowns for Chi Phi. Jeff Ward and Bill Mittendorf tallied TDs for Lambda Chi.

In another close game, the Joyner Jokes shut out Victory Village-1, 6-0, on Mary Pack's touchdown.

This week marks the last in the tag football regular season. Beginning next week championship playoffs will begin. The top two teams in each league will compete.

UNC Runners Walk To Win

The UNC cross-country team swept to its fifth victory in as many starts this season by taking the first four places in an 18-43 rout of South Carolina here yesterday

The UNC freshmen also scored a 22-38 win over USC.

With star sophomore James Meade taking a breather before next week's big meet with Duke, Art Maillet finished first with a 21:13. It was the first meet over UNC's new four-mile course, and Coach Joe Hilton called it "a pretty fair time."

Jerry Smith, Jim Folk, and Bob Bennett finished second, third and fourth respectively, all breaking 22 minutes. Charles Leflerin eighth rounded out Carolina's

With their victory, the Harriers advanced another step towards an undefeated season, the Duke meet a week from Thursday holding the key. "We should know after that one," said Hilton. "how good our chances are of going unbeaten. Duke beat Maryland about the same as we did, and should be real tough.

UNC To Host Debaters Today

By FRED SEELY

If anyone has any questions about medicine in America, they surely can be answered this weekend.

For the North Carolina High School Debating Union is in town —125 strong. They are here to discuss the topic, "Problems in American Medicine," chosen as this year's theme.

Formal debate is conecerned with only one topic through the year. The present one was chosen last December by a national committee and will be the problem area debated by high school students throughout the United States. This weekend's conference is to familiarize students with the various ways in which to debate the topic and will provide a forum for an exchange of ideas.

Delegates will arrive today, will be welcomed to the campus by Mike Lawler, president of the student body, will have a picnic lunch at the Forest Theater and then will move on to more serious business.

Breaking up in small groups, the delegates will retire to Peabody Hall to discuss the problems of the debate. They will be housed in the Carolina Inn, dormitories and fraternities.

Discussions will continue Saturday morning and the conference will be climaxed at luncheon at the Carolina Inn, where the delegates will hear Dr. Robert Ross of UNC.

And while the delegates are here, they have the opportunity to receive first-hand help from one of the top debating teams in the nation—UNC.

Under the direction of Dr. Donald K. Springen, the Carolina debate team has been acclaimed as "one of the best five teams in the east." In their first meet, UNC finished in a tie with Duke for second place. The tournament, held at Davidson, was won by Washington and Lee and attracted 15 teams.

COACH SPRINGEN

"We have a limited budget which greatly hampers our work," said Springen, "but the boys have done an excellent job in the past and I'm sure that this team will be just as good."

Student government finances the team to the tune of $2,100.

"As far as I can tell, Carolina is the only debate team to be supported just by student government money," Springen commented. "Most of the other schools are backed at least in part by their administrations."

The administrations at Wake Forest and Duke each support their team heavily, Wake getting $10,000 and Duke $6,000. Carolina's money is used exclusively for traveling expenses, and none goes for salaries.

The members of the team miss some 15 days of class during the year, more than any athletic team. Springen must accompany the team wherever it goes, as he has no assistant and each entry must provide a judge.

"There are two divisions in the American Forensic Association—varsity and novice," said Springen. "Anyone who has never participated in intercollegiate debate is eligible for the novice team, no matter what year they are in school.

"We have about 26 students on the novice team this year and 12 on the varsity. Six of the varsity are members of Delta Sigma Rho, the national honorary debating fraternity."

Informal debates are being held three nights a week in order that Springen may select his best four novice debators for next week's tournament at Wake Forest, which will attract some 75 teams, including Northwestern, Dartmouth and Harvard.

"We can't afford to take more than four along, and we will only stay over one night in order to cut down expenses," commented Springen.

The team had 65 invitations this year, but has only been able to accept nine due to lack of expense money. The first meet (the one at Davidson was just for practice) will be held at South Carolina Nov. 7-9. The team will journey to New York University, Harvard, Annapolis and West Point before the year is out.

Haywood Clayton, a senior from Mooresville, is the president and unquestionably the top debator. He has received the coveted "excellent debator" award at several meets, and has been on the first team since his sophomore year. George Carson of Elkin is the vice-president, Charles Heatherly of Candler serves as secretary and Dick Brodeur of Clearwater, Fla., is the treasurer.

The novice team has five scheduled debates, their longest trip being to Randolph Macon. Other meets will be held at Davidson, Wake Forest, Appalachian State College in Boone and Duke.

The Duke-Carolina rivalry is just as strong in debate as in football and basketball. The two schools annually dominate the ACC tournament, to be held this year at South Carolina in January.

"But this may be our year," said Springen. "Duke is just one small obstacle on the way to the national championship."

Opera Concert Tonight

The University's newly formed "Opera Workshop" will give its first public performance at a concert sponsored by the North Carolina Music Teachers Association at Hill Hall Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

The Opera Workshop will perform the second act of Verdi's "La Traviata."

"We are performing this act because it is a wonderful vehicle for three splendid singing actors and because it has such a wealth of fine solo and ensemble numbers in it," said Wilton Mason, professor of music and director of the Opera Workshop.

Rebecca Carnes of Chapel Hill will portray the soprano role of Violetta. In the tenor role of Alfredo Germont will be Wayne Zarr of the UNC Music Department, the new director of both the University Chorus and the Chapel Hill Choral Club. This will be Mr. Zarr's first singing appearance since he has been here.

Burt Adams of Chapel Hill will portray the baritone role of Giorgio Germont, father of Alfredo. Mr. Adams did this same role when a full performance of the opera was given here in 1961 with Phyllis Curtin in the leading role of Violetta.

Others in the cast will include Martha Gibbs of Greensboro and Joe Turpin of Hickory.

The performance will be staged complete with costumes. The members of the cast have been spending the past three weeks in rehearsal for the performance.

The next performance of the newly formed Opera Workshop will be in January when the workshop will perform Hindemith's modernistic, comic opera, "Hin und Zuruck," and "The Lowland Sea," a modern American opera based on folk themes by Alec Wilder.

In addition to the performance by the Opera Workshop, the NCMTA-sponsored concert will also feature a performance by the North Carolina String Quartet, and a performance by Eugene Mauney, organist of St. Stephens Episcopal Church at Goldsboro.

The concert is open to the public, without charge.

Student Leaders Are Upset With Judicial Change

Plan Meeting With Trustees On Monday

By PETE WALES

Several past Student Government officials have expressed their strong reaction and a special meeting of the subcommittee of the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees has been announced concerning the recently announced changes in the judicial review board.

Student Body President Mike Lawler announced at a meeting of student leaders yesterday that Frank M. Parker, chairman of the subcommittee of the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees, will contact members of the subcommittee for a special meeting Monday at 2:30 p.m. or one hour after the regular meeting of the Committee.

Hill Yarborough, chairman of the full Committee, will announce the special meeting Monday morning at the regular meeting and will request the full Committee's attendance.

The special meeting will be an executive session. No news of the proceedings will be released unless Parker or Yarborough consent.

"This is in no way to be interpreted as an appeal or petition to the Visiting Committee," Lawler said. "But we feel that the pattern of events is of sufficient gravity that the trustees should be aware of student attitudes.

"I am extremely appreciative of the deep concern of men like these for the University and the forum that they have provided for the expression of student concern."

In other discussion at the student meeting, Vice-President Bob Spearman pointed out that the faculty committee's basis for the changes was the "full and final authority" clause of the University Administration Code, approved by the Trustees in 1957.

The Administration, Spearman said, interpreted this clause as an organic change in the relation between Administration and students.

"However, we feel that this clause was not a change but a clarification. The purpose was to cut off appeals going to the Chancellor and the Governor.

"We feel that the same traditions of mutual cooperation still apply."

As news of the recent change dropping students from the Student-Faculty Review Board

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Khrushchev Offers Fidel Massive Aid

MOSCOW (UPI) — Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev in a "Dear Comrade Fidel" letter Thursday offered Cuba massive "free" aid to alleviate hardships caused by Hurricane Flora.

The official Tass news agency revealed the offer and said some of the aid will come from Soviet supplies already stockpiled in Cuba, ranging from tinned meats to clothing.

Eight Feared Dead In Plane Crash

SAIGON, South Vietnam (UPI) —A U.S. Air Force C123 transport plane carrying four Americans and four Vietnamese on a flare-dropping mission crashed and burned Thursday in Communist-infested territory south of Saigon. An American military spokesman said "there was no evidence of survivors."

The spokesman said the plane went down in Vinh Binh Province, 65 miles south of here, about 2 a.m. The wreckage was "scattered over a wide area." What caused the crash was not known here.

Greek Honored With Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM (UPI)—The 1963 Nobel Prize for literature was awarded Thursday to a Greek poet and diplomat, Giorgos Seferiades, 63, for verses that symbolized his nation's desire for freedom during the dark days of the Nazi occupation in World War II.

Seferiades was the first Greek ever to win a Nobel Prize. A citation lauded him for carrying on the classical heritage of Greece with "the unique thought and style and beauty of his language."

Peace Talks Offered In Morocco

MARRAKECH, Morocco (UPI) —King Hassan II of Morocco offered Thursday to meet Algerian President Ahmed Ben Bella for peace talks anywhere with no strings attached. As he spoke, Moroccan and Algerian troops were reported locked in battle on the disputed Sahara frontier.

Diplomatic sources in Algiers said the United States has appealed to Ben Bella to agree to a negotiated settlement of his border conflict with Morocco.

Labor Leader Slams Prime Minister

LONDON (UPI) — Labor leader Harold Wilson accused Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home Thursday of stupefying arrogance in postponing the next session of parliament until Nov. 12.

Wilson said he was using the delay to "de-Stalinize" the Conservative party's political record as Nikita S. Khrushchev rewrote Communist party history.

Goldwater: A Hard Worker

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, (R-Ariz.), said Thursday that a man would be a "damn liar" if he said he would not accept the presidential nomination if offered by the GOP convention.

Goldwater denied he was a presidential candidate "officially," however, and said, "I am just a good hard Republican worker."

President Outlines 'Pitfall'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy Thursday pointed out to a group of Northern Democrats the "Pitfall" he believes awaits them if they persist in backing a stronger Civil Rights bill than the administration proposed.

Intensifying his efforts in the civil rights battle, the President met for 40 minutes with Democratic members of the House Judiciary Committee who are backing a measure that neither the administration nor congressional leaders believes can get through the House.

There was no immediate indication that the President had swayed any of the rebellious members of his party.

One northern Democrat said he might change his mind if a "real" alternative were offered. A number of others said they were determined to hold out for the stronger bill.

Construction Begins

Twenty Million Dollar Elbow Room

By KERRY SIPE

Work has begun on a long-range construction project designed to improve campus facilities in 14 different areas at a cost of $20,653,200, University Business Manager Arthur Branch said this week.

Immediate plans include construction of a new cafeteria, a new men's residence hall, an undergraduate library, renovation of the Wilson Library, construction of a new student union building, additions to patient care and child development units of the University Hospital, an auditorium addition to Woollen Gymnasium, additions to several classroom buildings, a new student supply store, and improvement of the steam heating system.

Foremost on the list of improvements is the construction of a new $1,100,000 air-conditioned cafeteria plant. The new dining hall, to be completed by July 1965, "will be the most contemporary building on the entire campus," reported Food Service Manager George Prillaman. Prillaman and his associates have spent more than two years gathering ideas for the 46,500 sq. ft. structure.

Outstanding features of the building include a student lounge on the first level and an efficient system of "scrambled" serving lines, said to increase food-serving time by 250 per cent. A maximum of 3,000 students can be served at each meal, said Prillaman. The new cafeteria will have a seating capacity of 1,063 as compared with the 900 seats of Lenoir Hall's combined facilities.

A nine-story, 925-man residence hall will be constructed on the south side of the campus at a cost of $2,544,000, in anticipation of a sharp increase in University enrollment in the near future. The building will have space for a lounge and a library-study room and will resemble Craige and Ehringhaus Dormitories in design.

A 60,000 sq. ft. undergraduate library will be built adjacent to Lenoir Hall on the site now occupied by Bingham Annex. The Undergraduate Room of the Wilson Library is not meeting the needs of undergraduate study, Branch said, in explanation of the project. Open bookstacks will make materials readily available for use by the undergraduate, he said.

Renovation and partial air-conditioning of the bookstacks, Technical Processes Room and Social Science Reading rooms of the Wilson Library are already under way.

In order to provide facilities for social and service organizations that Graham Memorial cannot capacitate, a new $2,000,000 Student Union will be constructed. In addition to study rooms, recreation facilities, and meeting rooms, the new building will feature a bookstore, a postal substation and a snack bar.

The total area of the present hospital and school of medicine facilities will be more than doubled by the addition of a 215,000 sq. ft. Ambulatory Patient Care Center and a development center for emotionally disturbed children. Plans for these additions are still in the preliminary stage, Branch reported.

The lack of an auditorium large enough to seat a majority of the student body has long been a drawback to the University, Branch said in explanation of a proposed 65,500 sq. ft. addition to Woollen Gym. The addition will be an auditorium capable of seating 9000 persons and will more ably provide the lecture and entertainment facilities now served through Memorial Hall.

Extensive expansion renovation and improvements are being made in Wilson Hall for Zoology, Davie Hall for Psychology, MacNider Hall for Public Health, and Old Philips Hall for math and physics. Plans include the air-conditioning of new classrooms and more modern laboratory facilities.

The University Booketeria, now in the basement of Steele Hall, will be relocated in a new $500,000 building. Construction will include a duplicating department for the use of faculty and staff.

Some $1,380,000 in additions will be made to the outmoded heating and steam piping systems of the University. The additions are expcted to provide better heating service for the entire campus.

Branch said that less than half of the total cost of the 14-point project will be provided by the State. He said that a raise in tuition will be necessary to make the remainder of the cost self-liquidating to the University.

Newsday Editor Urges Compensatory Education

Mark Ethridge, speaking to the North Carolina School Boards Association in Memorial Hall Wednesday, made a strong plea for "compensatory education" for "environmentally handicapped."

"We must help the child who comes from a poor environment," he said. "They often fail to receive the stimulation which children of higher-income families get, and for this reason they are at a great disadvantage when entering school.

"Educators are now saying that schools have a responsibility for making special efforts for the environmentally handicapped," said the former chairman of the board of the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Ethridge is presently a member of the UNC School of Journalism, serving temporarily as editor of the Long Island, N. Y. Newsday.

In urging the new program, Ethridge recognized a shrinking market for unskilled labor, a situation that leads to vicious competition with radical overtones.

"The confrontation of low income white with low income Negro for increasingly meager opportunities for work is the stuff of which bloody conflict is made.

"The Negro is being squeezed as perhaps never before by the shrinkage of farm and unskilled work. In the scramble for the remaining work, his white counterparts are winning out," Ethridge said.

However, he added, "In this time of racial clash and conflict, it is too easy to lose sight of this larger crisis of the undereducated. Perhaps the real meaning of the Negro revolt we have been facing is to be found in this condition.

"The issue, therefore, is by no means a Negro question alone. It is a question of the kind of life which millions of Americans will lead — regardless of racial, ethnic or regional origin.

North Carolina's controversial Speaker Ban Law "does not accord with the tradition of the University of North Carolina," journalist Mark Ethridge said Wednesday.

In a television interview following his address to the 500 delegates of the North Carolina State School Board Association, Ethridge said, "The University is a place of education, and you don't have freedom of education when you proscribe anyone from speaking."

Di Phi: 'End Vietnam Aid'

The Di-Phi Senate voted 8-2 Tuesday to end U.S. monetary aid to South Vietnam.

The resolution favored a withdrawal of aid unless democratic reforms in the Diem government were made immediately.

Those favoring complete withdrawal argued that American support of the oppressive Diem regime would hurt U.S. prestige among the Vietnamese. Also, the present policy violates the Geneva Conference Decisions of 1954.

Others held that withdrawal of all aid would leave South Vietnam open to Communist domination. Further, it would violate the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty of 1954 which pledged U.S. support to the Diem government against any armed aggression.

Opposing views on whether American financial and military aid should be stopped entirely were compromised in the bill.

The resolution was voted upon after being amended twice through lengthy parliamentary wrangling. It was passed by the chamber, 16-4.

New members, Jim Harris and Abdo Bardawil, were inducted into the Society following the debate.

Rusk Will Ease Fears Caused By The 'Big Lift'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk left here Thursday for a three-day visit to Germany during which he hopes to ease fears there that the United States may be planning significant troop withdrawals from Europe.

Rusk meets Friday in Bonn with the new chancellor, Ludwig Erhard, and is also scheduled to call on former Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. Officials said he hopes to convince the Germans that the United States, despite some indications to the contrary, has no intention of reducing its combat strength in Europe.

Rusk, his aides said, also plans to stress this theme in a major address Sunday in Frankfurt, where he will participate in ceremonies honoring the late Gen. George C. Marshall.

The secretary left for New York early in the afternoon and was scheduled to depart from New York's Idlewild Airport at 11 p.m. EDT. Earlier in the evening he gave an off-the-record talk to a group of New York businessmen. Thursday afternoon he delivered an address at the dedication of a new building in New York for the Institute of International Education.

In his dedicatory speech, Rusk stressed the importance of student and teacher exchanges between nations. He said they help build "the world of peace, justice and fraternal friendship envisaged by the United Nations charter."

He said there were 64,000 foreign students in the United States this year and by 1970 the number may increase to 120,800.

Before leaving Washington Rusk discussed some of the things he hoped to accomplish in Germany.

He told newsmen at Washington Airport here, "I will explain to the Germans that we are fully meeting our NATO commitments and intend to do so. And I hope very much that all other members will do so too."

Asked whether he would specifically reassure Chancellor Erhard and other officials that the United States plans no early cutback of U.S. forces in Germany, Rusk replied, "I don't think any reassurance is necessary. Look ious to lay at rest German fears at what we've got there."

The State Department is anxon the question of American military strength in Europe before Erhard comes here in late November for talks with President Kennedy.

The need for clarification of U.S. policy first arose after a Saturday speech by Deputy Defense Secretary Roswell L. Gilpatric in which he indicated troop reductions were in prospect.

He told a Chicago meeting of United Press International editors that in the future the United States "should be able to make useful reduction in its overseas military expenditures."

German official and press concern sparked by this speech was intensified this week by the "Big Lift" exercise in which an armored division was flown from the United States to Germany within three days. This aroused speculation that U.S. forces in Germany and elsewhere in Europe would be cut back since troops could quickly be sent from the North American continent in an emergency.

The State Deartment already has explained to the German government that Gilpatric's remarks, which were approved by the White House over State Department objections, foreshadowed only small "readjustments" in troop strength which might become possible through technological advances which increase firepower.

TEACHER EXAMS

College seniors planning to teach may take the National Teacher Examinations February 15, according to Educational Testing Service.

Scores on the Examinations are used by many school districts for employing new teachers, and by several states for granting certificates, or licenses.

Fugitive Gives Up

A former Carrboro resident, who has been sought for simple assault in connection with hitting a Student Peace Union picketer last April 11 walked into the Chapel Hill police station yesterday and gave himself up.

According to Police Chief W. D. Blake, Roy Lee Merritt came in with his father and surrendered to police. The assault charge has been pending against him six months.

Merritt allegedly walked up to Paul Hutzler, an SPU member who was participating in the picketing of the College Cafe, and struck at him.

Hutzler avoided the blow, Blake said, and Merritt hit Hutzler's sign. Neither was injured.

Merritt was arrested at the scene by Police Lt. C. E. King. As King was walking Merritt to the police station, Merritt broke loose and ran.

Police said that Merritt has been out of town since the incident, but couldn't be extradited. Simple assault isn't covered by extradition proceedings.

Merritt is in his early 20's and has a record of misdemeanors, police said.

He was released on $50 bond. He will be tried in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court October 29.

CORRECTIONS

There were several errors in the list of class officer candidates printed in yesterday's DTH.

Sammy Kellet (UP) and Jim Brame (SP) are the candidates for freshman class president. Ken Traub is the UP candidate for freshman treasurer.

Cydne Wright is the UP candidate for junior class secretary and Judy Allen is the UP candidate for junior class social chairman.

$17,174 GRANT

Dr. Irvine R. Hagadorn of UNC has been awarded a $17,174 grant from the National Science Foundation for study of hormone producing cells in the brain. He is an assistant professor of zoology.

SG Secretary Needed Now

An opening for position of temporary executive secretary of the Student Government has been announced by Sam Himes, chairman of the selection committee.

Qualifications: 25-60 years old, office experience, mimeographing ability, familierity with the workings of Student Government, talent for organization and a pleasant personality.

The temporary executive secretary works from 2-5 p.m., Monday-Friday, at $100 per month, with a two-week vacation.

Interested persons are asked to fill out a State application form, available at the Student Government office — telephone 942-1463. These applications must be returned to the SG office, Himes said.

Applicants are required to attend an interview conducted by the selection committee on Monday 4:30-6:30.

Members of the selection committee are: Sam Himes, UP legislator Gayle Ragland, SL clerk; Bonnie Hoyle, SB secretary; Mrs. Helen Hammond, YWCA secretary; Arthur Hayes, SP legislator; and Dr. Rollie Tillman, professor in School of Business Administration.

Dean Luxon and News Management

We have always found it difficult to understand how an honest, intelligent man can preach one thing and practice another. Still, it happens all the time.

Take the case of Journalism Dean Norval Luxon, a man for whom we customarily have the utmost respect. Even the Dean, however, falls victim to that disease mentioned above on occasion.

The latest occasion came Tuesday, after the Faculty Council adjourned and he was asked for his comments, if any, on the resolution which the Council had just passed behind closed-doors concerning the Gag Law.

The Dean muttered something about a good reporter observing release dates, the obvious inference being that the reporter should go along with the Faculty Council's desire to keep the contents of the resolution secret until it is presented to the full board of UNC trustees next Monday.

This is not the first time the Dean has reacted like a regulation-bound administrator rather than the good newspaperman he basically is. Last year a reporter got word that Mark Ethridge was due to join the Journalism School's staff, but the Dean was similarly reluctant to discuss the matter, although he was quick to point out that all appointments to the faculty must first be approved by the Administration and the Trustees.

The point here is that observing release dates and administrative procedures, although important, is far from being one of a reporter's most desirable virtues. We regard enterprise — resourceful digging — as the newsman's highest talent. We are sure the Dean does too. The fact that he is in a position where his two roles of administrator and newspaperman conflict, however, is no excuse for him to throw cold water on the enterprise of other, younger newspapermen.

If the Dean is in a position where he cannot properly comment upon a matter, he is perfectly within his rights to clam up. But by actively discouraging enterprise, he is unwittingly aiding in the development of news management of the worst type — the type a reporter shackles himself with for no good reason; a type already far too prevalent among reporters and editors today.

Our hallowed tradition of a Free Press was not built, and will not be maintained, by newsmen who consider observing release dates one of their highest duties.

A Death In The Party (Line Service)

The local telephone company, like most public utilities faced with the problem of serving a burgeoning population, has plenty of built-in problems facing it. For that reason we were glad to read that they quickly came up with an apparently sure-fire technique for demolishing one of their newest man-made problems, the Beeper Line.

As most everyone knows by now, the Beeper Line is what happens when several people call a busy number. They all get routed into a central circuit where the busy signal — the "beeper" — is produced. By talking loudly enough to be heard over the intermittent busy signal, the callers end up with a clandestine conference call.

As revealed in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel, however, the local phone company has jacked up the strength of the busy signal during the evening hours when the Beeper Line is normally at its busiest. The result is a busy signal loud enough to knock you through the phone booth, and thereby make it impossible for people to be heard above it.

This is strong evidence that resourcefulness is not lacking at our local phone company.

Now if they can just come up with a few more long-distance operators . . .

Fall & Gloom

Dates don't mean a thing. Fall came Monday. Real fall. Cloudy, gloomy leaf-rustling. Heralding those dark, wet days coming up that seems to last for eons, known to all hereabouts as Winter in Chapel Hill.

One good thing about Monday though, as a perceptive soul pointed out. The riotous hues of the leaves stand out like beacons.

They can't penetrate the gloom though. Makes you realize how much the weather has to do with your mood.

Tick Tock

Washington, says Newsweek Magazine of October 14, is not yet likely to boycott any and all military regimes that depose constitutionally-elected rulers in Latin America.

And why?

Because, as one policymaker whom Newsweek talked to puts it: "There are good coups, medium coups, bad coups and cuckoos."

Sounds like all that talk during the Cuban crisis last year about "hawks" and "doves" has really caught on up there in Foggy Bottom, eh wot?

Think Here

If, as Our Spy In Washington alleges elsewhere on this page, Barry Goldwater is the "fascist gun in the West," we guess that makes Rockefeller the "commonest dude in the East."

Yes. You'd better think about that one.

Our Man In Washington With Notes On Everything

FRANK CROWTHER

Note — An occasional column by Frank Crowther (UNC '60), formerly Associate Editor of The Daily Tar Heel, will appear on the edit page. He recently returned from St. Thomas where he served as Special Assistant to the Governor of the Virgin Islands. He is now Chief of the Washington Bureau of Monocle Magazine and The Outsiders Newsletter, publications of political satire.

Before any old friends or enemies faint or have apoplexy, let me assure each of them (counting on one hand) that I have not returned to Chapel Hill to spill their blood on the Old Well, to coin a catchy phrase, nor have I re-entered the university to work for my M.A. in subversive Hootenanies (e.g., one coined by Arthur Hoppe in a recent column, that plaintive old English lament, "Where Have All the Skybolts Gone?").

This past summer, after returning from a jocund if useless year in the U. S. Virgin Islands, I heard about my shattering fall from the pristine heights of innocence at the hands of that distinguished, if dizzy, American, God Save the Mark, Mrs. Sarah Emery. Well, I read her book and must admit it's almost a good piece of humor. You all remember good old Mrs. Emery, don't you, that sweet little consanguinous newt who chugged around campus in an Orphan Annie coat asking all those tutti-fruity questions at various student or faculty gatherings? Now, you all just be nice and make allowance for that poor old soul's congenital infirmities.

And remember Samuel Johnson's wise observation: "Patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

After being swindled out of a drink one afternoon by your esteemed co-editor, Gary Blanchard, during which time I lent him my copy of the aforementioned book yet to be returned, I offered to write an occasional piece of nonsense or whatever (you infernal and eternal letter writers take note, for that phrase will be useful when you set out to shoot me down in flames) for the DTH. So, for the love of the Old Well, don't send me nasty missiles, direct them to him. He could have said, No.

I've only this week received my first Tar Heels, but note you started the year in Chapel Hill with a lurch—gagged by the sagacious Legislature of the Great State of North Korea . . . er . . . Carolina. I'll tell you, there's absolutely nothing like a ready-made cause dangling there in front of you like a ripe persimmon as you sputter into a new semester.

I'm curious to know if Terry Sanford has come forth in your defense or fled to an attic in the capitol wringing his hands and wimpering, "Mercy, mercy, what shall we do." One imagines that Messrs. Friday and Aycock have made proper protests. But I note your importuning of the faculty for aid, and smile. Snowed under with immediate and vociferous response, were you not? Rarely, if ever, when I was part of the DTH, could we interest a large number of the faculty in any cause outside their own carefully defined domain. Causes are for students and il faut que jeunesse se passe, they will tell you in dulcet and reassuring tones.

Unfortunately, that sterile attitude spreads like a cancer in our society (escalates is today's more fashionable word). We are in the midst of such at this moment in Washington with regard to the hallowed halls of poison ivy, your spooks and mine, the CIA. There is no need to beat the dead McCarthy corpse, but many of us will never forget those days. We've recently read of the potential dustrial complex (Seven Days in May—the protagonist in this novel, by the way, was patterned after Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, Chief of Staff, USAF, a commonly known non-secret here in Washington). Might there already be lurking a Beria in the CIA?

Accusations have been made that the CIA has not only been making its own foreign policy in Vietnam, but that it blatantly rejected State Deartment orders there as well. Of course, everybody has denied it, and Kennedy recently defended the CIA after examining all "available" information. Might we not wonder how much information was conveniently NOT available? Allen Dulles, in his new book, The Craft of Intelligence, answers charges that the CIA has been guilty of making its own foreign policy thusly:

"The charge is untrue but extremely hard to disprove without revealing classified information. It is all the harder to disprove because to some extent it is honestly believed, and at times has even been spread by people in government who themselves are not 'in the know.'"

Read that paragraph again. It is incredible in its devious paradox and ends up in the classic reductio ad absurdum. It is slyly saying, "Friends, honestly, we have not been cooking our own foreign policies in the oven, but, you've got to realize, we simply cannot let you in the kitchen without endangering our national security since classified secrets are hung all over the walls. See? Relax, folks, you can take our word we're being good Girl Scouts. All we bake are sweet and innocent Brownies."

I know it's naive to ask these days, but can somebody please tell me what ever happened to our free and open society? If I were you, I'd write a letter to Sen. Eugene McCarthy in support of his bill proposing a watch-dog committee in the Congress to guard against abuses by the CIA.

Finally, if your editor will permit a small plug, some of you might be interested in next month's MONOCLE magazine. The entire issue is devoted to a rude satire of things CIA. There's even an article by one of our editors who tried to sell information on our CIA issue to the sleuths themselves. Subscriptions are four dollars a year (quarterly editions) and checks may be sent to: Monocle Periodicals, Inc., P. O. Box 9944, Chevy Chase, Maryland (I get only credit that way, no kickback friends). Or we will bill you later.

In parting for now, let me remind you to beware the Phoenix cowboy, Barry Goldwater, "the fascist gun in the West."

Nixon?

By PETER HARKNESS

The unofficial campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination has recently taken a new twist.

In 1960, Governor Rockefeller bowed out to Richard Nixon when he found that the Vice-President had already captured the necessary votes. Rocky claimed a fix and the charge hurt Nixon.

Now it looks as if the Governor might have to drop out again, but this time it is Senator Goldwater on the other end. Rocky has not been able to carry the banner for the anti-Goldwaterites within the party and they may be looking for another candidate.

Strangely enough, the name that popped up last week was that of Richard M. Nixon. Equally strange was the fact that it was Rockefeller who spilled the beans.

So, get out your cloth coat and your crying towel, the show may be about to begin.

Light And Fast . . .

By LARRY WALZ

American Contemporary by Curtis Zahn, New Directions—San Francisco Review, 1963, 150 pps.

In a small adobe hut by the seashore, a man is undergoing surgery to have his Conscience removed. He wants to have this done so that he will be able to pay income tax without qualms. It bothers him that the money he pays will be used for armaments which will be used in a war that will destroy him. The operation is completed and he goes away "cured". Later he becomes a successful realtor.

This is the plot of "Reactivated Man", one of eleven short stories in this new collection by Curtis Zahn. A conscientious objector during the war, Zahn now lives in California. He is a painter, yachtsman, and journalist, and he has "been active in Peace Marches on the Coast". Zahn is greatly dissatisfied with our culture, and most of the stories in American Contemporary reflect this feeling. His views are put forth by a variety of techniques.

The trouble with protest is, of course, that it is quite common in our society, and the commentators range from sociologists to the beat generation, from The Organization Man to "Howl". Consequently, it is rather difficult for the critic to find something new or different to say; he must rely heavily on his way of saying it. Although he misses fire a few times, on several occasions Zahn expresses his dissent vividly and freshly.

A good example of Zahn's originality in comment comes at the end of "View from the Coast". The protagonist of the story is driving her sports car and thinking that 'there was no need to hurry; once you'd made it to the Coast you'd gone as far as you can go. There was nothing to do but work and sleep and drink and wait for the rest of the United States to catch up. And when it did, the world itself would follow—peopled with South Americans who looked like Jim, Greeks who resembled Jack or John, Egyptians who had become Joe or George." The image of everyone in the world jammed up on the West Coast is striking.

Zahn's strongest criticism of contemporary American society is found in "Sadco" (which stands for Scientific Approaches to Defense Coordination, Oriented). Sadco is a missile control base, and the people who live (permanently) there are continuously working out computer programs for the destruction of various cities and countries. They are even working on the destruction of the Moon and Mars, although there are no people there. Zahn draws a powerful picture of dehumanized humanity. The workers predict each other's actions with computers and tape-record their conversations so that facial expressions will not confuse the meaning of the words involved. Zahn carries his criticism to an extreme and even goes too far in his handling of some details. Nevertheless, this is a fine and highly original story.

Several of the stories are not directly concerned with the criticism of society. "American Contemporary" is a light and fast story which must be read to be appreciated. It is a sort of off-beat combination of Catch-22 and Tobacco Road. Some of the stories—"Portrait of Girl Unconditioned", "The Man Impossible & Elegant"—are character studies of people who feel out of place in the world. These stories are less interesting than Zahn's wilder fantasies. The poorest work in the collection is "Recognition", because of its "cute" style.

Despite two or three weak stories and a certain monotony of style, American Contemporary is a good collection of short stories, and it should interest anyone who likes something different and unusual. Curtis Zahn is not a major writer, but American Contemporary shows that he has promise.

On The Pan

Yugoslav President Tito's current visit to the United States is expected to produce a new tirade from Red China.

Red China is expected to hop on the visit as new proof that the "modern revisionists" Khrushchev and company are betraying Communist goals. Such an attack, if it comes, could sabotage proposals to heal the breach between the Red giants and assure expulsion of the Chinese from the international Communist movement at a forthcoming Moscow conference.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Whupple's Back

Dear Editer,

I jest want to praise you fer telling off them SPU's (sphew's!) who wuz demonstrating the other day aginst the war in South Vietwhupple. I think they oughtta be stuck in jail. Don't they know thet South Vietwhupple is a bulwark of the free wurld aginst commyism? I'm a jurnalist myself and I think you wuz acting in the best tradition of patriotic Amerrican jurnalism by telling them off. Its good freedom-loving people like Madame Nu who are saving the wurld from the horrible dictatorship of Moscow and the colored boys. I hear thet Khrushchev's granddaddy wuz a colored boy and his mother wuz a jew.

I think Madame Nhu and the CIA wuz right in burning them Buddhists: them Buddhists ain't even Christian! I hear they is godless, atheistic materialists. Like the commyists. I think we oughtta barbecue some more of 'em. I think we oughtta barbecue Martin Luther King. I think we oughtta barbecue Pat Cusick and John Salter. I heard a beatnik talkin in Harry's the other night: he said he wuz a Zen Buddhist. I think we oughtta barbecue him too.

Another thing I want to say is thet most folks don't understand the importance of upholting the Free Wurld by supporting the right leaders in furreign countries. If it weren't fer Dr. Salawhupple of Portugal and General Frank Whupple of Spain and other patriotic Amerrican furriners then the whole wurld would be commyist and we'd have to live in communes with colored people. I think the war in South Vietwhupple is a good thing. I got a friend who fought in Korea and he sez thet its a lot of fun to kill little brown men. He sez them little brown men are jest like monkeys. He liked their wimmen, though. I've been thinking it over and I think I'd like to go to South Vietwhupple myself and fight. I think it would be even more fun than beating up queers or lynching colored boys or sending reporters with cameras to break up commie weddings. The only bone I got to pick with President Kennedy about the war in Vietwhupple is thet it ain't big enuf. If we is gonna wipe out unAmerricanism in Vietwhupple we might as well wipe it out everwhere else too. I think we oughtta invade France and India and Canada and Africa and Soviet England and also Tihuana.

Join Us!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Men who are wealthy and have fine homes can sit back in comfort and be little affected by those who walk the streets practically naked, shivering in threads. Men who have private bathrooms behind a closed bathroom door, which in turn is behind a closed hall door, which in turn is behind a closed front door need never worry about the students who because of a rule they made have to expose their naked bodies daily to several hundred friends and enemies. I saw a Nudist magazine this summer; the reporter travelled 760 miles to get his story. I wondered why when the removal of the doors in the library basement has found a small nudist colony in the heart of the UNC campus. I challenge the men behind three closed doors to join us there in a game of exposure.

CU Girl?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Not meaning to begrudge State College of their only victory last Saturday, but it seems odd enough that the judges should allow a contestant from a school outside the system (Meredith) in a contest for Miss Consolidated University. The very title of the winner certainly suggests that she is a student of the Consolidated University . . . . and this is the way it should be. Let's give the CU crown to a CU girl, huh?

Student Leaders Upset

spread, criticism from former Student Government officers grew.

"I was horrified," said Dwight Wheeless, Presidential assistant two years ago and former Men's Council member.

"I am greatly alarmed at both the trend of unilateral decisions that this decision sets and at the decision itself.

"I was so encouraged by the strides Student Government, the faculty and the Administration were making together in matters of judicial reform.

"Now Student Government will have to fight the challenge of the faculty."

Hank Patterson, vice-president two years ago, and Wheeless both pointed to the extensive judicial reform amendment to the Student Constitution passed in the spring of 1962, as an example of student-Administration cooperation.

"All these judicial changes made in 1961-62 were discussed fully with the Administration," Patterson said.

"Dean Long was invited to testify before the Student Legislature at this time and he did. We didn't agree with the Administration on everything, but everything was discussed with them.

"I feel that the substance of the decision is open to debate. I object to the way it was made.

"Everyone was expecting something to come, but not in this one great summary action by the faculty committee. No one expected the committee to abrogate a functionary section of the Student Constitution which was originally instated with the knowledge and support of the Administration.

"The committee's action is an arbitrary breach of the very communication and cooperation which those in South Building have purported to strengthen during the past years."

Wheeless cited several meetings the Men's Council had during the past two years with Dean Long and a meeting they had last year with the faculty committee.

"At these meetings we talked over problems together. There was no indication then that anything like this would come about."

Wheeless felt that the Administration could "swing a lot of weight with the committee" if it wanted to.

"It is also disturbing that this had to come up so soon after Dean Cathey's appointment. I'm afraid this might color his policy in the eyes of the students."

Bill Harriss, president of the student body two years ago and an Assistant Dean of Men last year, said the decision "seemed to be coming for the past two years."

"This is an infraction against the student judicial system but it's not that serious a one.

"When Dr. Henderson replaced Dr. Weaver as Dean of Men, the faculty committee became more active. It didn't do anything right away because it still had the Carter Case on its hands.

"But the only way the implication might be serious would be if the Review Board were to start reviewing all cases.

"There is a danger that out of this might come a double standard of judgment, the students more keenly aware of the student side and the faculty more keenly aware of the faculty side."

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: TOM ASHWORTH

Southern Bell Telephone Accountant Tom Ashworth (B.B.A., 1958) is one of his company's most knowledgeable experts on computers.

Tom has harnessed computers to many tasks. After general assignments and five months' training in punched card data processing, Tom was put in charge of converting the existing manual billing of Long Distance calls to a mechanized operation in Memphis. His job was to decide how the work would be done and to develop new procedures for doing it more swiftly.

His reward came in the form of frequent salary increases plus more responsibility.

After following up the first Memphis conversion job, Tom skillfully handled another. As a result, he was promoted to Special Accountant in the Nashville district, where he still teaches computers new accounting feats.

Tom Ashworth, like many young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

Tar Babies Test Duke At 2

By BILL LEE

The once-beaten Carolina freshman football team faces undefeated Duke this afternoon at Kenan Stadium. Kick-off is set for 2:00 and admission is free.

The Tar Babies will be trying to rebound from their shocking 32-12 defeat last Friday by powerful Virginia. Victories have been over NC State (21-7) and Wake Forest (23-0).

The Blue Imps have a 2-0 record with wins of 20-15 over The Citadel and 21-14 over Clemson.

The big name in the well-balanced Duke line-up is fullback Jay Calabrese. The pile driver scored twice against Clemson and topped the rushing against The Citadel.

Lonesome end Dave Dunnaway, rated last year as the fastest high school runner in North Carolina, has so far blocked a punt and taken a touchdown pass and is expected to see a lot of action today.

Starting guard Kit James handles all the kicking chores.

Bright spots for Carolina in the Charlottesville loss were the rushing of Leon Fonvielle and the pass-receiving of Bobby Knott.

Fonvielle was the only one who could move the ball effectively against UVA as he piled up 76 yards in 13 carries, about six yards a carry.

Knott pulled in eight passes for 125 yards including a 12-yard touchdown pass from Danny Talbott.

Coach George Barclay commented, "We just made too many mistakes and you can't make those mistakes and beat a good team which Virginia was. We had an off day all the way around.

"We've been praticing this week on all phases of the game, especially our tackling which was poor, and we've been trying to cut down on our mistakes.

"On pass defense," he added, "our positions were always good. We were in the right places, but they seemed to end up with the ball. On their first touchdown (a 33-yard pass), (John) Greene was all over the man.

"Against Duke we will have the problem of working against the lonesome end."

Hurried passing by Talbott and Beaver led to four Virginia interceptions. Barclay said, "Our pass protection was very poor." In previous games this has been one of the Tar Babies' strong points.

End Bob Powell and Center Chuck Alexander will be out for the game.

Co-captains wil be the quarterbacks Danny Talbot, Jeff Beaver, and Tom White.

Sports Courier

JUST WHEN IT looked like cyanide or wrist-cutting would be the easiest way out of this predicting business, I surprised myself with the best week yet.

Bouncing back from a 13-8-4 record, the guesses were mistaken only three times last week. Two relatively local games (Maryland over Air Force and Duke over Clemson) missed the mark, and Auburn beat Georgia Tech, just as I said it wouldn't, for the third miscue.

Three ties (Harvard 3-3 with Columbia, South Carolina 14-14 with Virginia and Texas A&M 14-14 with TCU) brought it to 19-3-3. Season record thus jumped 26 points to .754 on 86-28-11.

DUKE AT NC STATE. Fans around this immediate area want the Wolfpack to win this one as much as they wished it to lose one last Saturday. As much as I want to, I just can't see it. Duke by 11.

MARYLAND AT WAKE FOREST. Oh, baby. You're looking good on these games. But look out, the season's over a month old, and already Wake has scored 10 points. It is unfortunate that I have two dollars plus change in my pockets today. Maryland, by 217.

CLEMSON AT VIRGINIA. To the Tigers, this season has to be "The Longest Day" all over again. For the first time, Clemson and its house mother, Frank Howard, will be favored to win a game. For the first time, they will. Clemson, by 16.

LSU AT FLORIDA. The strong Gators are coming fast after a slow start and the loss to Georgia Tech. LSU is not talking about a rebuilding year any more. The Tigers are unbelieveably tough at home on Saturday nights. But daylight in Florida is a different story. Florida, by 6.

GEORGIA AT KENTUCKY. Montague, the Sports John, is up in arms because he can't pick this game a tie. Kentucky's youngsters were shocked at LSU last week. But they still haven't seen a passer like Larry Rakestraw. Georgia, by 8.

Navy–Pittsburgh For The Trophy

WASHINGTON STATE AT ARMY. You get a little mixed up as to which of these west coast teams is which. For instance, Washington State has lost already this year to San Jose State, which sounds more like a hospital. But it tied Iowa. You figure it out. Army, by 13.

DARTMOUTH AT HARVARD. The Crimson may be tough, but the tie with Columbia showed some Harvard weaknessses. The nation's longest winning streak should be extended by Dana Kelly, Tom Spangenberg and company. Dartmouth, by 9.

PITTSBURGH AT NAVY. Last year, the rookie quarterback came up to Pitt and beat it 32-9. He's back this year to go against the nation's third-ranked team. For the Lambert trophy, the route is on the water. Navy, by 5.

WEST VIRGINIA AT PENN STATE. Both of these clubs surprised themselves last week, WVU bowing only three points to Pitt, Penn State being blanketed by Syracuse. The bounce-back effort should be tough and close. Penn State, by 10.

OREGON STATE AT SYRACUSE. The Orange are not to be counted out of this Lambert Trophy race. Only a loss to Kansas blots the record. Oregon State should find out just how serious football is taken at this upstate New York community. Syracuse, by 7.

MICHIGAN AT MINNESOTA. The Wolverines' great effort against Michigan State let down in a 23-12 loss to Purdue. Both teams are looking for their first Big Ten victory. The answer is in the line. Minnesota, by 12.

MISSOURI AT IOWA STATE. A prime contender for the Big Eight crown, Missouri comes up against another strong shot at the title. The winner plays Oklahoma for all the chips. Look for Missouri to take it all. Missouri, by 5.

MICHIGAN STATE AT NORTHWESTERN. If you had been Michigan State when I saw Michigan State, you'd wonder how the Spartans can lose to anybody. Tommy Myers is overrated, sorry. Michigan State, by 7.

On The Limb–Texas To Lose

IOWA AT PURDUE. The corn tasted almost sweet when the Hawkeyes just missed defeating Wisconsin. Three points was the difference. They are a surprise as Purdue will find out. Iowa, by 9.

OHIO STATE AT WISCONSIN. Number four last week, the Buckeyes found Southern California a little too hot, 20 points worth. Beaten and battered, Woody Hayes has hardly recovered enough to play Wisconsin at Madison. Wisconsin, by 13.

BAYLOR AT TEXAS A&M. Aggravation comes every year from the Aggies who don't stop kicking 'till Thanksgiving with Texas. A tie with TCU proved the point. Don Trull, the passing wizard, should be the difference. Baylor, by 8.

RICE AT TEXAS. A night game pits the solid top-ranked team against another one of the many Southwest Conference clubs out to trim their Long Horns. Texas hasn't forgotten the 14-14 tie last year. Neither has Rice. Start examining, doctor. Rice, by 4.

BOSTON COLLEGE AT AIR FORCE. Falconry got winged by a brilliant quarterback last week at College Park. It faces another one this week. But that rarified mountain air may choke Jack Concannon before he gets to do anything. Air Force, by 10.

WASHINGTON AT OREGON. Two Tartars meet, and you go to comparative games with Stanford. Oregon was 36-7, Washington 19-11. Quarterback Bob Berry and halfback Mel Renfro should duckwalk to victory. Oregon, by 8.

NOTRE DAME AT STANFORD. You'd have to call this a breather for the Irish who have to face Navy and Pittsburgh in coming weeks. UCLA was the victim at home last week. Stanford will go down the same way over TV. Notre Dame, by 15.

OTHERS:

Princeton over Cornell
Mississippi State over Memphis State
Georgia Tech over Tulane
Nebraska over Colorado
SMU over Texas Tech

UNC Analysis–6

Letdown Faces Us

By JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

For the second time this season the threat of a letdown faces this team. The first time was against Wake Forest after the disappointment of doing so poorly up in Michigan.

This time it's for a different reason. We were really up last week against State and it paid off. Now for the first time in a long long time the possibility of overconfidence confronts a Carolina team. But I don't think we'll fall victim to this. The team is proud of itself and its record, and I believe everyone on this team realizes the great importance of playing one game at a time.

We've still got to learn to relax and play with confidence. I'm hoping we'll do that tomorrow at South Carolina. They've got a good team down there—not the best, but one which is quite capable of beating us if we give them half a chance.

South Carolina has a big question mark — quarterback Dan Reeves. When he's at his best there's no quarterback in the conference who's a better runner. He's also a pretty good passer on the roll-out options. But he's had a couple of injuries this fall (hurt his knee and also his eye) and there seems to be some doubt as to his condition. Bill Elias (Virginia coach) says he thinks he's far from top shape, but Reeves denies this. We'll just have to wait and see.

They've got the biggest line in the ACC and their speed is fairly good. They run from the slot-T and the pro set, using a man-in-motion a lot of the time.

As far as our offense goes, we won't be running any new plays down there, but we might come up with new variations of some of our old ones.

Drew Murphy Tallies Twice As UNC Passes Pfeiffer, 4-2

North Carolina used three first-period goals as an impetus to its third straight soccer victory of the year here yesterday.

The Tar Heel booters put on an impressive display of both defense and scoring punch in defeating tiny Pfeiffer, 4-2.

Big Jim Talbott, Drew Murphy and scoring leader Pete Blake all booted for scores in the first quarter, and Carolina added an insurance marker in the final period to sew it up.

Talbott scored with just 30 seconds gone in the opening frame to get Coach Marvin Allen's kickers off to the quick start. Murphy's head shot found the range at 14:54 of the period, and Black contributed at 16:54.

Pfeiffer came back to add single tallies in the second and third quarters. Dan Smith (at 2:33) of the second, and Bud Long (at 14:50) of the third, were the Flying Feet's successful marksmen.

Up by one at only 3-2, Carolina locked it up when Murphy, the sophomore center forward from Glastonbury. Conn., scored his second goal at 14:04 of the final quarter.

Allen again made use of his two goalies in this third UNC win. Buddy Siegel, the starter, was credited with six saves while Tom Roberts, another sophomore, also saw action. Roberts made three saves.

Pfeiffer goalie Jerry Schuck played well in defeat, coming through with 17 saves against UNC's improved offense.

Carolina, after two straight shutout losses at the start of the season to Navy and Davidson, is now 3-2 on the year. The Tar Heels have two games next week before the big one with Maryland. They face tough Virginia at Charlottesville Tuesday and Belmont Abbey here next Thursday.

Lowenstein Jumps Bail In Clarksdale

A former UNC graduate, currently on a leave of absence from North Carolina State, had his bond forfeited Thursday when he failed to appear to face charges stemming from efforts to publicize a Negro's "gubernatorial" campaign in Mississippi.

Allard K. Lowenstein, chairman of an advisory committee for Clarksdale, Miss., druggist Aaron Henry, who is running a write-in campaign for governor was one of four people who had their bonds forfeited by Judge Edward B. Conmell.

The others were Stephen Bingham, 21 of Salem, Conn.; John Speh, 19 of New Haven, Conn.; and Richard Van Wagener, 19, of Washington.

Police said Lowenstein, Bingham and Speh were arrested early Wednesday and charged with loitering and violation of the city's midnight curfew law.

They each forfeited $16 bonds and Bingham an additional $8 bond on a charge of running a stop sign.

Wagener forfeited a $51 bond.

Officials at N. C. State said that Lowenstein, an assistant professor, took a leave of absence July 1.

VISITING PROFESSORS

Two UNC professors W. J. Hall and Harold Hotelling, have been selected as "Visiting Professors in Statistics" and will travel throughout the Eastern United States under the auspices of the National Science Foundation.

Thieves Take 2 Victrolas

Two record players, valued at a total of $319 were reported stolen from the Record Bar on Henderson Street early Friday morning, Chapel Hill police said.

Mrs. Jeannie Hayes, manager of the Record Bar, said that one stereo set was stolen and one combination AM-FM - shortwave record player was stolen.

According to police, the robbery occurred around 1:30 a.m. Friday.

The police report said that two people had stopped a patrol car and told them they saw somebody moving between some of the buildings carrying a step ladder.

Police then noted that a window was open in the Record Bar. Officers then called the manager and went inside the building to determine if anything was missing.

At first, police said, there apparently was nothing stolen, but later on in the morning after an inventory was taken, it was determined that the two record players were missing.

4 Elected By Gleemen

Four freshmen have been elected officers of the Gleemen, a musical organization composed of all new members of the Men's Glee Club.

The officers are Jimmy Fletcher of Kinston, chairman; Don Engvall of Dublin, N. H., vice-chairman; and John Kitts, Cleveland Heights, Ohio, and Buddy Lewis, Goldsboro, librarians.

The leemen, composed of about 45 members, are planning several appearances in the Chapel Hill area during the year. They will also participate in joint concerts with the Touring Glee Club.

John King, senior Glee Club member, will assist Dr. Joel Carter in the direction of the Gleemen. He will rehearse with the group while Dr. Carter rehearses with the touring group.

Theda Apperson, a music major from Durham, will be the rehearsal accompanist for the Gleeman.

Student Body To Vote On Pair Of Resolutions

By HUGH STEVENS

Two resolutions which will submit constitutional amendments to the student body in the fall campus elections, were passed by Student Legislature Thursday night.

The first resolution will propose an amendment creating an Interfraternity Council Court. Sam Himes, who introduced the bill, said the present IFC Court is functioning under the authority of a directive from Dean Long. An amendment to the student constitution is necessary to completely establish the legality of the court, he said.

The amendment will give the IFC Court jurisdiction over violations by "fraternities and by members or agents thereof." Violations by individual fraternity members who are on fraternity property or who are acting for the fraternity will be tried by this court. Rushing violations or house misconduct would also come under the court's jurisdiction.

The second resolution, introduced by Clark Brewer, provides for an amendment allowing the IDC Court to try all violations occuring in the dorms, and not just those involving dormitory residents.

Brewer said this would increase the power of the IDC court in controlling all dorm conduct. He said the court has penalties suitable for dealing with outside violators.

In other action, the body passed a bill by Phil Baddour allowing for legislative review of judicial procedures. The bill sets the requirements for the courts established under the Student Constitution. Each court will be required to adopt a set of judicial procedures including its jurisdiction, the rights of the accused, operating procedures, the composition of the court and the means for selecting its members. In addition, the court shall be required to communicate periodically to the Student Legislature a list of its penalties for legislative approval. Also, the Student Legislature must approve any changes in the procedures or penalties of the courts.

Baddour cited the failure of some of the courts to secure legislative approval of procedure changes and penalties. He said this bill would allow for revision of necessary court procedures and standardization of legislative responsibilities.

Legislature also passed a resolution introduced by Hugh Blackwell allowing the finance committee to conduct an extensive investigation into the structure and administration of student government finances.

A resolution on equal rights authored by Neal Jackson was recommitted. A bill concerning the party affiliation of legislators was withdrawn by the Rules Committee.

The body voted to hold a special session for the consideration of the recent action by the Faculty Review Board on Monday at 7:30 p.m.

New legislators who were approved and seated were Edwin Arrington (UP), DM VII; Diana Wellons (SP), DW IV; Judy Frieder (SP), DW IV; Dave Williams (SP), TM IV; Darst Murphey (UP), TW; Neilds DeVere (SP), TM IV; Ron Hendren (UP), DM I; Warren Ogden (UP), TM IV; and George Ingram (UP), TM I.

Legislators absent were Bobbie Lethco UP), DW II; Richard Westin (IND), DM I; and Dave Henry (UP), TM II.

NSA Holds Conference

The National Student Association's (NSA) one-day leadership conference, here today, will feature discussions of campus problems by student leaders and faculty members.

Living conditions, campus politics, student-faculty relations and campus intellectualism are the planned topics.

The conference will begin at 2 p.m. at the home of Miss Ann Queen, 121-B Mallette St.

Hugo Spechar, campus NSA chairman, said he expects 20 participants.

Mike Lawler, student body president, Jim Fullwood, conference chairman and Kellis Parker, delegate to last summer's NSA Congress, will team with John Sanders, Institute of Government director, John Clayton, RTVMP professor, Joseph Straley, physics professor and Harold McCurdy, psychology, in the discussions.

Debaters Are Housed Here

Lanny Shuff, coordinator of the N. C. High School Debating Union weekend, yesterday expressed Student Government's appreciation "to the Panhellenic and IFC Councils and to individual fraternities and sororities for housing members of the Union this weekend."

He announced that eight fraternities, four sororities and Spencer Dormitory are housing 40 debaters. The debaters will receive meals and a "host" to familiarize them with the campus.

Shuff said that the Student Government agreed to provide housing for the debaters because of a lack of debating union funds.

Fraternities housing guests include Delta Upsilon, Beta Theta Pi, Sigma Nu, Lambda Chi Alpha, Alpha Tau Omega, Pi Lambda Phi, Chi Psi and Tau Epsilon Phi.

UNC Grad Student May Be Deported

Nicholas Bateson

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Nicholas Bateson, 28-year old graduate assistant in the UNC Psychology department, said yesterday that he has not taken any action on the possibility that he may be deported to England for his alleged part in the unauthorized student trip to Cuba last summer.

"I've done nothing—there's nothing to be done," Bateson said. He indicated that he was aware of the deportation possibility.

Bateson is working on his Ph.D degree in Social Psychology. He came to the United States in 1958 and entered UNC the following year.

He is a graduate student doing research but he has never served as an instructor.

Bateson came to the United States on a resident alien visa, which doesn't have to be revalidated periodically.

While at UNC, Bateson took an active part in the leadership of the New Left Club and the Progressive Labor Club. He and his former roommate Peter Gumpert were recently subpoenaed to appear before a House Un-American Activities Sub Commmittee hearing in Washington.

Bateson declined any further comment on the deportation matter, but he did consent to talk about his appearance before the HUAC hearing.

"They questioned me about my association with Arnold Idenbaum and I refused to answer any questions about him." Idenbaum was identified by an airline ticket girl as being the man who used the name Jay Jacobs to secure a fraudulent North Carolina drivers license.

"The grounds for my doing so was that Idenbaum had already been subpoenaed by the Grand Jury in Brooklyn, which is also investigating the Cuban trip. It seemed that some charge or other might be brought against him and he had previously refused to answer any questions asked him. I therefore felt that since this (HAUC) committee has no power to try anyone, it would not be appropriate to give any information to Idenbaum.

"So," Bateson continued, "I pleaded the Fifth amendment to avoid answering questions about him.

"Then on the second part of the hearing," Bateson said, "they asked me about my connection with the Progressive Labor Club movement and especially they asked questions about people I knew in the PLC movement.

"I told the committee that on grounds of conscience, I could not talk about my associates in the club or my friends on the American Political Left.

"I made an oath to my own conscience and they asked me to violate this oath. People on the American Left, politically, have a code where they do not co-operate with a committee like HUAC when they ask us to aid in the persecution of fellow members.

"The first amendment is supposed to guarantee freedom of thought, speech and association. I therefore refused to answer any questions that related to my former connection with the PLC movement.

"The chairman then refused to allow me my privileges under the first amendment on the grounds of conscience that I had claimed.

"He threatened me with contempt of Congress and I therefore changed my plea to include the fifth amendment."

Bateson said that he answered every question asked him that "referred to me or my views." He refused to answer questions that dealt with others.

Bateson Case Under Review

By GARY BLANCHARD

Nicholas Bateson, 28, UNC graduate student and research assistant in Psychology, faces possible deportation to his home in England as a result of his alleged involvement in the unathorized trip to Cuba last summer of 59 Americans. Four of the Americans were students from North Carolina, including two former UNC students.

The possibility stems from Bateson's appearance before the House Un-American Activities Committee in Washington Oct. 16 in which he took the Fifth Amendment 24 times.

Near the end of the hearing, according to HUAC staff director Frank McNamara, Rep. August Johansen (R-Mich) moved that a transcript of the hearing be referred to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization "for appropriate review by that agency."

Rep. Joe Pool, (D-Tex.), chairman of the subcommittee, approved the motion.

"We will simply send a transcript to the Immigration and Naturalization Service," HUAC staff director McNamara said in a telephone interview yesterday.

"Rep. Johansen did not request that any specific recommendation accompany it, so it will just be sent for review. Whether or not any action results from this is completely up to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which will base its decision on exisiting immigration and naturalization laws."

McNamara said the central authority in this area is the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act of 1952. He declined, however, to speculate on whether referral of Bateson's testimony could result in Bateson's eventual deportation from the U. S. as an "undesirable alien."

McNamara added that the Cuba-trip hearings have been concluded, as far as HUAC is concerned.

"We called Mr. Bateson and Mr. Gumpert (UNC Psychology Dept. research associate) because we had good reason to believe that they could give us pertinent and significant information concerning Arnold Indenbaum, the key witness," McNamara said.

"Eventually a report will be made on the over-all hearing. There are no findings yet. This whole matter has been under investigation now for well over a year.

'Go Second Mile' Lawler Urges

Mike Lawler, UNC student body president, yesterday asked the University community to examine the recent pattern of student-faculty-administration relations.

In a statement yesterday, Lawler asked that all parties "go the second mile." The statement was a result of the recent decision of the faculty to remove students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

The complete statement:

The relationship between the student community and the Faculty and Administration must fulfill the law rather than be defined solely by the law. It is the injunction to "go the second mile" which has traditionally defined the spirit of mutuality between the persons of "full and final authority" and the student government of "delegated authority."

The merits of the recently announced "fait accompli" are a separate discussion. The atmosphere which pervades this unilateral action is the vital concern of the student body and its elected officials. With increasing regularity this atmosphere has governed the relationship of the senior partners to the student government. It is that pattern which can no longer go unexamined.

It is my firm belief that the best interests of this University demand that the University family examine this state of affairs. The initial antidotes must be openness and sincerity. The willingness to "go the second mile" will enable us to close the gap between principle and actuality.

The faculty announced their decision Wednesday morning. They acted without informing the students and Lawler and Bob Spearman, student body vice-president, immediately attacked the proposal.

The review board acts on Honor System and Campus Code violations after the Men's or Women's Council. It is for the purpose of appeal.

UNC Classics Prof Robert Getty Dies

Robert John Getty, 55, Paddison Professor of Classics here, died Thursday night at 10:30 o'clock at his home after a heart attack.

Getty was one of the world's most distinguished Latin Scholars.

He came here from Toronto, Canada, in 1958 after his appointment to be the George Paddison Professor of Classics, an endowed position in the Department of Classics.

He was a native of County Londonderry, Ireland, and received his degrees at Queen's University, Belfast, and his M.A. at St. John's College of Cambridge University in England.

Getty taught at the University of Aberdeen, University of Liverpool, St. John's, the University of Toronto, and the University of Chicago.

He also served a term as chairman of the Classics Department here. His main attention was devoted to his teaching of Latin.

He was the author of "The Lost Saint Gual Manuscript of Valerius Slaccus" and of other volumes of classical studies and articles in periodicals of America, Britain and Canada.

Football Horrorscope

It had to happen! Though Otelia Connor meeting the Horrorscope cannot really be linked too closely to "Frankenstein Meets The Wolfman," the results may turn out the same.

Otelia

Otelia had a birthday Wednesday, and the appropriate path to take was very evident. Quite the football fan (the Horrorscope learned to its Horror), Otelia tries to attend most of UNC's home games, arriving at halftime to take in the bands and leaving soon thereafter to avoid the unpleasantness of having to floor some inebriated young 'un with her red unbrella.

Otelia was a bit more obliging than some of our past guests, and proceeded to pick 20 winners along the same lines and by the same processes the esteemed Mrs. Fambrough chose three weeks ago.

"Maryland isn't very strong this year, but EVERBODY beats Wake Forest;" "I read about that Navy fella in Time last week;" and "I used to know a darlin' boy who went to Kentucky," were a few of the Oteliaisms the Horrorscope took a beating from this week.

Logic also cropped up in the conversation when Otelia said, "I'll take Oregon State over Syracuse because my sister lives in California."

But more than just the impolite little undergraduates that disgrace Lenoir Hall have to fear the charming mistress of manners this week. Because if she beats the Horrorscope or any of the past guests, they'll be some going into hiding to do—but fast.

A resurgence of brilliant power — that's what they're calling last week's performance. It was the best since opening week when The Horrorscope picked only 15 games. Since then 20 games have been the rule, and last week was the best of that group.

The combined mark of the five regulars and Spero Dorton was 76-32-12, a percentage of .705. Curry Kirkpatrick and Al Kaplan led with twin 15-3-2 records (both hit Rice's 13-7 victory over SMU) while Ron Logan was second at 13-5-2. Spero faultered with 10-8-2.

The year's mark was raised to .656 on 353-185-42. Kirkpatrick is well over the average in the top spot at 66-22-7 (.750) while Kaplan has jumped to second with 59-29-7 (.671). The guest mark is 52-36-7.

Dean Long Urges Dorms To Change

By SUZY STERLING

"It is senseless for dorms to ape fraternities," Dean of Men William Long told lower quad residents at an informal meeting Tuesday night.

"A dorm is a different type of organization," he said.

Dean Long suggested several changes now being used by other colleges such as dormitory labs, seminars, lectures and full social programs.

These changes should help to alleviate feelings of inferiority and frustration indicated by former lower quad residents, he said.

"It is our job to make these dorms as livable as possible. It is time to turn an existence in dorms into a life in residence halls."

Although he saw no immediate solution to the crowded conditions in the rooms, Dean Long said that the men's residence halls could look much better if men paid as much rent as women.

Dean Long held no objection to women visiting men's dorm rooms—but noted problems of room repair and parents' objections.

"I see nothing dangerous in it if it is disciplined."

He said it would be a "better policy" to have open women's dormitories.

Concerning the operation of cars by freshmen, Dean Long said:

"Nothing can be done about this unless the parking problem is solved."

Dean Long noted the limitations of his influence on the

The Release Date? Sorry, Off The Record

The ethics of newsgathering are quite properly a subject of concern to the community at large, especially nowadays when all of us rely so heavily upon the news media for information about what is going on, and when it is so important that we get accurate, timely information.

For that reason we would like to comment briefly upon two situations—one of which was involved in our editorial on Dean Luxon and news management yesterday—both of which crop up repeatedly, and directly or indirectly affect all of us.

The first situation concerns the observance of release dates. These are the dates when the giver of news material requests the material to be released on or after, for any of a myriad of good reasons. In most situations, we consider it wrong for a newsman to release the material before the desired date. The reason we consider release dates at all binding upon a newsman is because the inference is he knows nothing about the news matter until it is given to him, and it is given to him with the request that he hold off releasing it until the stated time.

However, when one unilaterally fixes a date for the release of news, and also withholds that news, then the specified release date is not binding upon the newsman. In fact, as we said yesterday, any newsman worth his typewriter will do all he can to secure information about the news matter being withheld, then decide for himself whether to print it or not — and damn the release dates. For, obviously, the newsman has made no agreements, implicit or explicit, with anyone.

This latter, unilateral situation is the one about which we commented yesterday.

If the Faculty Council had released to us the text of its Gag Law resolution, together with a specified release date, then we most likely would not have released it before the release date. However, the Council did not do that. It simply decided not to let the text of the resolution out until after it has been presented to the Board of Trustees.

Whether that is a wise decision or not is a separate matter. We think the Council members should have gone ahead and released it, but that is a matter of opinion. What is patently not a matter of opinion, however, is whether we are bound by their desired release date. We obviously are not, inasmuch as no agreement was made between us and them. So when Dean Luxon indicated to our reporter that ethics dictated he adhere to the release dates, the Dean was in error.

The second situation that concerns us is the use and misuse of the phrase, "off the record." It is bandied about far too readily by far too many people who don't understand what it means, including many reporters and editors.

Going "off the record" with a news source ordinarily means that the newsman commits himself not to make public what he is told until his source okays it, or until the information is made public.

This arrangement, again, is a mutual agreement between the news source and the newsman. The trouble with it is that if the newsman later learns independently about the material he was given in confidence, then he risks alienating his confidential source by printing it, inasmuch as the source probably won't believe the newsman got the information independently of him.

But the basic trouble with this "off the record" business is that too many news sources tell the newsman something, then hasten to add that "of course, this is off the record." Well, of course, it isn't off the record. The newsman made no prior agreement that it would be.

The main point is that both release dates and use of "off the record" should be justified to the newsman's satisfaction. The newspaper has a responsibility to its audience, and if sources are making arbitrary decisions about release dates or use of the phrase "off the record" just to keep themselves clean, then it is our feeling that the reporter and the paper are well within their bounds to disregard both. This, of course, is the exception. But such misuse of these requests as we are inundated with each day may serve to make it the rule.

Omniscience (ha)

The Chapel Hill Weekly

A reader sent us a clipping from another newspaper, along with the suggestion that it be reprinted as an editorial. The clipping says:

Is college teaching risky?

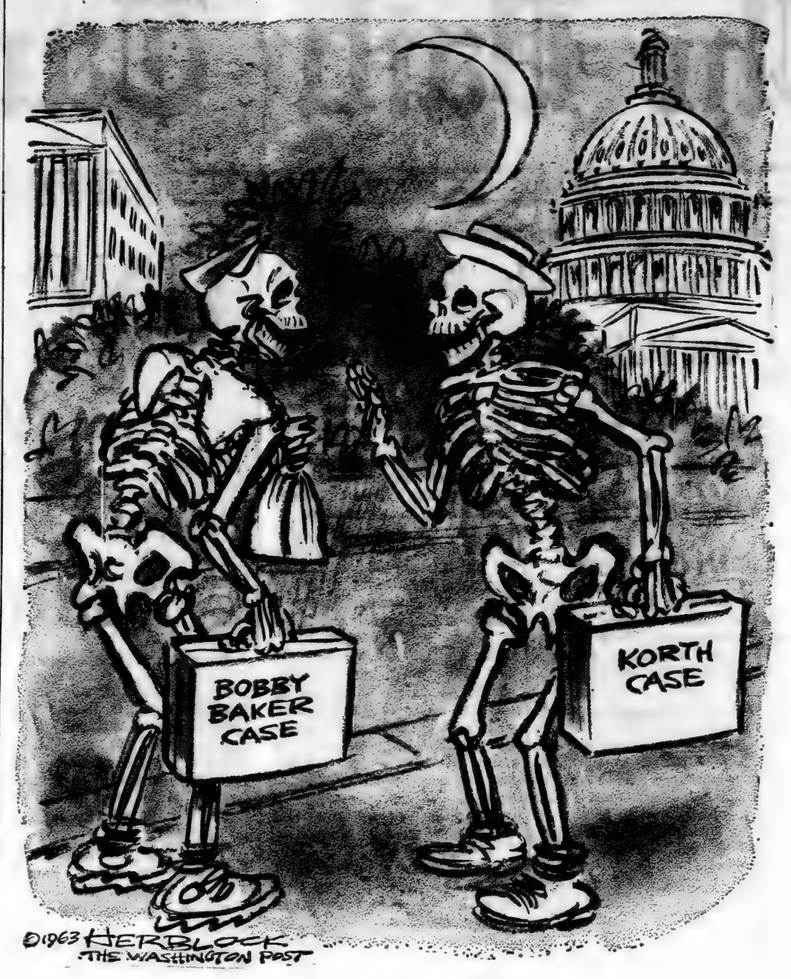
Yes, particularly with the younger instructors. They are not experienced enough to be humble, and they usually know a lot more about their own subjects than their students do. Anyway, nobody dares to talk back. Therefore they often get the idea that they are omniscient on any subject they care to discuss. In consequence, as one man puts it, "effective self-criticism is almost as rare among young teachers as it is among dictators and generals."

We have no idea why the clipping was sent to the Weekly. This charge might amount to a true bill at many colleges and universities, but it hardly applies to the University at Chapel Hill.

Students at Chapel Hill traditionally have talked back to their teachers, from young instructors to grizzled Kenan professors. We have known students to express their criticism by stalking out of the classroom in mid-lecture, by sleeping soundly while a professor droned away, and by lecturing the lecturer. We recall one student who expressed his disagreement immediately after a class by delivering a hard right to the professor's stomach. This, admittedly, was an uncommon occurrence, but for a student to tell a professor that he didn't know what he was talking about was fairly routine.

Things haven't changed to the extent that Carolina's young instructors have been allowed any delusions of omniscience. On the contrary, they probably still find that facing a classroom filled with aggressively inquiring students is in itself a humbling, if not a downright unnerving experience.

"Man, It Looks Like A Real Old-Fashioned Hallowe'en"



PLAYMAKERS

One Of The Best Plays

By LINDA GRIFFITH

Little Mary Sunshine, book, music and lyrics by Rick Besoyan. Staged by Foster Fitz-Simons, musical direction by Charles Horton, settings by Tommy Rezzuto, lighting by Russell G. Graves and Ben Jones, costumes by William Hannah.

Cheers and a standing ovation climaxed the Playmakers' opening night performance of Little Mary Sunshine. The student audience loved the show and with good reason, for the production had a slick, professional quality that made it an evening of pure entertainment.

The musical, an off-Broadway hit, is a delightful spoof of the "Rose Marie" type of operetta, full of blushing young ladies, Indians (wicked and otherwise), handsome forest rangers, and even a German opera star. Little Mary, the adopted daughter of Chief Brown Bear, runs the Colorado Inn, which she bought with money she made selling her homemade cookies. The stalwart forest rangers, led by her sweetheart, Capt. "Big Jim" Warrington, come there on their way to capture a dangerous Indian. Also there, conveniently, are an equal number of "pretty, socially acceptable, and ever so rich" young ladies from finishing school. The plot is improbable and slight and includes a mortgage about to be foreclosed, dangerous missions, a lawn party, disguises, and a wicked Indian who "wants to have his way" with poor Mary. But, despite all the trouble, the characters resolve to "Look to a Sky of Blue," and eventually everything ends up happily.

William Hannah's costumes help create a turn-of-the-century atmosphere, and Tommy Ruzzuto's sets were also good. The musical direction by Charles Horton was excellent; the orchestra did a beautiful job, never overpowering the singers, and several of the numbers stopped the show.

The director, Foster Fitz-Simons, caught perfectly the tongue-in-cheek spirit of the play. All the actors strike exaggerated poses; Jim throws his hand over his heart as he practices proposals, and Little Mary runs daintily across the stage and clasps her hands over her heart before each speech. The best thing about the show is that the actors themselves all seem to be having a wonderful time.

Peggy Jones makes a sweet, lovely Little Mary, though perhaps she lacks a little of the mischievous sparkle the role demands in order for it to be a complete parody. She has a pure voice that projected well and blended beautifully with that of Randy Umberger, who played Capt. "Big Jim" Warrington. Hair parted in the middle and face shining with noble emotion, he is the epitome of the chivalrous, brave, and true forest ranger. As the leading pair of lovers, these two were outstanding.

In fact, all the actors were good. Robert Ivey played Cpl. "Billy" Jester with an appealing little-boy quality, and Janice Moore as the flirtatious maid Nancy brought down the house with her exotic wickedness in "Mata Hari." Muriel Wilson was appropriately German as Mme. Ernestine, the famous opera star, and had a lovely voice to fit her role.

Graham Pollock played Gen. Oscar Fairfax, Ret., the Second Under-Secretary for Indian Affairs, and he sang and danced with all the ponderous grace of a Jackie Gleason. Larry Warner as Fleetfoot, the doddering old Indian guide, was the comic hit of the show as he fell asleep whenever he sat down and with an unusual lack of cunning ran into porches and stumbled over perfectly flat ground.

The chorus deserves a special salute, for the six forest rangers and their girls all showed good timing and musical ability. They helped make the projection so smooth, and there were very few of those awkward moments that reveal the amateur status of a company.

The dialogue of the show is delightfully old-fashioned. The rangers ask "to engage the young ladies in conversation," and Little Mary says she "burns with a young maiden's innocent curiosity" to hear what Big Jim will say to her. The sometimes corny humor is carried over into the songs, even the love duets. "Colorado Love Call" becomes hilarious as Jim and Mary warble "You-o-o and I wi-ill li-i-ive and die underneath a Colorado sky." The tunes are pleasant, the type you catch yourself humming as you leave the theatre. And you'll probably leave humming—the gaiety of this show, one of the best Playmakers' productions in years, is catching!

Civil Rights Bill: Good Or Bad?

By CLYDE WILSON

If the legislation known as the "civil rights bill" is enacted, American society will be launched on an experiment in the regulation of private life more ridiculous and at the same time more dangerous than Prohibition.

Its enforcement, if possible, would be fantastically expensive and require a giant step in the direction of a police state.

Suppose you are the proprietor of a bar and grill on W. Franklin Street. Suppose you refuse me admittance. You say it is because I am drunk and boisterous. I say it is because of my color.

Under the law I have a legitimate grievance. Can I go into court and get an order requiring you to admit me? Do I bring back a squad of soldiers with bayonets fixed to make sure I get my "rights?"

Or maybe we are going to appoint a special federal officer for every town, pay him $7,500 a year plus fringe benefits and give him unrestricted rights of judgment and access to private property.

Or maybe I will go to court and get an injunction making you shut down your bar and grill (and your livelihood), hire lawyers and go to court to prove that you are not discriminating against me.

If I really had it in for you I could get drunk every day and try to barge in.

Meanwhile, what has happened to your God-given, inalienable rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, to use what is yours in the way you see fit.

Is that federal functionary going to be given power to decide for himself what your motives are? You can only judge a man for his criminal actions, not his intent. Who is to say whether you tossed me out because I was a slob or because you really intended to discriminate against my color?

The basic premise of the "civil rights bill" is one which thwarts rather than expands freedom—that everybody should be completely equal without regard to race, creed or consequences.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Whupple

Dear Editer,

I jest want to praise you fer saying the other day in the Daily Tarwhupple thet John Salter is irresponsible and also fer your cartoon showing thet Pat Cusick is a little child. I agree thet all them beatniks is irresponsible and childish and they don't even take baths. All they do is mess around with stoopid, childish things like wurld peace and colored people and them stoopid wops down in Cuba. I think this would be a fine university iffen we'd jest get rid of them lolly-pop lickin' trubblemakers.

I like Carolina a lot. I don't want to see them children give it a bad reputation. I'm having a lot of fun at Carolina this year and I'm lurning a lot about how to get along with people. The first day I wuz here we flushed a cherry bomb down the tolit. Then we went through fraternity rush and also I wrecked the convertible my daddy had give me. Last night we got drunk at the Goody Shop and went down to the Tempo Room and beat up some queers.

Carolina's a great place to get an eddication—all we need to do is get rid of them stoopid, childish trubblemakers like Johnny Salter and Fat Boy Cusick. Somebody tole me thet the the thing wrong with them fellers wuz thet they had oedipus complexes. I don't know what a oedipus complex is but it sounds like something pretty childish.

The last thing I want to say is thet I really enjoyed yer cartoon on Cusick. I wish you'd have more cartoons. Matter uv fact, I think the stoodent body would appresheate it if you'd cut out all them stoopid editerials and letters to the editer and news stories and stuff and let's have a good, responsible, mature comic book.

Good Friend

Editors, The Tar Heel,

One of the nicest men on campus is the head resident adviser of Carr Dormitory, Dallas Cameron. He is always ready and more than willing to assist the resident in any way possible. Dallas is the kind of fellow whom one can not help but admire and respect. He has a geniune interest in each resident of his dorm and shows it each time that one sees him. He never fails to have a kind word of encouragement for his friends.

When one has a problem or needs to know the answer to a question, Dallas is always ready to hear his request or problem and then to offer his help or advice. If the answer requires some research, Dallas offers to do it.

Dallas is truly a dedicated and faithful man to his dorm. It is people like Dallas Cameron who make the dormitories here at UNC the best and most unified in the state. Dallas Cameron is truly a wonderful and faithful friend.

Self-Pity?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It is highly disguisting to me to read the letters that appear periodically in the Daily Tar Heel and other newspapers around the state in defense of some of our local liberals. The CORE and NAACP seem to have absolutely no conception of the necessary prerequisites for gaining the ends that they seek for some of their supporters. For example, in their elaborations on "job inequality" the NAACP ignores the fact in the matter of obtaining a job that is the most paramount consideration. These people are unable to obtain jobs not because they are black or are Communist inspired or wear white sox to Sunday School but because they can't do anything.

It is really amazing to see the number of pople who scream bloody murder bcause nobody will put them on a payroll when they are unable to produce a single service or product (which is the first requirement for gainful employment). I would suggest to you fanatics that walk the streets carrying self-pity signs that you get smart for a change and learn how to drive a nail or lay brick or manage a business and then you won't have to lay in the railroad tracks so you can get a check to feed your families with from the NAACP for "interracial participation."

ARISE!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

My unmitigated applause to the author of Court Will be Knocked For Justice. It seems high time that some prudent sole would stand in defense of the United States Supreme Court against the verbal onslaughts from a group of mentally deficient orangoutangs whose knowledge of American jurisprudence parallels that of an anthropoid ape.

I would suggest that those who so violently oppose the actions of the Court establish an independent supreme court and there, squalorring in their own stupidity, they can happily infringe upon legal priviledges, upset precedents, crush minority rights, and generally raise hell with a legal system which can be traced back to 1066 and further.

Our existing Supreme Court is anti-God, anti-American, anti-motherhood, anti-sex, and anti-you. The Court is composed of legal imbeciles, you know more of the law than they do.Neanderthals of the U.S., ARISE!

No Leadership?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Last Thursday morning before starting on my way to classes I picked up a copy of the Daily Tar Heel. My first thoughts of just another political stunt as I read the headline, "Fleishman Praises SP And Slams UP," were quickly squelched when I read the article. When we read, "Joel Fleishman, former Student Party Chairman and now Legal Assistant to Governor Terry Sanford, Tuesday night blasted the University Party," it is definitely time to reassess our thoughts of the Student Party. Is it time for a change in name from Student Party to a more appropriate title, "Alumni Party"?

I myself, and I don't think anyone else, has any objection to Mr. Fleishman coming to address the Student Party or any other group on campus, but if Mr. Fleishman is to come let him speak on a topic he knows something about. Let him speak on his job in the Capitol or on North Carolina Politics, but not on a subject that happens to be none of his business. Mr. Fleishman graduated ten years ago. Ten years ago it was time for Mr. Fleishman to get out of student politics.

The only question and concern I have is for the Student Party. If they do not have enough qualified students of the University helping to run their Party they should disband. If they must approach alumni to make their criticisms then it is quite evident that their leadership is lacking.

Political Issue?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Your reporter, Mr. Bulkley, missed Governor Wallace's most significant remark at the Citizen's Council in Durham Sunday night. Mr. Wallace said (I quote from the Durham Sun): "Segregation is purely a political issue. There is no moral issue involved."

So Medgar Evers's assassination was just jolly Southland politics? So inciting a church bombing (or ten) is only ordinary vote-getting? So turning fire hoses and dogs on women is just Birmingham's version of Tammany?

Looking at North Carolina, I find it easy to understand that it is politically expedient to keep the university small and the public schools dreadful (and expensive). An illiterate citizenry is important here; it provides a labor force well suited to North Carolina's industry, and of course it provides the votes that elect some truly incredible legislators.

But murder and assault? Perhaps I am falling right into the Goldwater style of old-fashioned thinking, but it seems to me there was a day when murder and assault were considered immoral.

Guest Editor Says:

It's A Mecca of Mekkos

By GLADYS ALLISON

The first day at anything — a new home, a new school, a new job—can be kind of frightening. The first day at work for a leading New York fashion magazine can be absolutly terrifying. Early one Saturday morning last June I arrived at the Greybar Building, on Lexington Avenue to begin a months' Guest Editorship with Mademoiselle Magazine. Was I dressed alright? Should I be wearing gloves? a hat? What would they say about no lipstick? What would the other 19 college girls be like?

Nervous question flew through my mind . . . until Margaret, a senior from Wesley, came into the lobby too. Even before I talked with her, I stopped worrying: Margaret wasn't wearing lipstick either, her golden hair hung straight and free, and most important, she was wearing a Marimekko dress. I crossed the lobby and without pausing to introduce myself asked, "That is a Marimekko, isn't it?" She said yes, it was, and from that moment we were friends.

The Dress

What in the world is a Marimekko? Simply stated, it's a dress imported from Finland. Although it has been called both "sack" and "shift," the words will offend the sensibilities of Mekko admires. It is, rather, loose or free-form. "Mekko," Finnish for doll's dress, accurately describes its typical, triangular, paper doll shape—round neck, elbow-length sleeves, and sloping sides.

Each dress design is imaginatively named— heath blossom, wild rose, red onion—as are the handscreened fabrics—corn stubble, carriage wheels, puff balls, puddles, etc. Brilliant colors boldly juxtaposed bring sunshine into the home during the dreary Finnish winter.

Among them are bright lavenders, tangerines, golds, pinks magentas, brick reds, and olive greens. There are 600 different Marimekko styles and 60 different fabric designs that appear in 30 or 40 colors. More often than not the dress is designed to meet the requirements of the fabric.

The Marimekko is meant to be comfortable and practical. It is for women whose "style in wearing dresses is to forget them." The independent intellectual woman has too much to do without fussing with girdles—"She has other interests, books, music, career." So it happens that the Marimekko, with something for every figure, becomes a part of modern interiors and modern lives.

How did the Marimekko come to the United States? Several years ago Finnish art was the subject of numerous newspaper and magazine features. At that time (the summer of 1959) Design Research Inc., a handsome boutique on Brattle Street in Cambridge, Massachusetts, held the first major exhibition of "Finland's Design." The exhibition was installed by Mrs. Armi Ratia, managing-director of the Marimekko Company. With her on her first visit to the States in '59 Mrs. Ratia brought 100 Marimekko dresses. It was not long after the exhibition that the "Marimekko" sign appeared in the D/R window and the sales girls at the boutique all wore gay, uninhibited Marimekkos. Not much later the shop and the dress became favorites of Radcliffe and Wesley girls and other fashion-conscious women.

Today, an exclusive item, the Marimekko may be bought only at D/R, at an international boutique on Lexington Avenue, at Nieman Marcus in Dallas, and at Marshall Field in Chicago . . . unless of course, one happens to be in Scandinavia, England, Canada, Australia, South Africa, or West Germany.

Even though the Finnish dress is not for sale in North Carolina, it influences our dress styles here at UNC. This summer a prominent designer pointed out to the Mademoiselle Guest Editors the importance of the Marimekko to the fashion world. (Note especially the new Villager line.)

The Marimekko Creator

Armi Ratia was born in Karelia, the eastern territory that Finland conceded to Russia in the winter of 1939. When she lost her family, Armi moved to Helsinki where she studied art and interior decorating and where she met and married Viljo Ratia.

Together they became directors of Printex, a textile company that makes fabrics for drapery and upholstery. For fun one day Armi cut a dress out of some strudy, cotton Printex material and Marimekko, the baby sister of Printex, was born.

After several years through much thought and artistic effort the cottons became nearly "infallible" and in 1958 designers at Marimekko began creating dresses with lines that could be adapted to wool.

Armi Ratia is strong, kind, vibrant, reserved, fun, energetic, creative, Finnish. Her strength and clear vision are evident in the way that she has guided Marimekko.

Undisturbed by the "trend" or by the demand to "keep up with the market," she has not, for example, let style change dicate the hemline of the Marimekko.

As a consequence of Armi's firmness (some might say Finnish stubbornness), the Mekko is always constant even though it is always changing and therefore is not short-lived, is not a fad.

Armi Ratia has contributed directly to the economic well-being of her own country, for she has been responsible for bringing a great deal of money into Finland. It was estimated that nearly 40,000 Mekkos were sold in the U.S. alone last year, even though little advertising was done.

In speaking about Armi the most that associates can say is that "something radiates from her." The "Something" is the quality of living that is uniquely Finnish. This quality is suggested in the activity at the Marimekko factory in Helsinki, where on the top floor among brightly lit candles and bowls of flowers 200 girls seated at sewing machines sing together as they work.

It is expressed in the colors of Marimekko dresses, colors that whisper of the Midnight Sun, ten thousand lakes, forest of fir, blonde heads, and blue eyes.

HAPPINESS CAN'T BUY MONEY

With tuition costs steadily on the rise, more and more undergraduates are looking into the student loan plan. If you are one such, you would do well to consider the case of Leonid Sigafoos.

Leonid, the son of an unemployed bean gleaner in Straightened Circumstances, Montana, had his heart set on going to college, but his father, alas, could not afford to send him. Leonid applied for a Regents Scholarship, but his reading speed, alas, was not very rapid—three words an hour—and before he could finish the first page of his exam, the Regents had closed their briefcases crossly and gone home. Leonid then applied for an athletic scholarship, but he had, alas, only a single athletic skill—picking up beebees with his toes—and this, alas, aroused only fleeting enthusiasm among the coaches.

And then—happy day!—Leonid learned of the student loan plan: he could borrow money for his tuition and repay it in easy installments after he left school!

Happily Leonid enrolled in the Southeastern Montana College of Lanolin and Restoration Drama and happily began a college career that grew happier year by year. Indeed, it became altogether ecstatic in his senior year because Leonid met a coed named Anna Livia Plurabelle with hair like beaten gold and eyes like two sockets full of Lake Louise. Love gripped them in its big moist palm, and they were betrothed on St. Crispin's Day.

Happily they made plans to be married immediately after commencement—plans, alas, that were never to come to fruition because Leonid, alas, learned that Anna Livia, like himself, was in college on a student loan, which meant that he not only had to repay his own loan after graduation but also Anna Livia's and the job, alas, that was waiting for Leonid at the Butte Otter Works simply did not pay enough, alas, to cover both loans, plus rent and food and clothing and television repairs.

Heavy hearted, Leonid and Anna Livia sat down and lit Marlboro Cigarettes and tried to find an answer to their problem—and, sure enough, they did! I do not know whether or not Marlboro Cigarettes helped them find an answer; all I know is that Marlboros taste good and look good and filter good, and when the clouds gather and the world is black as the pit from pole to pole, it is a heap of comfort and satisfaction to be sure that Marlboros will always provide the same easy pleasure, the same unstinting tobacco flavor, in all times and climes and conditions. That's all I know.

Leonid and Anna Livia, I say, did find an answer—a very simple one. If their student loans did not come due until they left school, why then they just wouldn't leave school! So after receiving their bachelor's degrees, they re-enrolled and took master's degrees. After that they took doctor's degrees—loads and loads of them—until today Leonid and Anna Livia, both aged 87, both still in school, hold doctorates in Philosophy, Humane Letters, Jurisprudence, Veterinary Medicine, Civil Engineering, Optometry, Woodpulp, and Dewey Decimals.

Their student loans, at the end of the last fiscal year, amounted to a combined total of nineteen million dollars—a sum which they probably would have found some difficulty in repaying had not the Department of the Interior recently declared them a National Park.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Women sometimes ask how much make-up should one use This is a difficult question to answer as amount can be determined only by the dictates of an individual's coloring and tastes. In general, it is safe to say that any amount of make-up that produces a natural look is the proper if not perfect amount.

Too little use of make-up is every bit as great a disservice to a woman as is too much. Make-up for work about the home or garden is less demanding, of course, than requirements for evening and social life which must meet more exacting standards of effect.

Meeting proper standards as concerns your hair is no problem at all when you cultivate the happy habit of making periodic visits to Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. Our operators and stylists know every trick in the book for creating a world of charm. Make that appointment now at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon, 133½ East Franklin Street—Phone 942-4335.

-Bateson-

"Prior to the mass, so-called student group, we held hearings concerning adults. Several of those cases have been referred to the Justice Department for appropriate action. But not Bateson or Gumpert, because they didn't go to Cuba."

Mario Noto, associate commissioner of the U. S. Naturalization and Immigration Service, said in a telephone interview yesterday that he is not specifically aware of the Bateson case.

But, he noted, the possible violation of an alien student's immigration status is within the jurisdiction of his department to determine.

"Then we take such action as required by law," he said, including possible deportation.

Noto stressed, however, that all such cases "are carefully considered on an individual basis."

PEANUTS

Pardon me if I sound as if the executive position I've landed deals with the whole future of the world.

It does.

Certainly, there's no organization today conducting more vital business than the business of the United States Air Force. And very few organizations that give a college graduate greater opportunities for responsibility and growth.

As an Air Force officer, you'll be a leader on the Aerospace Team—with good pay, a 30-day paid vacation each year, educational opportunities.

How can you get started? For many, the best way is through Air Force ROTC. But if you missed out on AFROTC, or if there's no unit on your campus, you can still apply for Air Force Officer Training School. This three-month course leads to a commission as a second lieutenant in the United States Air Force.

Blocked Kick Wins 28-27 Thriller For Frosh

By BILL LEE

Leon Fonvielle, leading a wave of Blue, exploded his way through the Duke line to block a last ditch field goal attempt by the Blue Imps yesterday and preserve a 28-27 victory for the Carolina freshmen.

The final seven seconds ticked off the clock as the halfback slapped Kit James kick to the ground to hand Duke its first defeat of the season. Carolina's record now stands at three and one.

The Duke rally began with one minute remaining in the game after a short punt by UNC's Danny Talbott. Talbott's timing was thrown off by a rushing Blue Imp and the punt was taken by Ron Westfort to the UNC 45.

Todd Orvald then came in to throw passes of 17 yards to Wayne Guckenberger at the 28, and 24 yards to Dave Dunaway at the 4.

An incompleted pass thrown behind the receiver set up the final play which had an estimated 2500 fans on their feet.

The Tar Babies got their first touchdown with less than a minute gone in the game. Spencer Barrow returned the opening kickoff 15 yards to the UNC 45. Talbott passed to Barrow to the Duke 42, and, after Fonvielle carried twice for three yards, pitched to end Bobby Knott in the end zone. Talbott converted to put Carolina ahead 7-0.

Duke quickly retaliated with an 86-yard drive in 13 plays. After UNC was penalized for offside, the two-point conversion came short, making the score 7-6 with Duke on the short end.

Carolina scored again early in the second quarter, after keeping the ball for 19 plays and eight minutes. The big break came when Duke was called for roughing the kicker at the Blue Imp 39, moving the ball to the 24. Knox McMillan carried to the 21, where Jeff Beaver tossed to Bud Phillips at the 17.

Jim Fortune carried to the nine and McMillan moved to the six. Barrow got the first down on the one where Talbott sneaked over for the score. Talbott converted to make it 14-6 Carolina.

Less than three minutes later, an errant Talbott pass was picked off by Bruce Wiesley, who scamperd 45 yards for a Duke score. Mike Shasby's pass to Dunaway for two points tied the game at 14-14.

An offisde penalty cost Duke another touchdown in the final moments of the first half. The penalty, called with no time left on the clock, enabled Beaver to score from the two.

This drive was highlighted by Beaver's passing, moving the ball 76 yards in eight plays. A pass interference penalty was called on Ken Chatham with three seconds left on the four, where Talbott tried a field goal. On the unsuccessful attempt, the offside penalty was called.

Carolina's final score came on a five yard pass from Talbott to Knott deep in the end zone. Talbott converted for 28-14.

Minutes later, with Talbott standing on his own five, Mike Renneker burst through to block the punt. The ball was picked up by Wiesley who carried into the end zone. The kick by James was good to make the score 28-21, Carolina, with four minutes left in the third quarter.

A 64-yard run from scrimmage by Ken Chatham accounted for Duke's final touchdown. The attempt at a two-point conversion failed when two penalties were called against Duke for illegal procedure and pass interference. This proved to be the Blue Imp's downfall.

Jay Calabrese, the big Duke Fullback, led the game in rushing with 61 yards in 11 carries. Carolina's fullback, Barrow, led the Tar Baby ground attack with 35 yards in 10 carries.

Beaver threw 16 times for 106 yards, and Talbott added 75 through the air in 11 attempts. and two punt returns for a com- Phillips returned four kickoffs bined total of 127 yards.

USC "Sleeper" Team May Surprise Heels

DTH staffer John Montague is on the road with the UNC football team in Columbia, S. C. Read his on-the-spot account of this afternoon's UNC-South Carolina game in tomorrow's Daily Tar Heel.

Today's game will be carried locally over WRAL (1240) and WCHL (1360) beginning at 2:00.

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

A dark alley filled with ominous black shadows awaits the ACC's newly-discovered fair-haired child, North Carolina, this afternoon.

It's called Carolina Stadium, but it's not particularly friendly to any Tar Heels, for it's in Columbia, South Carolina and the home team is a group of dark-horse Gamecocks from USC.

They are the ones that ACC pundits can't figure out. Before the season began, South Carolina was given a good shot at the league title, but since then it has won one game, tied one and looked pretty bad in doing all of it.

Much of the blame has fallen on Rooster quarterback Dan Reeves, the junior who last year set all kinds of records for 19-year old signal-callers. But Reeves has been bothered by injuries this season (to a knee and the eyes), rendering him somewhat ineffective much of the time.

He is the key to this team which must be called a "sleeper" from here on in. It is a club which is ready to explode much like the Tar Heels were ready last week. That they did explode into a dangerous ACC threat is apparent. Whether they can sustain the drive and power of the 31-10 massacre is the point in question.

South Carolina is offensively ahead of only Wake Forest and Virginia in the conference. Chief threat along the ground (in addition to Reeves, a fine runner) is halfback-fullback Marty Rosen.

Rosen (6-0, 195) is currently the ACC's third-leading rusher with an average of 4.6 yards a carry.

In the backfield with the two "R" boys are halfback Larry Gill (5-11, 195) and fullback Carl Huggins (6-0, 210). Huggins is also averaging around four yards.

The flankers for Coach Marvin Bass' young club typify the size and mobility of USC's line. It is said to be the largest team (up front) Carolina will face this year.

Roy Chatman and Billy Nies are the two ends more noted for defense than ability to catch the ball. Chatham (6-3, 215) is a two-year letterman while Nies (a weights man in track) rates as Reeves' favorite target.

At the tackles for USC are Steve Cox (6-4, 240), probably its best lineman on the team and Lennie Sears (6-5, 235), a sophomore from the New York City area.

Mike Kirkpatrick (6-3, 260) and Tom Gibson (6-4, 236) man the guard positions while Mark Hanna is, at center position, the only lineman under 200 pounds (5-11, 185).

For UNC, Coach Jim Hickey will again call to his equally-line units and two quarteroacks to carry the burden of living up to last week's show.

Junior Edge at quarterback, Ronnie Jackson and Ken Willard at the halves and Eddie Kesler at fullback make up the first backfield. Willard, with a 91-yard day against State, still holds second place among the league's runners with 288 yards.

Gary Black, the scooter quarterback, and Ron Tuthill, who runs behind Willard, are Hickey's best pinch-hitters.

On the line will be split end Bob Lacey and last week's star, tight end Joe Robinson, at the flanks. Cole Kortner and Vic Esposito will start the tackles with Jerry Cabe and Richy Zarro at guards and Chris Hanburger at center.

Ken Willard Bursts For Three Yards And Carolina Win

North Carolina's star halfback (40) drives way into South Carolina end zone with one minute, 48 seconds left in the game at Columbia yesterday. Willard just made it past efforts of Gamecocks' Pete DiVenere (34) and Lide Huggins (41) for only score in tense Carolina clash, won by UNC, 7-0. John Hammett (under Willard) and Chris Hanburger (55, rear) threw key blocks for TD which gave UNC sole possession of first place in the Atlantic Coast Conference. Victory was Tar Heels' fifth against a single loss and now puts them full game ahead of NC State and Duke, whose game yesterday went to Wolfpack, 21-7 (See Page 4).

Probation Given To 2 For Lying

Chem Student Falsifies Roll; Another Fails To List Car

Two students were put on two-semester probation by the Men's Council Thursday night for lying.

A freshman was found guilty of falsifying a laboratory class roll. He signed in and out of the class without staying to do any work as his signing implied.

He turned himself in upon the urging of his roommate who told him he had committed an Honor Code offense.

The other student, a sophomore, was convicted of lying when he recorded that he had no car on his registration card last September. The student was scholastically ineligible to have a car on campus.

He turned himself in to an Honor Council member after a campus police officer had told him to report to South Building for parking on campus without a registration sticker.

The student said that the man at the registration desk last September had advised him that if he really needed the car, not to park it on campus and he wouldn't be caught.

After receiving his sentence, the boy was told by the Dean of Men's office that he would have to take his car home as soon as possible.

Students who are academically ineligible to have cars are ordered to take them home when they are caught, Dean of Men William G. Long said.

Those who are allowed to have cars and say so when they register in the fall but do not register the cars, must pay a $5 late registration fee.

If they say on their registration form that they do not have a car when they do, then they are charged with lying.

Foundation Backs Race Peace Corps

NEW YORK (UPI) — A privately sponsored peace corps to work on the race relations problems in the United States was announced this week by the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation.

Adlai E. Stevenson, U. S. ambassador to the United Nations and chairman of the foundation, said that initially, most of the people in the program would come from the Peace Corps because of their experience in human relations, but that other qualified persons would be sought for the job.

Hyman H. Bookbinder, director of the foundation, said 19 veterans of two years with the Peace Corps already have volunteered for training in the pilot program, which will pay them considerably higher than the Peace Corps.

Salary for the workers, who will be called "interns," said Bookbinder, will be $5,000 a year with the Peace Corps paying half and the agency with which the interns work paying the other half. All other expenses, such as travel and training, which he estimated at another $3,500 to $4,000 per man, will be paid by the Peace Corps, Bookbinder said.

Stevenson, who announced the program at a news conference said that the program would go into effect Jan. 1, with 25 interns. Another 25 per month are to go into training so long as funds permit, he added. The ambassador said he could "not predict" just how many persons eventually would be involved in the project, because of fund considerations.

"The critical need for trained inter-group relations specialists has been identified by the Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Foundation as a contribution to the nation's racial crisis," Stevenson told newsmen.

Ford Grant To Back Regional Humanities Plan For UNC, Duke

$800,000 To Be Split By 2 Schools

UNC and Duke University will share an $800,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to set up a Co-operative Program in the Humanities, it was announced today.

Joint announcement of the new program and of receipt of the funds was made by President William C. Friday and Chancellor William B. Aycock of UNC and President Douglas M. Knight of Duke.

Each University will get half the money for the program, which is designed to strengthen humanistic research and scholarship in the two Universities and in cooperating liberal arts colleges of North and South Carolina and Virginia.

The action of the Ford Foundation in backing this collective venture marks the first attempt to capitalize on the strength of regional colleges and universities in the humanities, Foundation officials said.

Previous grants in the humanities by the Foundation have been nationwide in scope.

Under the new program, selected faculty members from the cooperating liberal arts colleges in the three-state region will be invited to spend a semester or an academic year at either UNC or Duke. These Humanities fellows, who will come from departments of history, philosophy, English, classical languages, modern foreign languages, music, art and theater, will carry out studies in association with appropriate members of the Graduate School faculties of the two universities.

The Fellows will have full use of the humanities research resources which the two universities have developed. Library holdings in these fields here and at Duke are among the strongest in the nation.

Officials of UNC and Duke said they plan not only to assist the cooperating liberal arts colleges by providing fellowships for their faculty members, but also hope to provide satisfactory replacements for these faculty members from among advanced graduate students who have completed most of the requirements for the Ph.D. degree either here or at Duke.

In addition, the Cooperative Program will include a six-week Institute during the summers of 1964 and 1965. The two Institutes will emphasize research in the Medieval-Renaissance period. The Institute Fellows will be drawn from a somewhat larger geographical area than the Academic-year Fellows.

A third feature of the Cooperative Program will be the utilization of Visiting Humanities Professors at the two universities. These will be outstanding scholars from other regions of this country and from abroad. They will spend varying periods of time in the two universities: an academic year, a semester, six weeks in the summer, or in some instances two or three weeks.

Commenting on the new Cooperative Program, President Knight said: "The fact that we in America now quite properly support scientific research very heavily makes it imperative that we should not lose sight of the fundamental importance of the other major areas of study. In my opinion, this Cooperative Program can contribute significantly to such needed emphasis upon the Humanities."

Chancellor Aycock expressed similar enthusiasm for the new program.

Underground Blast To Aid Test Ban

FALLON, Nev. (UPI)—The United States exploded a 12-kiloton nuclear device deep under the desert floor Saturday in an unspectacular but sophisticated experiment aimed at giving scientists the know-how to police a full test ban treaty.

Packing the wallop of 12,000 tons of TNT, the device was triggered at 1 p.m. EDT at the bottom of "butonhook" shaft 1,200 feet underground.

The ground directly above the shot point heaved momentarily and clouds of surface dust billowed 100 feet in the air. A small plume of smoke rose from one of the shafts. Seconds later there was a prolonged rumbling akin to distant thunder.

The bomb hollowed out a bubble in the ground approximately 170 feet in diameter, the walls of which were coated with molten rock. The initial shock pinched shut the walls of the "J" shaped shaft leading to the blast chamber, sealing it off before radioactive gasses and debris could reach the surface.

Newsmen stationed atop a mountain 8,000 feet from Ground Zero felt a distinct motion as the shock waves rippled from the blast.

Seismologists hoped this motion will provide the key to pinpointing sub-surface atomic detonations at great distances in other parts of the world.

Newsman To Talk

Edward P. Morgan, award winning ABC news commentator, will visit UNC on Nov. 1 and 2, lecturing to Radio, Television, and Motion Picture (RTVMP) classes.

Morgan will speak to a large class, "Critical Analysis of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures" on Saturday, Nov. 2, preceded by an informal coffee hour in his honor at Swain Hall. The coffee is limited to RTVMP majors.

Following the lecture, Morgan will be the guest of Chancellor William B. Aycock at the pre-football luncheon and Georgia-UNC football game.

Morgan is a long-time friend of the university and visited here last year as one of the principal speakers at the model United National General Assembly for the Middle South.

ORGAN RECITAL

Robert Triplett, acting UNC organist, will present an organ recital Tuesday, October 29, at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall.

The recital will mark Triplett's first public recital in Chapel Hill. His program will be the "Dialogue sur les Grands Jeux" by Clerambault; four organ choral-preludes by Bach and Brahms; the Prelude and Fugue in D Major by Bach; Pastoral by Roger-Ducasse; Arabesque sur les flutes by Langlais; Choralpartita uber "Lo den Herren" by Ahrens; and a selection from the Symphonic-Passion for organ by Dupre.

NEED A JOB?

The following companies will visit the campus the week of Oct. 28 - Nov. 1 for employment interviews:

Monday — Hooker Chemical Corp.; Kleeb and Bullard, CPA's; Southern Dyestuff Co. — Division of Martin Marietta Corp.; U. S. Treasury Dept. — Internal Revenue Service.

Tuesday — Union Bag-Camp Paper Corp.; Bureau of the Census; Furman University; Allied Chemical Corp.; U. S. Army Medical Corps.

Wednesday — American Enka Corp.; American Smelting & Refining Co.; Lehigh Portland Cement Co.; The National Cash Register Co.; Food and Drug Administration.

Thursday—Rohm & Haas Co.; Sinclair Research, Inc.; U. S. General Accounting Office.

Friday — Ingersoll-Rand Co.; U. S. Naval Ordnance Laboratory; California Packing Sales Co.; Marbon Chemical Division of Borg-Warner; Sonoco Products Co.

Seniors and graduate students desiring interviews should register with the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

Reporters Gather Here Next Month

Newspaper reporters and special writers who cover courts and trials in North Carolina will attend a special "Press Courtroom Reporting Seminar" at UNC Nov. 7 to 9.

The Institute of Government will offer three days of lectures, demonstrations and discussion of court procedures. Reporters from daily and weekly newspapers of the state will attend.

Elmer Oettinger, assistant director of the Institute of Government, will direct the seminar. Co-sponsor is the N. C. Press Association.

John Sanders, director of the Institute of Government, will speak on the opening day of the seminar on facets of law and press relations in regard to courtroom procedures.

Speakers and panel members include Superior Court Judge Hamilton Hobgood, Louisburg; attorney Irving E. Carlyle of Winston-Salem; William Lassiter, of Raleigh; lawyer for the N. C. Press Assn., and E. Maurice Braswell of Fayetteville, attorney.

Newspaper participants include Sam Ragan, executive editor of the News and Observer in Raleigh; Mrs. Elizabeth Swindell, of the Wilson Times, president of the N. C. Press Assn., and other editors to be announced.

University Law School faculty members who will speak are John W. Scott and James W. Christopher. Prof. John Adams of the School of Journalism will lead a session.

Institute of Government specialists, in addition to Oettinger, are C. E. Hinsdale, Clyde L. Ball, Roddy M. Ligon and Jesse R. James.

The sessions begin Thursday, Nov. 7 and conclude Saturday, Nov. 9. Those attending will sit in a body at the UNC-Clemson-football game on Nov. 9.

UN Seminar Slots Open

Interviews will be held Monday, Oct. 28-Friday, Nov. 1, for the selection of delegates to this year's United Nations Seminar. This seminar, held annually in New York City over the Thanksgiving holidays, includes visits to various UN delegations followed by discussions on World Affairs and U. N. activities.

The central theme for the 1963 seminar will be "The U.N. and Word Polltics." The program will include discussions on the USSR: Sino-Soviet Relations; France: The Common Market and NATO in the Cold War; India: Sino-Indian relations; Indonesia and Malaysia: The role of the U.N. as insuring self-determination; Ghana: The role of smaller nations in the U.N.; and The United States: The United Nations and U.S. Foreign Policy.

Applications, available in the YM-YWCA office, must be filled out before the time of the interview. The cost of the trip is $35.00.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Ginny Heading For Atlantic Graveyard

Hurricane Ginny swung back to an east-northeast course Saturday and the weather bureau said the threat to North Carolina was decreasing "with the passing hour."

The weather agency said the storm had a forward speed of at least six miles per hour. A northeasterly course would carry the center of the tropical twister toward the cold North Atlantic, the graveyard of hurricanes.

Despite the lessening threat, the weather bureau kept gale warnings up on the southeastern North Carolina coast from Cape Fear to Maneto, and said frequent reconnaissance flights would be made into the hurricane area.

British Call Soviet Trawling Threat

LONDON (UPI) —British experts said Saturday that stepped-up spying by Russian trawlers on allied naval movements could spell danger to the projected mixed-manned nuclear surface force.

Russian vessels of an estimated 100-strong Soviet "spyfleet" of trawlers shadowed allied ships during NATO exercises off the coast of Scotland this week, according to official naval scources.

This followed similar tactics by Russian trawlers during NATO naval exercises in the Bay of Biscay last summer.

Such spying on allied naval moves was seen here to have developed into a "regular feature" of Soviet policy and with little apparent effort to disguise it. The British say that on latest available information the Russians appear to be improving their techniques all the time.

Yugoslav Relatives Hint Reprisals

NEW YORK (UPI) —The American-Serbian committee charged Saturday that the Yugoslav government has begun reprisals, including arrests, against families of emigres who picketed President Tito here earlier this week.

George Vujnovich, chairman of the committee, said the committee's attorney, J. Dudley Devine, will ask the state department to protest to the Yugoslav government concerning treatment of the demonstrators' relatives. Vujnovich said the committee has documentary evidence to back its charges.

Moroccans Launch Sharp Offensive

ALGERIA (UPI)—Heavily reinforced Moroccan troops launched a sharp offensive in the sun-scorched Sahara Saturday in an apparent attempt to encircle Algerian army units on the mineral-rich southwest corner of Algeria.

The new drive was reported in the Tindouf area, a desert region rich with iron ore deposits, as both Morocco and Algeria maneuvered to strike a possible knockout blow that would enable them to negotiate from strength at a peace conference table.

UNC Press Does Publishing Feat

By PETE IVEY

One of the great publishing feats of the 20th century, involving the British Museum and the University of North Carolina Press, is the announcement today that the 378-year-old John White paintings of early American "Lost Colony" life in the New World will be issued in color next Spring in two volumes at a total cost of $225 a set.

Lambert Davis, Director of the University of North Carolina Press, announced that the first facsimile reproductions ever made of the famous paintings that John White executed on Roanoke Island in 1585 is made possible after ten years of collaboration between Chapel Hill and London.

"An important event in the history of Anglo-American cultural relations," Davis phrased the event.

"The American Drawings of John White, 1577-1590" is the title.

White's drawings were the first pictorial documents of the New World done by an English artist and were the basis for Theodore DeBry's famous engravings of life in the New World which have remained the classic source of graphic information about sixteenth century America for three centuries.

The reproduction of the paintings in full color involved the work of French, Dutch and English craftsmen.

The project is supported by the UNC Press with a grant from the Old Dominion Foundation and a loan from the Aubrey Lee Brooks Fund. The British Museum was assisted by several foundations.

Jonas Won't Run For Governorship

CHARLOTTE (UPI) — Rep. Charles Raper Jonas, R-N.C., said Saturday he had rather be a congressman than a gubernatorial candidate and thus flung open the race for governor in 1964.

Jonas, a congressman for 12 years and the GOP's star Tar Heel vote getter, was considered the party's best chance of upsetting the Democratic rule that has prevailed for generations.

But the congressman, at a news conference, said he was not interested. The announcement was long-awaited by the leaders of both parties and it was expected to encourage some GOP hopefuls who had hitherto remained silent in awe of Jonas' potential candidacy.

Jonas spoke to reporters following a two-hour, closed door session with some North Carolina Republican leaders, state Republican Chairman J. Herman Saxon of Charlotte and State Rep. William Osteen of Guilford County, the GOP minority leader in the House.

He emerged with this statement:

"At the end of the current term I will have completed 12 years in Congress. If I expect to continue in public service it seems to me that I should try to return to Congress where this experiene and influence can best be used for the benefit of the people of the 8th District, our state and nation."

No Ambition

He added, "I have no higher political ambitions."

The Lincolnton lawyer had for months refused to comment on the possibility of his candidacy. And in recent weeks a "Draft Jonas" campaign had sprung up over the state, which Jonas firmly asked to be discontinued.

A Return To Speaking Terms?

A little more communication within the University family will be the goal of student leaders when they meet the subcommittee of the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees tomorrow.

The issue to be communicated is the recent faculty decision to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

The students are not going to try to petition the Trustees. Rather they wish to present the entire situation in an attempt to keep the Trustees informed of both sides of the most significant issue of the school year.

Whereas communication of the issues at hand is the aim of the students, it has not been the goal of the faculty.

The faculty committee's decision to negate a section of the Student Constitution, a section approved by another faculty committee in 1957, has been made behind closed doors. Students were given no indication of the ruling until it had already been made.

The faculty's reasoning in this was that they had already made up their minds about it and did not want to negotiate in "bad faith." They were thinking of last spring's controversy over the apartment rule. These negotiations were considered in "bad faith" and the faculty did not wish a repeat performance.

The question to look into is whether or not the faculty had good reason to make their decision.

They cited the University administration Code, approved by the Trustees in 1957, right after the creation of the Student-Faculty Review Board, as providing the authority by which they made their decision. The Code contained a clause saying that "full and final authority" for matters of student discipline rested in the Chancellor and the faculty.

The faculty argued that this was an organic change in relations between student judiciaries and the faculty, and that it therefore implied their power, in fact their duty under due process, to have an all-faculty review board.

The interpretation of the "full and final authority" clause of many students and some faculty members is that it is not an organic change in student-faculty relationships but merely a clarification of what has existed all along.

This interpretation has it that although the faculty has always had this authority, decisions involving student judiciaries have always been made through consultation with students. This tradition of student-faculty cooperation stretches back to 1903. The point is that there was room for argument and agreement in the faculty's decision. The changes were based on the interpretation of a clause written before any of them were connected with the committee involved.

Furthermore a basic tradition in student-faculty relationship has been violated. The Student Government and the Honor System lose face and the faculty is distrusted.

Hopefully communication lines can be re-established in the coming weeks. The Trustees meeting is a good place to start.

To Be Effective, We Must Have Priorities

The Charlotte Observer

In his recent speech in Salt Lake City, President Kennedy seemed to sense that his administration sometimes had responded to emergencies—such as the Buddhist uprising in South Vietnam—with all the aplomb of a man running with one foot in a bucket.

His words reflected a move toward a more realistic stance concerning the world's trouble spots:

"We must acknowledge the realities of the world . . . We cannot remake other nations in our own image, nor can we enact their laws, nor can we operate their governments, nor can we dicate their policies . . . We must recognize that every nation determines its policy in terms of its own interest . . . The purpose of foreign policy is not to provide an outlet for our sentiments of hope or indignation; it is to shape real events in a real world."

To the Dominican Republic and to Honduras—both scenes of recent military coups—it means that we will protest the ousting of constitutionally elected governments, even to the extent of cutting off aid and urging Organization of American States sanctions. But we won't send in the Marines.

To South Vietnam's President Ngo Dinh Diem, it means we will complain when Buddhists are persecuted and protest the beating of Amercian newsmen there, but we will remember that our primary aim in being there is to repel the Communists.

It means, in short, that we recognize our global responsibilities—but we ought to know better than to try to remake the world.

Some basic touchstones we can never abandon. We will always oppose oppression and tyranny, and our policy can never condone the crushing of a Hungarian revolution with Russian tanks.

But if we hope to be effective, there must be priorities. Columnist Eric Sevareid's suggestion was apt: "An all-conquering tyranny we shall resist to the end. Petty, local or temporary tyrannies we shall often have to abide."

Thus, it seems we have at last chosen to abide an imperious Diem regime in South Vietnam toward the broader goal of preventing an all-Communist Southeast Asia.

To this approach will inevitably come the echo of "surrender" from the critics of the administration. But is even the mighty United States so powerful that it can swat Sukarno, sit on Red China, whip all the Communists in Southeast Asia, arrogantly refuse to talk with any Iron Curtain country, occupy Cuba, throw out the military upstarts in Honduras and the Dominican Republic, push Brazil into some kind of stability and tear down the Berlin Wall, all with one chauvinistic outburst?

We have to start on these problems somewhere, but to talk of "total victory" smacks of the hollow boast of an opportunist.

To be realistic, we must count victory as an unflagging fight against the larger tyrannies, skillfully and courageously executed, but strong and flexible enough to withstand the inevitable surprises and setbacks, from which no administration is immune.

Prolix

Raleigh N & O

"I can't understand why there was no confrontation of the students in the formation of this decision," says the president of the Carolina student body. Obviously education marches forward at Chapel Hill where once a man might have said, "I don't see why they didn't see us before they decided."

Letters To The Editors

Should The Vietnamese Decide?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It has been nearly 10 years since the fall of Dien Bien Phu and in the intervening decade the U.S., under the leadership of both Eisenhower and Kennedy, has poured billions of American dollars and countless lives, both American and Vietnamese, into a government that can hardly be called a representative democracy.

Recent admissions of the State Department concerning the government of Diem lead one to an inescapable conclusion that in Viet Nem, and therefore probably elsewhere throughout the world, as far as U.S. policy and interests are concerned, the end does justify the means. In South Viet Nam, specifically, the means is the government of Ngo Dinh Diem with its policies of the strategic hamlet and religious persecution and the end a communist-free Viet Nam and eventually a communist-free Southeast Asia.

It is necessary at this point to examine the opponent with whom we have been fighting so long and bloody a war. The quick and easy answer to this would be to call them Communists. However Diem has a rather disquieting tendency to label anyone to the left of Adolf Hitler a Communist. Indeed, he recently labeled South Vietnamese Buddhists, who comprise well over half of the population, as Communistic.

The mass media in this country try to draw a line between the legitimate protests of students and Buddhists on the one hand and the armed struggles of the "Viet Cong" guerrillas on the other. They depict the guerrillas as a isloiated force of evil and fanatical Communists who only exist by terrorizing the peasants and to whom the peasants are at best apathetic. Nothing could be farther from the truth—Buddhists, students and guerrillas are all conducting one UNIFIED struggle, the struggle of the South Vietnamese National Liberation Front.

The first congress of this National Libration Front was held in 1961 in a village of South Viet Nam. This congress represented every province and major town in South Viet Nam and a good cross-section of the population. Religious organizatins, political parties, peace committees, ethnic-minorities, worker-peasant organizations, associations of writers and journalists—all were represented. The Cental Committee elected at this Congress included a Buddhist Bonz and a Catholic priest. The NLF issued a historic declaration calling for an end to Diem's regime, an end to U.S. intervention, election of a new National Assembly and President through "free- nonfraudulent" balloting, the dissolution of concentration camps and the freeing of political prisoners, an end to the economic monopoly of the Diem family, respect for the 1954 Geneva Agreements, and other basic and reasonable democratic demands.

On April 6, 1954, a certain young Senator from Massachusetts attacked the Eisenhower administration's proposed intervention in Vietnam:

"To pour money, material and men into the jungles of Indo-China without at least a remote prospect of success would be dangerously futile and destructive . . . I am frankly of the belief that no amount of American assistance . . . can conquer . . . an enemy of the people which HAS THE SYMPATHY AND SUPPORT OF THE PEOPLE."

The young senator who said that was John Fitzgerald Kennedy. The guerrillas had the sympathy and support of the people in 1954, and they still have it. The peasants, the Buddhists, the students, practically everyone in Viet Nam supports the National Liberation Front. This NLF—not Diem and his military advisors—is the legitimate government of the country. The so-called Viet Cong is not an isolated group of Communist bandits. It is the army of the NLF, the army of the Vietnamese people.

How else can one explain the fact that the NLF army—twenty thousand inadequately armed guerrilla fighters—wins victory after victory over U.S. air power, 15,000 U.S. military advisors, and the 300,000 conscripts of Diem's superbly equipped army? How else can one explain the fact that the NLF has completely liberated over 50 per cent of the territory of South Viet Nam, (liberated territories being those in which the NLF administration functions, in which the Diemist tortures and murders have ceased, and in which basic reforms such as land reform are being carried out)? How else can one explain the large "Twilight Zone" in which the NLF controls things by night while the Diemist administration appears to function by day? How else can one explain the fact that in spite of direct U.S. intervention in 1962, and in spite of stepped-up repressions of the people during that year, and in spite of greatly stepped-up military operations — the NLF army doubled its fighting force in 1962?

The most fundamental law of guerrilla warfare is that a guerrilla force cannot survive without popular support. If, as the U.S. press claims, the people are indifferent to the guerrilla cause, if they are being terrorized by the guerrillas, then the people would not be supporting the guerrillas and the latter would have been destroyed long ago by the Kennedy-Diem war machine!

As to the situation on the other side of the "battle lines" Diem's military advisors constantly complain about the "demoralization" and lack of "fighting spirit" of Diemist troops. They blame it on Buddhist pacifism (one reason for the crack-down on Buddhists last summer) or on racial inferiority. A much better explanation is that Diem's army of conscripts wants no part of this colonialist war. Like their brothers in the villages they long for the day when the NLF will run Diem and his military advisors out of Viet Nam. They are sick of a regime which bases itself upon torture, concentration camps ("strategic villages"), and mass murder of civilians. In the first six months of 1962 fifteen thousand Diemist troops deserted to the NLF—in many cases complete units, including officers. The Diem family is so hated—and the rascism of U.S. military advisors so intolerable—that even Diem's most highly indoctrinated officers often desert to the other side. Practically every civilian in the country, in spite of the risk of torture, has taken part in mass demonstrations — not just once, but many times—against the Diemist regime. "The thing that bothers me about this government," a high State Department official said in Saigon last March, "is that the only people who are for it are the Americans."

The editors of the "Daily Tar Heel" said that Diem is far less of an evil than Vietnamese communism. It is obvious that the Vietnamese people do not think so. Recently plebiscites were held among Vietnamese in Thailand and New Caledonia who had been clamoring since 1954 to be allowed to return home. These people were subjected to propaganda and other pressures to get them to vote to return the South. In Thailand 98 per cent voted to return to the North. In New Caledonia, 93 per cent voted the same way.

In contrasting the North and South, an Indian diplomat from the International Control Commission told New Zealand correspondent W. G. Burchett:

". . . in Hanoi, President Ho Chi Hinh walks around everywhere without even a bodyguard as far as I can tell, while even a vice-minister of the Diem Government coming to our National Day reception this year (1962) was escorted by eight jeep-loads of police and two armored cars."

It is at this point in an argument that defenders of U.S. policy in South Vietnam play their ace in the hole, the time-worn phrases concerning national security. The State Department White Paper on South Vietnam claims that U.S. intervention was necessary to counter Chinese and North Vietnamese aggression. Washington and Saigon have long pressed the point that North Vietnamese troops were participating in the civil war in violation of the Geneva Ceasefire Agreements on Indio-China (1954), thus freeing the U.S. to do likewise. This is but a shallow fabrication as the press has from time to time admitted. Quoting "Top U.S. officials" the Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times wrote on June 18:

"In fact . . . the Chinese and North Vietnamese have exercised care to avoid sending North Vietnamese guerrillas into South Viet-nam." Involving the threat of Chinese expansionism it was admitted that the Administration had reached the conclusion that China was "unlikely to start any major aggression . . ."

And further refutation of Kennedy's White Paper The Washington Post (March 6, 1963) quoted General Paul D. Harkins, Commander of U.S. forces in South Vietnam: "Harkins said the guerrillas obviously are not being reinforced or supplied systematically from North Vietnam, China or any other place. He said they apparently depend for weapons primarily upon whatever they capfure. Many of their weapons, he said, are homemade."

In the fear that this information is not enough to convince the reader of the true state of affairs in Viet Nam, perhaps we should give some facts on the almost incredible brutality that is being committed in Viet Nam by the Diemist forces. Forces whose war of extermination against the people is being paid for to the tune of 1.5 million dollars a day by the U.S. taxpayers (three billion dollars grand total in economic and military aid to Diem so far). Forces who are being led in their murder and plunder by a U.S. military command in Saigon and by fifteen thousand U.S. advisors. Many people would not believe these atrocities. Suffice it to say that they are well enough documented from International Control Commission reports, NLF reports and reports by news correspondents from all over the globe that four thousand American Clergymen have joined in a denunciation of this war.

Senator Wayne Morse, Bertrand Russell, the California Young Democrats, the International Union of Students, the nations of Africa and Asia—decent people the world over—have also demanded that the U.S. pull out of Viet Nam and let the people there decide their own destiny.

Are We Vulgar?

Editors, The Tar Heels,

Sometimes the DTH carries its fetish for "objectivity" to the point of ridiculousness. Reporter Joel Bulkley said in his article on Madame Nhu's speech at State College: "Her family has been criticized for its alleged persecution of Buddhists." Here we have a FACT, the persecution of Buddhists. A fact which has been fully documented by eyewitness wire service correspondents. A fact which has been openly admitted in even the most conservative chain newspapers of America. A fact which is so well documented that it has moved many of America's most distinguished statesmen to rise in the halls of Congress and make those halls ring with passionate denunciations of Diemist tyranny. A fact so well documented that four thousan U. S. clergymen have called for an end to U.S. aid to Diem. A fact so well documented that the whole world accepts it and is furious about it. Nevertheless, to the "objective" DTH this fact is not fact at all. It is only "alleged."

After all, Mrs. Nhu is a very, very beautiful woman. And to the sort of mentality which dominates the DTH, a pretty face is obviously more important than the facts.

Last August the Diem regime in South Vietnam ordered raids on Buddhist pagodas by Col. Le Quang Tung's Himmler-like Special Forces (which had been receiving $300,000 a month from the CIA). In these raids (Aug. 21) dozens of Buddhist monks and worshippers were gunned down in cold blood.

AP correspondent Malcolm Browne watched in Saigon while Diem's goon squads "blasted their way through the pagoda's iron gate with explosives . . . . A din of gongs, drums and screams were punctuated by shots." Holy objects were smashed. priests and nuns were shot, clubbed and tear gassed. Six of the religionists were reported killed, thirty were badly hurt, the rest whisked away to prison.

In the city of Hue another AP eyewitness reported: "The civilian population rose in fury when armed government troops stormed two pagodas. Enraged men, women, boys and girls fought troops with sticks, rocks and fists . . . an enraged crowd of about 1500 tore the barbed wire down with their bare hands . . . Paratroopers . . . beat them with rifle butts . . . One man held up the prostrate body of a child and showed her to the crowd . . . Ten truckloads of students were later carried off to government prisons. They waved bloody shirts as they passed this correspondent."

Since August, the people of Saigon and other cities have continued to fight against this intolerable repression. Buddhists, university students and high school children have demonstrated. They have been met with clubs, machine guns, tear gas. Many have been killed. Over 45,000 students have been herded into concentration camps.

Madame Nhu, in response to this collective cry of desperation by the people, had the arrogance and inhumanity to say, "Let them barbecue themselves."

In September, 25 U. S. Senators drew up a resolution calling for an end to U.S. support of Diemist repressions. Sen Frank Church said in presenting this resolution that "such grisly scenes have not been witnessed since the Christian martyrs marched hand-in-hand into the Roman arena . . ."

During the student demonstrations one group shouted to U.S. correspondents: "Help us! Help us! President Kennedy supports Diem beating and arresting students!"

And how does the DTH reply to this call for help from our fellow students—the students of Vietnam?

It replies by quoting uncritically Madame Nhu's slander that the Buddhists and students are Communists—in spite of the fact that 75% of the Vietnamese people are Buddhist—in spite of the fact that many of the students now languishing in Diemist concentration esmps come from the wealthiest families in Saigon.

It replies with Curry Kirkpatrick's article praising Madame Nhu for the way she dresses and for her beauty.

It replies with Mickey Blackwell's adolescent puppy love article on Madame Nhu's daughter

One wonders why these reporters never stopped to think about how Madame Nhu and Le Thuy's fancy jewelry is paid for out of the pockets of unsuspecting U.S. taxpayers—and, more important, out of the blood and sweat of the peasants of Vietnam. The following quote is from a memorandum of the U. S. trained Vietnamese officers who lead the 1960 officers revolt and are now in exile in Cambodia:

"The national economy has been the personal affair of the Ngo family, completely in the hands of Mme. Nhu . . . American and other foreign economic aid are only 'means of production' to enrich themselves. No one is surprised when the Western press refers to Mme. Nhu as the 'world's fourth multimillionaire' . . . Big industrial and commercial enterprises (here the officers give a long list) have now become the out right property of the Ngo family. In other industrial and commercial companies, capital of the Ngo family reaches up to 60 or 90 per cent of total investments . . . ."

Murder, plunder, dictatorship, economic oligarchy: there you have the life history of Madame Nhu. Yet Kirkpatrick says of her, without mentioning the above facts: "some dish to see . . . is a knockout . . . wore button-shaped pearl earrings and a matching curved stickpin, which added a Western flavor to the beautiful oriental dress . . . the kind of gal who can put you into supreme Ecstasy with a simple little Go to Hell . . ."

"It" is obvious that Madame Nhu also sends the students of Vietnam into "supreme Ecstasy." Jealousy toward her husband is doubtless the driving force which propels them to risk their lives against the bullets and bayonets of the Special Forces in daily demonstrations. And as for the Buddist monks: As soon as they discover the "supreme Ecstasy" of being told to go to hell by Mme. Nhu, they will forget all about their so-called Nirvana.

Blackwell's article on Le Thuy is almost a paraphrase of Kirkpatrick's article: plenty of fashion page trivia but a complete absense of political analysis. One cannot be dissuaded from asking Mr. Blackwell: How many Vietnamese high school girls are languishing in prison while pretty little Le Thuy galavants around the U. S. in her fancy clothes. How many Vietnamese peasant girls are being rounded up at gunpoint and sent to army bordellos to serve Diem's Special Forces while Le Thuy flirts with bug-eyed American college boys.

The articles on Madame Nhu and Le Thuy point up the appalling political naivete of the DTH reporters. At the same time, they are just one more example of the cheapness and vulgarity of the DTH editors' approach to journalism: Keep one's readers doped up on light, frothy entertainment avoid presenting them with uncomfortable facts.

At the same time, they are just one more example of the cheapness and vulgarity of the DTH editors' approach to journalism: Keep one's readers doped up on light, fro thy entertainment; avoid presenting them with uncomfortable facts.

In these articles the "liberalism" of the DTH stands revealed for what it really is: a justification of any crime so long as it is committed in the sacred name of Anti-Communism. A justification of any sadism so long as the person committing it is a "dish" or a "knockout".

What is most shocking about the DTH articles, however, is that they reveal on the part of the button-down collar journalists who wrote them and the career center editors who printed them a complete apathy towards—and, indeed, a complete unawareness of—basic values of human dignity, human decency and human justice.

Willard's Late Blast Brings UNC 7-0 Victory

By JOHN MONTAGUE

COLUMBIA, S. C.—In his first five years as head coach at UNC, Jim Hickey has never been in a tie ball game. He came about as close to one Saturday as he'll ever want to.

Playing before a hollering homecoming crowd of 23,170, an inspired South Carolina team held off the favored Tar Heels for 58 minutes and 12 seconds before Ken Willard cracked the scoreless ice, ramming three yards off his right guard and into the end zone.

The stage was set for the breath-taking finish some ten minutes earlier when the announcement that N.C. State had defeated Duke sounded through the stadium. When the happy news reached them, the Tar Heels, who had been having plenty-big trouble with the fired-up Gamecocks, received the necessary stimulus to "outspirit" their stingy hosts in the ball game's waning moments. But even then it took some doing.

At that time John Hammett just downed Bill Edwards' punt on the USC 14, and the Gamecocks had a first dwn with 7:14 remaining.

On the first play, an incomplete pass, South Carolina was guilty of holding and it cost them seven yards—half the distance to the goal. Frank Gallagher's jarring tackle on the next play stopped fullback Carl Huggins cold on a draw play for no gain. Another pass went awry and Jack McCathern got off a third-down punt to Gary Black on the USC 42. the frisky quarterback returning it five yards.

With perfect position and plenty of time, the Tar Heels seemed almost certain to score. Ron Tuthill churned around right end for nine yards, Black snuck for two more and a first down, and a patented Black roll-out took the Heels to the enemy 19.

Another power sweep to the right by Tuthill produced a six-yard gain. It also produced some anxious moments for the Tar Heels. Tuthill, hit at the line of scrimmage scrambled away toward the sidelines and, when he was hit again at the 13, the ball popped loose. It bounced off a USC man and out of bounds. The referee ruled UNC possession.

With Dame Fortune smiling on them like this, how could the Tar Heels miss? Well, they did. The drive fell apart as Black lost a yard on a roll-out attempt and Edge threw incomplete twice into the end zone—first to Ronnie Jackson, then to Lacey.

Max Chapman trotted onto the field and, with the partisan crowd screaming "block that kick," the talented soph narrowly missed his field goal attempt from the 21. It was close, but a shade to the right. The underdog took over, the crowd went wild. Their celebration was premature.

The Carolina defense, which has yet to allow an ACC opponent a touchdown, held tight at the 20. Richy Zarro put a mean rush on Gamecock quarterback Dan Reeves, dropping him six yards behind the line of scrimmage. This was followed by two incomplete passes. USC had to kick and UNC had to score.

McCathern's punt was short and went out on his own 34. The clock showed 3:33 remaining as the Tar Heels started once more for that elusive end zone. This time they got there.

After throwing incomplete to Jackson, Edge fired to tight-end Hammett five yards in from the right sideline. The blond senior, finally coming around after a bothersome ankle sprain, picked up 14 yards before going out of bounds.

Willard was tried up the middle, but the South Carolina defense was unyielding and the play lost a yard to the 21. But the next play broke the Rooster's back. Edge spotted Eddie Kesler all by his lonesome at the 15, hit him with a bullet and the Salisbury tank spun to a big first down at the USC six.

It was Willard up the middle for three, then Willard again, this time through wind, sleet and snow and about 15 football players for the long-sought score. Dave Braine made good on his placement and one zero on the scoreboard was replaced by a seven. Carolina held USC on four plays, Edge ran two sneaks and the ball game was over.

The N.C. State victory over Duke gave the Heels an undisputed lease on first place in the ACC, with a 5-0 mark compared to 4-1 for Duke and State. As the Tar Heels drive for their first ACC championship, two obstacles — Clemson and Duke — loom large in the middle of the road.

South Carolina was right much of an obstacle itself on this warm, sunny afternoon. The Gamecocks took the opening kickoff and drove 60 yards to the UNC 15, before Cole Kortner recovered a Reeves' fumble to stop the hold bid.

The Tar Heels didn't get going until late in the period when they moved to the USC 31, only to have Lacey, who caught 10 passes in the game, fumble it away after taking a six-yard toss from Edge on the first play of the second period. Later in the quarter the Heels drove 80 yards to no avail. An ineligible receiver pushed UNC back 15 yards from the USC 15 and Chapman's field goal try from the 37 was way short.

Soon the bands, floats and South Carolina beauties took the field and UNC fans sat back and hoped the Tar Heels would come out of the half-time break like they did last week against State. It didn't happen and status quo prevailed through the third quarter. The final frame was also a stalemate until the last seven minutes and UNC's two drives—one unsuccessful, the other very, very, successful.

Pack Ravages Duke With 21-7 Luncheon

RALEIGH, N. C. (UPI) — North Carolina State, slashed previously unbeaten Duke 21-7 Saturday for an upset victory that kept alive the Wolfpack's hopes for an Atlantic Coast Conference championship.

State, next to last in rushing in the conference before Saturday's game, sliced through Duke's interior line almost at will while fired-up defense kept 14th-ranked Duke penned up in its own territory nearly all of the game.

Quarterback Jim Rossi and halfback Mike Clark broke loose for runs of 55 yards apiece to set up two of State's touchdowns.

Clark's run set up the first, with halfback Tony Kozarsky climaxing an 80-yard march in four plays with a six-yard crack into the end zone. Rossi tossed a 30-yard pass after his run to halfback Joe Scarpati for the second.

State end, Don Montgormery all-ACC last season, intercepted a Duke pass with three minutes to play and raced 11 yards for State's final score.

Sophomore quarterback Scotty Glacken hit Duke's great runner, Jay Wilkinson, on a 37-yard touchdown play in the final period as Duke tried to stage a belated comeback.

The pass climaxed a drive of 80 yards in eight plays, but one which nearly sputtered out on two occasions.

The Wolfpack's defense was outstanding as both teams' passing offense fell off in the gray, windy stadium where State played for the first time this year.

Going into the game Duke and North Carolina were tied for the ACC conference lead with 4-0 records. State 3-1 at the start of the game, had lost the preceding week to North Carolina for its only loss of the season and Duke has yet to meet the Tar Heels.

Glacken's pass to Wilkinson equalled a record for most touchdown passes thhrown by a Duke quarterback in a single season. It gave him nine, just three shy of the conference mark.

Wake Forest Humiliated– Virginia, Too

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C. (UPI) — Quarterback Dick Shiner rifled two touchdown passes to shifty Darryl Hill, then turned loose backs Jerry Fishman and Ernie Arizzi for three more scores Saturday to lead nonchalant Maryland past Wake Forest 32-0.

It was a familiar tune for the Deacons who have lost 16 consecutive games and been held scoreless in their past five outings.

Maryland either scored or mounted a scoring attack almost every time it got the ball as Shiner connected on 11 of 19 passes for 118 yards. His two scoring passes boosted his season total to seven.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va (UPI) —The hungry Clemson Tigers overpowered Virginia 35-0 Saturday with a crushing ground attack for their first win of the year.

The Tigers scored the first three times they had the ball and Clemson reserves picked up two more touchdowns in the last half. It was the third Atlantic Coast Conference loss for Virginia.

Clemson star quarterback Jim Parker was injured early in the game but sophomore Tom Ray went in and guided the Tigers to their highest score of the year.

Halfback Frank Howard Jr. son of the Clemson coach, scored the first touchdown of his collegiate career in the closing minutes of the final period on a three-yard run.

Manly's Close Win Tops Mural Action

By AL KAPLAN

The Manly Rivverats scored a touchdown on a long pass play with ten seconds remaining to beat Victory Village I, 18-15, Thursday.

Bob Brainard, Al Ellis and Larry Dean each scored TDs for Manly. Al Madison and Bud Nordan tallied six pointers for Victory Village.

In a battle of two undefeated teams, Chi Phi trounced DU, 26-6. Chi Phi ended the regular season with a 4-0 to 3-1 for DU. Both teams will participate in the playoffs.

Old West Packers swamped the Ehringhaus C Eagles 51-0. Bill Weems and Jim Blake each tallied two TDs to pace the Packers to their third straight win.

Parker Playmakers also finished out with a perfect 3-0 mark by trouncing the Ehringhaus A Horns 41-0. Leading the way with two touchdowns each were Ralph Hobbs and Dewey Carter.

PiKA lifted its record to 2-1 and a second-place finish in its league with a 12-7 win over TEP. Bob Harris scored all of PiKA's points.

The first and second place teams of each league will begin the playoffs for the intramural football champ. Two flights have been set up, the first teams in one and the runner-ups in the other.

The Aycock Aardvarks (4-0), Navy Sea-Lions (3-0), Craige B Casanovas (3-0), Old West Packers (3-0), Town Rats (3-0), Parker Playmakers (3-0), Town Lodgers (4-0), Everett Rogah (4-0), Emerson Cardplayers and the winner of the Manly-Parker game will be the competitors in the top bracket.

In the Frat division, the first place teams include: Sigma Nu (3-0), Chi Phi (4-0), Phi Delt (3-0), Kap Sig (3-0) and SAE (4-0).

Law II finished first in the grad division with a 3-1 mark. In the other grad league Med 1 was the winner.

Second place finishers who will be strong contenders are the Alexander Poobahs (2-1), the Mangum Redskins (2-1) and the BVP Bombers (2-1). Others in the frat league are DKE (2-1), DU (3-1), and Chi Phi (3-1).

A 2-year/24,000 mile warranty is no news among domestic cars. But have you shopped imports lately?

Several domestic cars are warranted 2 years or more. But very few imports have a warranty as solid as SAAB's 2-year/24,000 mile written warranty on engine, transmission, and differential.

SAABs are built to last because a famous Swedish aircraft company builds them. (Aircraft have to be built to last.) And while no car is completely infallible, we feel our SAAB comes closer than many cars — domestic or imported. So we back it up in writing . . . and with the very best SAAB service you can get. If you're shopping for a car, don't fail to see our Swedish SAAB. It's one of the most reassuring cars in the world to own.

Passenger 'town car' station 'pickup truck': Same 1964 SAAB station wagon

It's not a box on a bike, and it doesn't steer or park like one. Whether it's hauling cargo or cruising along in the 70's, a SAAB station wagon always looks and handles like a safe, handsome, practical car. Extremely European. Here's what you get:
• an unusual 3-cylinder engine that gets 25-35 mpg
• a virtually uncrushable unitized body.
• front-wheel drive for sure traction on snow, ice and corners.
• a 4-speed synchromesh gear box that makes even women love to shift for themselves.
• a slotted roof that washes the rear window with air
• a 2-year or 24,000-mile warranty on engine, transmission and differential.
Test drive our 1964 SAAB station wagon. You'll discover its delightful dual personality.

Phipps Speaks Tonight

L. J. Phipps

Gag Law Defender Speaks In Gerrard

State American Legion Commander L. J. Phipps, one of three prominent supporters of the controversial Speaker Ban, will express his views to UNC students tonight at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

He will speak on the "Merits of the Speaker Ban Law," which bars addresses of known communist speakers on state-supported university campuses. Afterward, Phipps will answer written question from the floor.

Phipp's address is sponsored by the Daily Tar Heel. Two other supporters of the law, State Senate President Clarence Stone and Raleigh television editorialist Jesse Helms, turned down editorial invitations to discuss their views on the UNC campus.

Phipps, a resident of Chapel Hill and long prominent in Orange County politics, represented Orange County in the 1963 General Assembly which passed the law during its closing minutes.

Salutatorian of his class, Phipps graduated from UNC with a BS degree in Civil engineering in 1922. He was Phi Beta Kappa and a member of the Golden Fleece. He was president of his Senior class, vice-president of the student body, and business manager of the Yackety Yack.

He attended Law School here, passed the bar exam in 1924 and has practiced law in Chapel Hill since that time. He has served as Judge of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court and Judge of the Orange County Recorder's Court, from which he resigned in 1963 to accept appointment as a member of the House of Representatives. He assumed the post of state commander of the American Legion following the closing of the 1963 General Assembly.

Organ Recital Tonight

Robert Triplett, UNC's newly arrived organ music theory instructor, will present a public recital tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. The recital will be Triplett's first public appearance in Chapel Hill since his arrival here this fall.

A member of the American Guild of Organists, Triplett received a BSA degree in 1957 from the University of Georgia and a MSM from Union Theological Seminary in 1959. Since 1960, he has done work on a DSM degree at the University of Michigan and at Union Theological Seminary.

Triplett, 27, comes from Chester, S. C. While in high school there, he received four first ratings in South Carolina high school piano competition and was a three-time winner of a University of Georgia piano competition scholarship.

His program tonight will be the "Dialogue sur les Grands Jeux" by Clerambault; four organ choral-preludes by Bach and Brahms; the Prelude and Fugue in D Major by Bach; Pastoral by Roger-Ducasse; Arabesque sur les flutes by Langlis; Chorale-partita uber "Lo den Herren" by Ahrens; and a selection from the Symphonic-Passion for organ by Dupre.

UN Program On Africa

Leslie Rubin, former senator in the Parliament of the Union of South Africa, will be a keynote speaker at the Institute on International Programming: Emphasis Africa, at the University of Maryland Nov. 15-17.

The Institute is sponsored by the Collegiate Council for the United Nations, a national student organization devoted to building informed student opinion about the United Nations and International affairs.

This year's conference will be concerned with government and private institutions which are currently working in Africa in an effort to help Africans improve their economic, social and educational standards.

Other keynote speakers will include: Dr. Angie Brooks, Assistant Secretary of State of Liberia; Philip Deane, Director of the UN Information Center of the U.S.; Milton Moniz, Portugese Press Attache; and a special guest, Dr. Eduardo Mondlane, President of the Mozambique Liberation Front. Dr. Mondlane is currently in exile in Tanganyika.

Interviews will be held October 30 through November 1 for students interested in attending the Institute. Further information as to the exact time and place of the interviews, is available at the YMCA office.

All those who attend the conference are assured of taking with them an increased understanding of international problems, and will be better equipped to develop campus programs and individual organization programs to promote awareness and concern.

ABSENTEE BALLOTS

All persons who will not be able to vote in the November 5th campus election should turn in requests for absentee ballots by 5 p.m., Wednesday.

The Elections Board will provide a way for persons interned in the infirmary to vote.

Meet The Candidates

SP

The Student Party candidates for Junior Class offices are Gene Barrier, president; Paul Chused, vice-president; Kay Hoyle, secretary; Susan Powell, treasurer; and Melinda Gholson, social chairman.

Gene Barrier is a Morehead Scholar from Statesville. A member of the Communications Committee for three years, he was on the freshman tennis team and has been an Orientation Counselor for two years.

"The SP candidates for junior class office will present a unified platforms, as we feel that this is the best way to get things done", he said. "We hope to form an Interclass council to work with other classes, not only for better combo parties but also for better projects."

"We hope to place emphasis on academics, reorganizing the very successful College Bowl competition, continuing Faculty Variety Show."

Paul Chused served as treasurer of the sophomore class, has been a member of student legislature the past two years, served as freshman class entertainment chairman and has worked with the Student Credit Commission. He is from Kinston.

"We feel that we can use the campus mail to a much greater extent to inform the class", he said. "If we can plan and publicize our activities far enough ahead, their success will be almost assured."

"We also would like to have a Junior Day, much as the Seniors do now", he added. "It would take a lot of planning, but if it was done right everyone would have a good time."

Kay Hoyle attended WCUNC for the past two years, where she was a NSA representative. She attended Henderson (N. C.) High School, where she was a member o fthe National Honor Society, a class officer and Feature Editor of the Yearbook. She serves on the Secretariat at UNC.

"At present, there is no complete scrapbook of our class", she said. "I would like to see one compiled, in order that the records and achievements of our class could be saved.

"Starting a Powder Puff football game would be interesting, also. I'm sure that we could get enough girls to play, and it would be an excellent money-raising project."

Susan Powell is from Arlington, Va., and attended the University of Chattanooga, where she was a Dean's List student for two years. She is a member of the Secretariat, and is active in the SNEA and YWCA. She works with the Navy Dept. during the summer on the budget for the Polaris missile program.

"To finance class projects we must have good money-raising ideas," she said. "The success of the Bake Sale last year calls for a repeat, and we also could revive the Merchant's Day, when juniors work for various businessmen in Chapel Hill with the proceeds going into the class treasury."

"Another idea would be having another Junior Classics Basketball game, with the football team playing the All-Stars."

Matilda Gholson attended St. Mary's, where she was Chief Marshall, a member of the legislature, served on the Hall Council and was selected as the "Outstanding Senior." She is a member of the Secretariat at UNC and is active in the YWCA.

"Of course, we would organize combo parties," she said, "but we also would have concerts featuring local talent. There are many fine performers on campus, and we should give them a chance to get some experience."

"In addition, we would work on the idea of having a Junior Day."

DASHIELL TAPPED

The founder and one-time head of the UNC Department of Psychology, Professor Emeritus John F. Dashiell, has been elected to life membership in the N.C. Academy of Sciences, it was announced today.

This honor is reserved for academy members who have served the organization in a "notable fashion," according to John A. Yarbrough, secretary-treasurer of the group. Dr. Dashiell has served as president of the Academy. Dr. Dashiell is currently a visiting lecturer at Emory University in Atlanta, Ga.

UP

The University Party candidates for Junior Class officers are Harrison Merrill, president; Johnsye Massenburg, vice-president; Cynde Wright, secretary; Pat Wilson, treasurer; and Judy Allen, social chairman.

Harrison Merrill, a Morehead Scholar from Atlanta, is a Dean's List student and an All-American swimmer. He was treasurer of his freshman class. He was a member of the freshman honors program and has been active in the Campus Chest.

"We will attempt to make the Junior Class the most significant working force on campus — a force backed up not just by class officers and committee chairmen, but by every single junior," Merrill commented.

"We have outlined a Dormitory Communications Committee which would encourage participation in Class and Student Government," he added. "We also will retain the "Teacher of the Month" and "Junior of the Month" programs, as well as holding an all-Junior combo party, co-sponsored by the IDC."

Johnsye Massenburg has been secretary of the freshman and sophomore classes and is CUSC chairman. She attended Broughton H. S. in Raleigh, where she was head cheerleader. She is also a cheerleader at UNC.

"My platform includes a reinstatement of a class scholarship which would be financed by profits from social activities and class projects," she said. "I would also like to sponsor a series of seminars conducted by outstanding scholars and leaders.

"In addition, class governments should be the students themselves. The students should participate in protecting their rights on issues such as the Speaker Ban, University improvements, and the name change."

Cynde Wright is from Greensboro and attended St. Mary's in Raleigh. A member of House Council in her dormitory, she was active in student government at St. Mary's, serving as secretary-treasurer.

"I propose to provide direct communication with the class through a system of class aides who would hear suggestions and complaints," she stated. "I would co-ordinate class projects and lastly, keep a class scrapbook and notebook."

Pat Wilson attended Episcopal High School in Lynchburg, Va. A Morehead Scholar, he has served on the Attorney General's staff, the UP Executive Committee and in Student Legislature. He was a member of the Freshman and Sophomore honors programs.

"Our class should have some sort of an activity where we can all get together," he said. "This could be a dance, picnic, or an outing.

"To raise money for this and other projects we could either promote various items such as beer mugs and UNC inscribed stools, or we could sponsor a basketball game between Lennie Rosenbluth's All-Stars and our varsity."

Judy Allen, a cheerleader from Ft. Lauderdale, Fla, is a Women's Residence Counselor, a member of the Honor Council, serves on the GM Executive Board and has been on the class cabinets of the freshman and sophomore classes.

"I have several new ideas which should provide us a chance to get together and bring a high degree of unity and cohesion to our class," she said. "But more than anything else, I wish to provide entertainment that will appeal to every member of our class.

"From my experience here as a freshman and sophomore, I feel I am qualified to seek this office. If you choose to select me as your social chairman, I promise you my time and effort and sincere enthusiasm in representing you—the class of '65.

F. STUART CHAPIN

F. Stuart Chapin, Jr., Professor of Planning and Research Professor in the Institute for Research in Social Science was recently installed as president of the Association of American Collegiate Schools of Planning at the Association's annual conference in Milwaukee.

The Association consists of 15 colleges and universities which have met its standards in their city and regional palnning programs.

UNC Faculty, Trustees Condemn Speaker Ban

Interference, Tampering Spur Faculty Resolution

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The recently enacted Speaker Ban law "has unwisely interfered with educational policies, curtailed legitimate freedom on our campuses, and created serious barriers to the maintenance of higher educational institutions."

This was the essence of a resolution made public Monday at the Board of Trustees meeting. It was adopted unanimously by the Faculty Council Oct. 22.

The resolution was strongly worded as advanced publicity had indicated.

"Political tampering with the educational process can, over a relatively brief period, drastically lower the quality of the higher education affected.

"Legislative censorship, once begun, carries an invidious threat of future proscriptions, and inevitably stirs fears in the minds of both faculty and students that expression of unpopular sentiments may produce reprisals against them . . .

'It is an inescapable fact that any legislative curtailment of free expression on a campus is a black mark against the institution in the eyes of the overwhelming majority of the best university teachers in America—teachers who are nevertheless anti-communist by strong intellectual conviction," the resolution stated.

The resolution said that the gag-law "is a step toward substitution of politically controlled indoctrination for reasonably objective education.

"Regulation of speakers on the campus is best left, along with other matters of educational policy, to the trustees, the administration and the faculty," the resolution continued.

The faculty said in the resolution, "The new statute reflects a fear regarding the strength of our democratic institutions which we do not share. Freedom of discussion on the campus has made few if any converts to communism."

"We believe that a university campus is a place where any idea should be open to free discussion — whether it be the promise of a communist utopia, a Birchite charge of treason in high places, or the thesis of a governor that salvation lies inly in defiance of the federal courts."

The resolution also said that the gag-law would hinder the University in that many societies would not hold meetings at Chapel Hill if they had to be questioned about their prior political affiliations.

"No learned society of standing would seriously consider allowing the host institution to interrogate and possibly blackball its duly selected speakers.

"They will not meet in Chapel Hill if the University lays down any such condition. And many of the finest teachers will not join or long remain members of a faculty at an institution which these learned societies will not consider as a place to meet. This tends further to lower the prestige of an institution," the resolution said.

The resolution concluded by expressing regret over the hurried way the Speaker-Ban law was passed.

"We deeply regret the manner in which this statute was rushed through both Houses of the General Assembly in its dying hours —without prior notice, without any opportunity for a hearing, without mature consideration, without even a normal opportunity for debate. Significantly, the bill as introduced was derived from a bill introduced in the Ohio Legislature; but there an opportunity was given for a hearing and the statute finally enacted did not involve legislative regulation of campus speakers."

TROTMAN SELLS PLANS

William G. Trotman, director of the institute for outdoor Drama at UNC, has just sold the idea he developed for a series of 12 one-hour television plays based on folk songs.

The Winston-Salem native, who has just returned from Hollywood,Calif., where he completed the sale, reports that the series will feature one of the nation's top male folksong singers.

The pilot production of the series is based on the folksong, "John Henry," the railroad folk hero, Filming on this show began October 27.

Fastest Gov. In The East

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Terry Sanford doesn't realize it, but he came within one minute of getting a parking ticket Monday when he parked in a no parking zone at the Morehead Planetarium.

Sanford, obviously in a good mood, was driving around campus Monday as he shuffeled between meeting. The governor's No. 1 limousine was being driven back to Raleigh from Asheville by chauffeur Jack Powell.

So Sanford drove to Chapel Hill from Raleigh in a car that is used by Mrs. Sanford.

After the trustees meeting had adjourned early Monday afternoon, Sanford walked to the car with Walker Martin of Raleigh, who had ridden over with Sanford, and Consolidated University president William Friday.

They climbed into the late model Oldsmobile. Sanford backed the car out of a tight parking space and started toward the Planetarium.

He spoted a reporter that he recognized. He pulled up beside him and said, "Hop in."

The reporter jumped in the back seat.

As Sanford was wheeling the big car up by South Building he spotted two other reporters, Jay Jenkins of the Charlotte Observer and Phil Corner of the Associated Press.

The governor couldn't resist what he called a prfect opportunity. He honked the horn at the two reporters and raced the motor in the car.

The two reporters looked startled. Like several of the trustees and students who were walking nearby, they didn't realize what was going on.

"Watch out you guys," Sanford hollered to the two reporters.

When they finally recognized the governor they broke into wide smiles and waved back at him.

A few minutes later, Sanford pulled into the Planetarium parking lot. But there were no parking spaces left.

"Well, I guess I'll have to pull in here," Sanford said as he parked the car in the no parking area.

"I'm sure that will be all right," the reporter agreed.

Sanford then had a 30-minute luncheon in the planetarium, along with other members of the Board of Trustees.

He and Martin then climbed in the car and pulled out of the lot at 1:45 p.m. At 1:46 p.m., a campus policeman came through the lot and ticketed cars that were parked on each side of the car that Sanford was driving.

Sanford had to leave the luncheon early to keep a 2 p.m. appointment with the dentist.

Yack Contest Is Tonight

Roy Armstrong, Executive Secretary of the John Motley Morehead Foundation, will serve as master of ceremonies for the Yackety-Yack Beauty Contest tonight at 7:30 in Memorial Hall.

More than 100 girls representing campus organizations are expected to compete. Contestants must be presently enrolled at UNC and sponsoring organizations must have paid a $10 registration fee. Eight girls will complete the court of the chosen queen.

Armstrong is a native of Spencer. After graduation from the University of North Carolina in 1926, he taught for two years in Greensboro public schools. He returned to study law at Chapel Hill and was president of his law class.

There is no admission charge and all attending women students have been granted late permission from the Dean of Women's office.

Sanford: This Action Needed To Be Taken

By HUGH STEVENS

President William C. Friday and the chancellors of the Consolidated University yesterday called on the full Board of University Trustees to join with them in urging repeal of the controversial state speaker ban law.

The trustees responded by unanimously adopting a resolution deploring the law and authorizing Governor Terry Sanford, as chairman of the board, to appoint a special committee of 15 trustees "to determine and implement measures to remove this legislative impairment of intellectual freedom and presumption of the authority and prerogatives of the Board of Trustees."

Sanford said later, "the unanimity of the Board was an indication that the action was something that needed to be taken. I hope the committee of fifteen will come up with something acceptable to the legislature, and I think it will. I do not believe that the General Assembly intended that the law should have a detrimental effect, and I think they will do something about it."

President Friday opened yesterday's session in Carroll Hall with brief comments on the background of the law, which was passed on the last day of the 1963 General Assembly's regular session under suspension of the rules. At the time of its introduction, he said, the bill was "unknown to any college or university president in the State and unknown to all but a few members of the Geeral Assembly."

Chancellor William B. Aycock indicated that the law was not only unnecessary, but was also "fraught with uncertainties and ambiguities, making it very hard to enforce." He recalled that a general statutes law passed in 1941 made speeches illegal by persons who advocate the violent or otherwise unlawful overthrow of the Constitution of the United States or of North Carolina.

"The officials of the University have been aware of this statute since it became law in 1941," Aycock said. 'I do not know of any violation."

Chancellor John T. Caldwell of N. C. State read a resolution passed by the Faculty of his institution which said the bill "constitutes a restriction on the free exchange of knowledge and opinion that is absolutely essential to the educational process.

Caldwell also reviewed three cases in which "the apprehensions of the faculty on the effect of the Speaker Ban Act have already been borne out."

One instance concerned the barring of Dr. J. B. S. Haldane, whom Caldwell called "one of the world's most honored scientists." Haldane had been invited to lecture at State on "genetics and the application of mathematics and statistics to research in genetics." Caldwell said Haldane had been chairman of the Editorial Board of the Daily Worker in England from 1940 to 1949.

Haldane, he said, refused on principle to answer a request that he explain his "present status with the Communist Party." Haldane later told a member of the N. C. State faculty "in unequivocal terms" that he is not a member of the Communist Party, but that he would not write this information in a letter to anyone.

In another instance, Caldwell said, a visiting Russian scientist, V. V. Sokolovskiy, was prevented from placing N. C. State on his itinerary of scheduled speaking engagements at leading U. S. colleges and universities.

The final example given by Caldwell concerned a member of the faculty of a neighboring university who declinedd an invitation to participate at a seminar on the State campus. The professor said he found the bill "an extremely repugnant invasion of the University's traditional rights, freedom of inquiry, and of our democratic ideals in general."

Caldwell concluded that "continued embarrassment to this institution is inevitable." "It is depressing," he said, "to contemplate the inevitable deterioration of the hopes of the dedicated scholars we already have as well as the denial to this campus of

SG Leaders Meet Board

By PETE WALES

Student leaders met with the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees yesterday afternoon in an executive session to discuss last week's changes in the judicial system made by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

The changes discussed involved the decision of the faculty to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board, announced last Tuesday.

"The purpose of the special meeting was not to ask the Visiting Committee for an overruling of the decision," Vice-President Bob Spearman said.

"We felt that the faculty action of abolishing the Student-Faculty Review Board was so serious that it involved the whole family of the University, including the Trustees.

"Our particular concern was not so much with the substantive change as with the method by which the change was brought about, namely the abrogation of a section of the Student Constitution."

Spearman was referring to an amendment passed in 1957 establishing the Student-Faculty Review Board as a part of the Constitution. The amendment was recommended by the faculty committee at that time.

Hill Yarborough, chairman of the Visiting Committee, said he could not reveal the reaction of the committee to the special meeting until a formal report was made to the Board of Trustees.

"We enjoyed the meeting and found that the discussions were very interesting and informative," he said.

"The Committee is available to meet with any organization or group on campus at any time that is mutually convenient."

MacKinney Dies Here

Kenan Professor Loren Carey MacKinney, 72, died Sunday night at his home. He had suffered a stroke earlier in the year.

An authority on the history of science, especially related to medicine of the medieval period of history, Prof. MacKinney was a world renowned collector and lecturer on medieval medical miniatures. He had been a member of the University faculty here since 1930, and became a Kenan professor of history in 1955.

He was a popular lecturer and research specialist. He was born in Lake Crystal, Minn., in 1891 the son of Everson R. and Jinnie May MacKinney. He was graduated from Lawrence College in Wisconsin in 1913, received the M.A. at the University of Wisconsin, and Ph. D. at the University of Chicago.

He taught at Knox College, Ohio State University, William Jewell College, and Universities of Chicago, Illinois, Stanford, Virginia, LSU, and UCLA prior to coming to Chapel Hill.

He was a member of the Medieval Academy of America, an editor of the American Historical Review, and of other societies, and is the author of several books and pamphlets in science medical history. He was a member of the Episcopal Church.

Surviving are his widow, the former Abigail Greenwood, and a son, Dr. Loren G. MacKinney of the UNC medical school faculty.

Funeral arrangements will be announced.

Men Of Light Charge The Valley Of Shadow

The Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina yesterday passed a resolution condemning the Speaker Ban Law. What is most heartening about the resolution is the manner in which it was passed. Out of the 100 member board, there was only one voice raised to question the resolution's wisdom, and not one dissenting vote. This unanimity should serve to further demonstarte to the bill's proponents that good, intelligent men of unquestioned integrity oppose the bill on the basis of principle.

The language of the resolution is neither vague nor weak. It states that the law "violates an essential principle of University existence," "the faculties and officials throughout the entire University are uncompromisingly opposed to the statute," that it is "detrimental to the standing of the University among institutions of higher learning" and finally that the responsibility of the Board of Trustees has been preempted by the legislature. The resolution goes further and states that the Board "deplores" the law.

These are not mild words that make unanimity easy, but rather a strong and well stated opinion of 100 leading citizens from all over the state. These men come from different backgrounds, different professions, hold varying political philosophies, but all adamantly agree on one point. The Speaker Ban is deplorable.

It should also be noted that the Faculty Council's Resolution was made public yesterday too.

It also is a well reasoned, thoughtful document, but considerably more understated than that which the trustees passed. We were told that when we read the resolution, it would become immediately obvious to us just why it was not made public at the time it was passed. Suffice it to say that after six readings it still hasn't become even remotely obvious.

We would, however, strongly recommend that every student on this campus read it and read it carefully. It is an excellent compilation of all the many arguments which militate so strongly against the law.

We, of course, no longer feel like orphans, and with the strong and deliberate leadership which the Trustees have assumed, we are a good deal more confident about the future of the University.

Judge Phipps' Visit: Hopefully, A First Step

Tonight, at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall adjacent to Y-Court, Judge L. J. Phipps will explain his reasons for supporting the Speaker Ban law. Although he will not be speaking in any official capacity, the fact that he is State Commander of the American Legion and was our Representative in the General Assembly at the time the law was passed, will lend special weight to his words.

To our knowledge, this will be the first time that anyone has spoken in defense of the law here on the campus.

The fact that we invited him here does not mean we agree wtih his position, for we do not. But we do think he, and other proponents of his point of view, have a right—indeed, an obligation—to be heard, especially by those of us who are members of the University community and are thus directly affected by the law.

We hope the meeting will be well-attended, and we are certain it will be courteous and polite. Our hope is that it will serve as a first step toward a better mutual understanding of the real issues involved in the passage of the Speaker Ban law, and in the effects of its continued existence.

Aha! Creeping Physical Fitness!

We were sitting around revelling in our indolence and complacency the other day, casually discussing whether to have William F. Buckley down to stage a spontaneous Conservative Revolt, when it suddenly occurred to us that many of our campus colleagues have fallen prey to the insidious disease of Creeping Physical Fitness.

Being slothful by nature and conviction, and therefore not given to anything more strenuous than hefting beer mugs, we had not been aware of this diabolical situation. But there one night, before our eyes, was ample evidence of what was happening.

"What is it," we asked our companion.

"They call it dancing," he replied. "Sort of a variation on, or mutation of, The Twist. They call it 'The Bird,' or 'The Dog,' or something like that."

"Hmmph," we snorted. "Looks more like the 'Twitch n' Churn'."

"Shhhh," cautioned our companion. "Don't say that so loud. Someone'll think you're square."

So we quieted down and watched.

Everybody in the dancing area was moving about convulsively, quivering and jerking, as if someone had spiked their Cokes with Benzedrine.

It was impossible to talk above the din of the bandsmen, who looked and sounded as if they had found The Lost Chord, were stuck on it, and didn't want to lose it.

The only really discernible sounds were those of joints cracking, muscles flexing and sweat glands percolating, plus occasional cries of pure rapture.

Finally, the noise-music stopped and everyone staggered to a chair, limp from exertion.

How wondrous is the human psyche, we thought. Call it dancing and they go for it, doing more work in 15 minutes than they've done all month.

Call it Physical Education and they either finesse the course or cut the class.

Barry's Balloon Rising

By MARQUIS CHILDS

WASHINGTON — The Goldwater balloon is going up so fast that it is almost out of sight of this fog-bound capital. The propulsion comes from many sources, not the least of which is the growing conviction of his followers that he is the man of destiny.

Euphoria is the only word to desribe the atmosphere being created around the country in the Goldwater-for-President movement. The true believers have ceased to count the number of delegate votes necessary to give their hero the Republican nomination. Taking that for granted, they are now counting the electoral votes that will give him victory over President Kennedy.

To some of the pros in the party this seems a bit premature. They can see several dangers in the early inflation of the Goldwater boom. One obviously is timing. There will be so many months for the opposition — in both parties — to enter fire on the balloon as the full light of publicity falls on it. Up until quite recently almost no one, including the Senator, took the presidential boom seriously.

BUT a greater danger lies in the maneuver which Goldwater seems to be undertaking. His critics, and even some of his friendly backers, believe he is trying to make a 180-degree turn while steaming full speed ahead. That is to say, having gone on record over the past 12 years with forthright, not to say extreme, views on almost every issue of foreign and domestic policy, he is presently engaged in revising and downgrading those views.

Goldwater does not see it in that light. As he put it to me in a brief talk sandwiched into his rowded schedule, no one up until now has paid very much attention to what he has said. When they examine his views they do not find them as "crackpot-ty" as they had been made out.

He says with the disarming smile that is part of his charm that he does not hold that consistency is a virtue. The Senator might have added that it is a luxury no politician can afford. A thick book at the top of the best-seller list (JFK: The Man and the Myth) was written to show that President Kennedy has been all things to all men. In this same department the most careful job done thus far on Goldwater is by Congressional Quarterly in a report putting his record, his statements and his votes alongside an interview updating his position on important issues.

The embrace of the extreme right is another and even more threatening hazard to the Goldwater candidacy. This was brought into sharp focus by what happened in California the other day.

Robert Gaston, head of the California Young Republicans, made a violent speech in Salinas attacking many Republican leaders and calling Democrats "thieves, crooks, liars and trash." When he took his stand on principles and someone asked him to define them, his advice was to read Goldwater's books and they would learn.

When the speech was called to Goldwater's attention, he wrote a letter of sober rebuke to Gaston. While he differed on most issues with Democrats, he said, they were not thieves, liars and crooks. Nor could you ram anything down anyone's throat.

THE incident illustrates only too clearly his problem in holding off extremists who give him idolatry just this side of downright (worship. Goldwater has criticized Robert Welch, suggesting he should be removed as head of the John Birch Society. But he has praised Birchite members as good citizens whom he knows in his own community.

What the ultras could do for Goldwater — if it came in late December, a month before he has promised to make an official pronouncement on whether he is a candidate, it would be the finest possible Christmas present — would be to repudiate him as a traitor to his past. They are not likely to do that. They have too big a stake in him and his candidacy is too attractive.

Defying all the rules in the rule book, the Goldwater boom will go down as one of the most remarkable phenomena in America's political history. He is of Jewish origin. He comes from a state with only four electoral votes. He is on the record with extreme views on almost every issue. Yet there it is — big as life and twice as natural.

This Cold War Mess; How Simple It Is

By DON CURTIS

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia acknowledged another shortage in the Soviet Union. This time it's tobacco and tobacco products. Izvestia blames this shortage on another shortage — the shortage of railroad cars. Supposedly there are some 8,000 tons of tobacco lying unused in various Soviet ports because no railroad cars are available.

You see, all the available railroad cars are being used to carry fruits and vegetables to various Russian markets because it seems there is also a shortage of these products. It is reported that thousands of tons of fruits and vegetables, similar to the tobacco, is just sitting there spoiling.

An evening Moscow newspaper has reported that some 25,000 Moscovites will work on their day off to help unload the railroad cars to aid in speeding the delivery of the products in shortage.

All this leads to some interesting possibilities for the United States.

The U. S. could sell tobacco, railroad cars, and fruits and vegetables to the Russians. It would solve their shortages and reduce our surpluses.

With more money coming into our economy, this would mean a boom to the whole country. In turn, this would mean more tax dollars. Hell, if we sell enough to the Russians we could wipe out our national debt.

By selling wheat to Russia, JFK pleased the Midwestern wheat producers, by selling tobacco, the Southern tobacco raiser would be pleased; by selling railroad cars, all the iron and steel in the North would be satisfied, by selling fruit and vegetables, we would be benefiting the farmers and fruit growers of the Southwest and California.

Thus by satisfying the people of the South, the North, the Midwest, the Southwest, and the West, JFK could breeze into the 1964 elections. This would free him from campaigning duties, giving him more time for important duties such as cooking up some more sales.

And how about this: It was stated that the Russians must be somewhat short in shipping workers. Perhaps we can solve that problem also.

Why not send the Russian Troops stationed in Cuba back home? These troops have much experience in shipping. They've been loading and unloading stuff for over a year now.

By sending these troops home, the Russians would have the needed manpower at home, and also the cause of peace would be furthered through the reduction of cold war pressures.

You see how simple everything is. . . .

REVIEW

New Directions

By CHARLES L. THOMPSON

San Francisco Review Annual, New Direction—San Francisco Review, 185 pp.

If there is something to be said for reading the classics, or even the recent novels and poetry which have won swift critical acclaim, there is also much to be said for discovering your own literature. And even more to be said when that literature itself is a discovery, as the work in the first issue of the San Francisco Review Annual is indeed. For the subcontinent "readers of little magazines" this issue is a major event. By merging with New Directions publishers, the San Francisco Review for years one of the finest of the little magazines, has saved itself from extinction, the fate of so many of its kind.

But the issue is memorable not merely for its "firstness," but for the quality and originality of its content. Throughout the magazine runs a stream of freshness that reminds the reader that here, in magazines of this sort, lie the real frontiers of literature. Many of the authors are themselves discoveries, and those who are not have warranted their presence by rediscovering themselves, finding new styles, new subjects.

What is most striking about the poetry in the issue is not its technical excellence; that is expected from the San Francisco Review. It is its straightforwardness. Little of it is too obscure or recherche for the intelligent layman. Some is so wildly imaginative he may wonder at it: there is a poem by one of the eight contemporary Polish poets featured in the magazine which is almost certain to elicit wonder. It concerns a bicycle which points a herd of mountain goats, becomes their leader, and is shot by a hunter for the trophy of its gleaming handlebars.

Another longtime acquaintance of readers of small magazines, John Tagliabue, adds his measure in a group of eight poems which cover his spectrum of styles from oriental simplicity to the showering, carnival-of-metaphor type familiar from his Shakespeare notebook. This is Tagliabue's most serious work, and it answers to the charge that he is only a linguistic acrobat.

Acrobatics are conspicuously absent from the poem by Gilbert Gratiant, one of three West Indian poets. In fact, this poem is so lacking in style and so painfully social conscious that one wonders if it wasn't slipped in by mistake. It is one of few failures in the magazine, and the least one that can be said about the others is that they are at least interesting failures.

Such would have to be the category into which George Hitchcock's story "Serendipity" falls. Absorbed in a self-conscious artsiness, Hitchcock's humorous story about the tribulations of a painter, or a would-be painter, seems to miss its own point. Since Hitchcock is one of the magazine's editors, however, one knows that this piece could not have been a mistake.

Particularly noteworthy among the other stories are "Roar Lion Roar," by Irvin Faust, and "The Night of Trader Horn" by Rita Othus. "Roar" is Faust's second published story, and its readers will excitedly await more of his work. In the language of its hero, a Spanish-American immigrant to New York, the story tells of the boy's fear of the city, its unbearable weight for him, and of his temporary salvation: his fascination with, and naive love for Columbia University. Not for the University, really, but for the Lions. For their cool blue jackets, for the glamor of their lives. Eeventually, he does it all for the Lions.

Rita Othus' "Trader Horn," is very different, equally excellent. The children in the story are filled with wonder at what they see, a visual image portending an end to innocence, and Mrs. Othus' superb prose evokes the same image, the same wonder, in the reader. It is the wonder of discovery, the same wonder that runs throughout this fine magazine.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Cooperation

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The recent decision of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to unilaterally abolish the Student-Faculty Review Board raises several questions which all persons who love the University must seek to answer.

The fact that a section of the Student Constitution, a section placed in the Constitution with the approval of the administration, has been declared null and void is not in itself the essential issue.

What is important is the apparent lack of good faith evident in the manner in which the decision was reached. The committee was aware that student leaders would raise certain objections to the changes as envisioned by the committee. Thus it chose to present the students with a fait accompli. Is this the much vaunted mutual cooperation between students and the administration and faculty of which we have heard so much of late? Heaven protect us from such "cooperation"!

It is evident that this latest decision is part of a trend of unilateral actions and decisions by the administration in spheres of student-administration concern. Recent examples of such actions are:

1. The unilateral decision by the administration in the spring of 1962 to convert Ruffin and Ehringhaus dormitories into all-freshmen dormitories the following fall. This decision was made and announced as final without any prior consultation with student leaders of the residents then living in Ruffin dormitory.
2. The decision on the part of the administration to establish a censureship over the Beat Dook Parade, a decision made without consultation with Student Government or any attempt on the part of the administration to get Student Government to take the necessary action. If after giving Student Government a swift kick in the seat of the pants, Student Government still failed to act, action on the part of the administration would have been justified.

The latest action is part of a trend which can no longer be ignored, a trend which brings into question the whole relation between the student and the administration and faculty. In its admittedly inferior legal position is Student Government to betreated as something which is tolerated as a small child is tolerated, or it is to be treated as a junior partner whose opinions in those areas of concern to the entire partnership deserve to be heard and considered? Elected members of Student Government, whether members of the executive, legislature, or judiciary, must seriously re-evaluate their continued participation in the workins of the University. Personally, I would rather resign than to continue to work in a Student Government that is regarded, and treated, as an empty shell.

No Force!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

There are some of us "red-necked, ignorant, cornbread-dippin', bigoted cotton-pickers who haven't got enough sense to come in out of a shower of burning Kerosene from the shanty we just blew up" that don't particularly believe in "forcing" integration either.

In fact, we are old-fashioned, and don't see much necessity in concerning ourselves with a problem that is being created by a few in order to disturb the majority, regardless of colour. Of course, this should bring a rather big reaction from our more radical members of the University.

–UNC Trustees Adopt Anti-Gag Law Resolution–

the service of others who may refuse to come because of the ban on the exchange and examination of knowledge and opinion.

Dr. Otis Singletary, chancellor of the Greensboro campus, said he objected to the bill because it is discriminatory in nature, because it is unnecessary, because it is detrimental to the University's future in the academic world, and because it is destructive of faculty morale.

"But most of all," he said, "I object to this bill because, unwittingly or not, it strikes at the very heart of the University: at its basic mission — its inescapable responsibility — to seek the truth."

President Friday concluded the administration's presentation by pointing out "another difficulty more vague and possibly even more damaging in its ultimate effect."

"The adoption of a law that purports to remedy a supposed Communist influence upon our campuses," he said, "has implanted in the minds of some citizens of our state the disturbing notion that such an influence actually exists and is deliberately defended."

Friday went on, "there is not to my knowledge any member of the Communist Party on the faculty of either campus of the University of North Carolina."

Following the administration's presentation, Gov. Sanford recognized Frank Taylor of Goldsboro, who introduced the resolution on behalf of the executive committee.

"What we have heard this morning impresses every one of us with the fact that we have a grave responsibility confronting us," he said. "I believe that the General Assembly is a friend of the University, but even our best friends can make mistakes. We should encourage the legislators to remedy this mistake."

He then offered the resolution, which he said "expresses a consensus of the group meetings held by the Trustees throughout the State."

The only opposition to the resolution came from Tom Moore of Wilson, who questioned whether the Board should oppose the entire bill. "We should pick out specific obstacles in the bill," he said. "Otherwise, it may appear that we are opposing any stifling of Communists on the University campuses."

Taylor replied that the resolution directed the committee to take whatever action it saw fit, and was not directed necessarily against all parts of the bill. His explanation apparently satisfied Moore.

The resolution was seconded by Mrs. M. H. Burgwyn of Jackson, who said the bill represents "the negative force of our own fear. She compared the speaker issue to children driving cars. "It is wrong for me to say, because I am afraid, I can't let you drive. It is equally wrong to say, because I am afraid, I cannot let you listen."

W. B. Harrison of Rocky Mount also urged passage of the resolution. "It is high time that we stood up and had ourselves counted on this matter," he said. "Not only the manner in which this bill was passed, but also the content, is an insult and a disgrace to the intelligence and integrity of the people of North Carolina."

"The group that engineered this bill . . . is following the very tactics of Communism when they tell the people that they are better qualified to run the University than the people themselves."

W. L. Smith of Charlotte also voiced support for the resolution, saying "the issue is really whether or not the policies that guide the University will be placed in the hands of the Board as they always have been, or if the legislature in its biennial sessions will run the University."

W. C. Harris, Jr. of Raleigh said the legislature expressed a "lack of faith" in the Trustees when it passed the bill. "We should pass this resolution to let the people know that this Board of Trustees is going to guide the affairs of the University and that we are capable of acting in their best interests."

Final supporting statements came from P. B. Ferebee of Andrews, H. L. Riddle of Morganton, and Hill Yarborough of Louisburg, chairman of the Visiting Committee of the Board.

Lunsford Crew, a member of the General Assembly from Roanoke Rapids, said he thought the resolution was "practical and competent."

President Friday expressed his appreciation to the Trustees and said he was "extremely gratified" at the unanimous approval.

Chancellor Caldwell said the resolution was "extremely gratifying." He said, "it will be most encouraging to the faculty at N. C. State. They will be looking forward to seeing what practical steps are taken and how they succeed. It will mean a great deal to them to have this strong and unequivocal resolution from the Board."

Frank Taylor, who introduced the resolution, expressed "extreme delight" at the unanimous vote.

Mike Lawler, student body president, said he was "very appreciative of the forthright stand taken by the Board of Trustees."

Carter Case Coming Up

A decision is anticipated within the next week or so in the court action over the Ann Carter "cheating" case, Chapel Hill attorney John T. Manning said Sunday.

Manning, who represents Miss Carter, indicated conclusive action will be coming with the decision to be rendered by Superior Court Judge Clawson Williams.

Miss Carter was accused of cheating on a Latin exam at UNC and took her conviction by the Women's Council to the courts, thus questioning university appeal procedures.

Manning also said an invitation to have the case reviewed by a faculty board has no bearing now that the matter is in the courts.

"Even if the faculty committee wanted to take action, it's not in their hands to do so," Manning said.

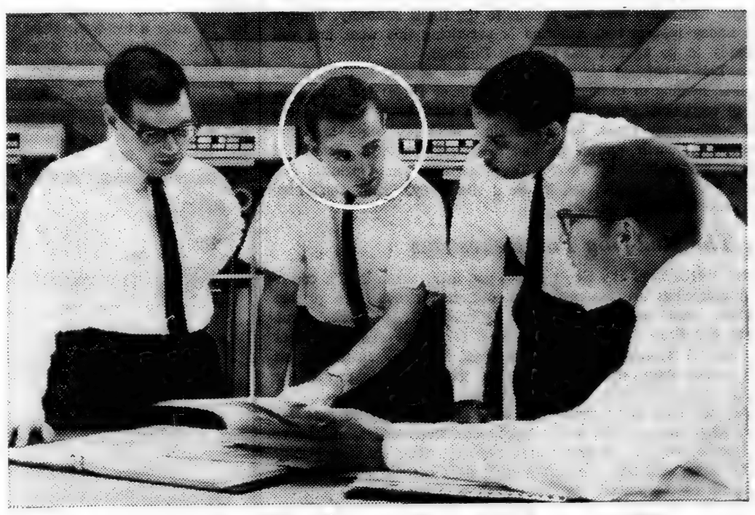
Meet Gerald Bourland



Computer Systems Associate at WE

Gerald Bourland, B.S., Central Missouri State College, '61, picked Western Electric because it offered many interesting and challenging opportunities in his favorite fields—automation and data processing. Gerald's work here consists of writing, testing and documenting computer programs — each one a different and exacting assignment.

Also of great interest to Gerald when he joined Western were the Company's numerous management courses and paid Tuition Refund Plan. He knows, too, that we'll need to fill thousands of supervisory positions within the next few years. And he's getting the solid experience needed to qualify.

Right now, Gerald is working on a verification sub-system for maintaining production control. It consists of seven distinct computer programs that operate as one routine which performs the function of tying together and verifying forecasted with actual customer orders.

If you, like Gerald Bourland, set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for—let's talk! Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for liberal arts, physical science and business majors, as well as for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers. For more detailed information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. Or write: Western Electric Company, Room 6405, 222 Broadway, New York 38, N. Y. And be sure to arrange for a personal interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

Virginia Hosts UNC Booters In Important Conference Game

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — North Carolina's soccer team, currently riding a three-game winning string, takes on highly-regarded Virginia here this afternoon in a key game for both.

The Tar Heels, who have beaten Washington University (St. Louis), NC State and Pfeiffer after opening losses to Navy and Davidson, have finally gotten their offensive attack rolling.

Sophomore inside Drew Murphy and veteran center Pete Blake have led the resurgent Carolina scoring machine. Murphy scored two times in last week's victory over Pfeiffer.

The Cavaliers lost to Navy, one of the country's best by the same score (6-0) the Tar Heel booters were taken. Virginia also defeated State and appear, again, to be one of perrenial champion Maryland's strongest challengers in the ACC.

The unbeaten Terps, who were beaten 4-3 in last year's NCAA championship game by St. Louis University, come to Chapel Hill next Monday for the big game. UNC will play one more time after today's contest in preparation for Maryland. That will be Thursday at home against Belmont Abbey.

Coach Marvin Allen is expected to go today with the same lineup that started the Pfeiffer game.

That would mean Blake, Murphy, Harvie Moore, Marty Kruming and Jim Talbott on the line; Halfbacks George Beim, Bill Haywood and Steve Painter; fullbacks Charlie Battle and Park McGinty and goalie Buddy Siegel.

FROSH SOCCER

Carolina's Tar Baby booters, featuring high-scoring center forward John Loud, face Duke on Fetzer Field today at 3:00.

Loud, so far, has paced UNC's frosh to a 3-1 season record on seven goals. He tallied four scores in the 5-0 shutout of Virginia in the opening game.

Carolina has beaten Virginia twice and Appalachain State for its three wins. The Tar Babies of Coach Bill Schieffelin have lost only to Warren Wilson by a 1-0 count.

Coach Schieffelin looks for a close contest this afternoon since Duke also fell to Warren Wilson by one goal, 5-4.

Med School Wins; Wrestling Starts

By AL KAPLAN

In a game for second place and a playoff spot in the grad league, Med School-1 defeated the Physics Fiends 19-7, Friday. Leading the way for Med were Al Roper, who scored two touchdowns, and Bill Jarman, who tallied once. Jack Chaffin scored the Fiend's only TD.

Weigh-ins for intramural wrestling will be held today and Wednesday. An Intramural Official will be on duty in main locker room L-4, from 10:00 A.M. to 5:00 P.M.

All organizations will be limited to only one entrant per weight class. The classes are 123, 130, 137, 147, 157, 167, 177 pounds and unlimited.

On "A" medical rating is necessary to compete. The medical rating cards must be shown at time of weigh-ins.

Five entrance points will be given organizations for each class entered. A minimum of four entrants is required.

Achievement points will be given on the basis of two for each match won until the quarter finals and three points given for matches won in the semis and finals. A maximum of 80 points will be given.

The matches will consist of three one minute periods. In case of ties there will be two extra one minute periods.

Varsity Letter winners are ineligible.

In Volley ball, Dorm and Grad entries are due by October 30, Wednesday, by 6:00 p.m. Fraternity blue entries will be accepted until 6:00 p.m. today.

The Seventeenth Annual Co-Rec Carnival will be held Thursday, November 7 beginning at 7:00 p.m.

The first event scheduled is the relay. The Block Exchange, the Potato Spear and the Plate Slide are the relays on the agenda. The championship relay will consist of the Balloon Burst.

After the relays the other events are Badminton, Table Tennis, Volleyball Doubles, Tether Ball, for women, and Box Hockey, for men, Archery and Carnival Games.

Carnival games, comprised of teams of one man and woman, include the Worm Relay, Hammer the Devil, Blow and Burst, Funnel Volley, Bean Bag Toss, Wash Day, Paper Plate Flip and Bean Straw.

Golf Winner

PARIS (UPI) — Jack Nicklaus, the 23-year-old they call "Baby Beef," became the bull of the golfing woods Monday with a birdie barrage that won the International Trophy and led the United States to the Canada Cup "world championship."

The U. S. won with a 482, three shots ahead of Spain.

The Buckeye belter, head and head with tough little Gary Player as they started a final nine holes, finished with a four-under-par 32 and a total of 237.

ON THE LEVEL with JOHN MONTAGUE

DON'T YOU BELIEVE all you hear about Southern hospitality. The South Carolina Gamecocks played host to the Tar Heels last Saturday about as graciously as an angry rattlesnake, and though the homefolks may wonder why our boys didn't whip those Roosters by three touchdowns, those who were there will tell you that it took a good team to win by seven.

Coach Marvin Bass had his squad fashioned into a frenzy and he doesn't have a weak team to begin with. The Gamecock's passing attack left something to be desired, but fullback Pete DiVenere and halfback Marty Rosen are two of the ACC's best runners, and the USC forward wall hits as hard as any of them.

"They were the hardest hitting team we've played this year," said Chris Hanburger, and the way he said it left no trace of a doubt.

Cole Kortner's recovery of Dan Reeves' fumble early in the game was one of the biggest plays of the day. It may have meant the difference between victory and defeat for the Heels. South Carolina took the opening kick-off and banged down the field in no uncertain terms, its line opening up big holes for Rosen and DiVenere. Reeves neded but a few feet for a first down at the UNC 14 when he was separated from the ball on a quarterback speak. Kortner fell on it and USC's most serious threat of the day was obliterated. Had the Gamecocks gone in for the score, it would have made them even tougher—if that's possible.

Hammett Back On Beam For Heels

ONE OF THE MOST pleasing aspects of the game was the return to form of John Hammett. And what form! The senior tight-end from Concord may be the best all-round football player Jim Hickey has on his talented squad. The trouble has been an ankle sprain, received during pre-season drills and re-injured in the game with Michigan State. But the ankle is strong now and Hammett, known for his ability to diagnose plays, appears on the scene just in time to bear down on the likes of Larry Rakestraw, Jim Parker, and Scotty Glacken.

At Columbia, Hammett was in Reeves' hair all afternoon. On offense he added some crisp blocking plus a key reception in the Tar Heels' touchdown drive.

If Hammett hadn't come around this week, UNC would have had some problems at the tight-end spot. Sophomore John Atherton, who has been playing behind Joe Robinson, twisted his knee in practice last Wednesday and was useless to the Heels Saturday. Trainer John Lacey reports that Atherton is practicing this week and will be ready to go against the Georgia Bulldogs.

Bob Lacey enjoyed his best day of the season against South Carolina, hauling in 10 passes (all from Junior Edge) for 113 yards. The 10 receptions boosted Lacey's season total to 24 and tied the UNC single-game mark he set against Michigan State last fall. Midway the fourth quarter he had a tie for the ACC record (11 catches, held jointly by Duke's Tee Moorman and Virginia's Joe Kehoe) on his fingertips, but he let it slip away. That won't happen many times this season.

It's The Red-Dog For Rakestraw

THIS WEEKEND it's Georgia and you know what UNC's coaching masterminds are thinking about—Mr. Rakestraw. Georgia has produced some great quarterbacks (Charlie Trippi, Zeke Bratkowski and Fran Tarkenton to name a few), but this 6-2 slinger from Atlanta is making Bulldog fans forget them all. In leading his team to four wins and a tie in its first six games, Rakestraw has hit on 72 of 128 passes, six of them good for TD's.

This should be the supreme test for Carolina's vaunted pass defense, which ranked fifth in the nation last week and should move up after holding USC to 19 yards in the air. Most coaches, Hickey among them, will tell you that a good pass defense starts with a good rush on the passer. In short, don't give him time to pick out his receiver and don't give his receivers time to shake off the defenders. Therefore, you can look for a lot of "red-dogging" come Saturday. Frank Gallagher and Hammett are demons on defense, and Lacey leaves little to be desired. Linebacker Chris Hanburger has been taking dead-aim on the quarterback in recent games and has been successful in his missions.

Pressure Builds In ACC Race

STATE'S SMASHING DEFEAT of Duke last Saturday was naturally well received among the Tar Heels. It gives UNC undisputed control of first place in the ACC at the moment. However the pressure is just beginning to build. The two teams which will fight it out with the Heels are Duke and State. Both are 4-1, and one of them, State, is almost a cinch to finish up 6-1. The Wolfpack has only Virginia and Wake Forest left on its conference card, and with all due respect to the underdog, the Wolves just aren't going to lose to either of these two weak-sisters.

The Blue Devils face a slightly tougher schedule in that they have UNC in place of Virginia. But Wake Forest is there, so the defending champs are bound to go into the clash with the Tar Heels with a 5-1 ACC mark.

This means Carolina can settle for nothing less than a win and a tie against Clemson and Duke if the Heels are to win their first ACC crown. Two wins would be a lot better.

Tar Heels Slapped In Face By Ratings

United Press International came out with its usual completely illogical Top 20 Ratings yesterday. NC State? Duke? We didn't know they were in the league.

NEW YOK (UPI) — Texas, owner of major college football's longest regular season winning streak, Monday became the first time in the history of the United Press International coaches board to be selected unanimously No. 1 in the nation.

All 35 coaches on the UPI board ranked the Longhorns first on the strength of their unbeaten-untied record, matched only by one other team in the top 20, Auburn. Texas has won 10 straight regular season games, including six this season and has not lost in 17 games. The Longhorns were beaten in the Cotton Bowl early this year.

Illinois and Mississippi, with identical 4-0-1 records, replaced Wisconsin and Pittsburgh in second and third spots respectively. Both the Badgers and Panthers were knoced from the unbeaten ranks last Saturday.

Alabama climbed one position to fourth, Navy returned to the top 10, after a two-week absence in fifth; Wisconsin fell to sixth an idle Auburn was seventh.

Oklahoma dropped one place to eighth, Southern California moved into ninth and Syracuse broke into the 10 elite for the first time this season in 10th.

Texas, one of four major college squads with a perfect record, is the first in the 14 years of the UPI ratings to garner all first-place votes. The Longhorns have had close calls in their last two victories, winning by margins of four points, since first gaining the top spot three weeks ninth last week, tumbled out of the ratings as did Notre Dame, Mississippi State, Oregon, Iowa and Iowa State, all losers Saturday.

Twice - beaten Northwestern, ago.

Ohio State bounced back to 11th, followed by Louisiana St. and Pittsburgt in a tie for 12th and Nebraska, No. 14.

Michigan State, Baylor and Missouri are 15th, 16th and 17th while Arkansas climbed to 18th, and North Carolina State to 19th.

Purdue and Duke tied for 20th.

Ratings are based in a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis for votes from first to 10th.

Only Southern California among the 10 best has lost twice. Alabama and Syracuse have 5-1 marks, Wisconsin and Oklahoma are 4-1. The Trojans are 4-2.

Martin Addresses YDC On Gag Law

State Senator Perry Martin will discuss the Speaker Ban Law and the recent redistricting of the State Senate tonight in the first campus-wide meeting of the Young Democratic Club.

Sen. Martin will speak at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The floor will be open after his talk for a question and answer session.

An attorney from Rich Square, Sen. Martin came into the State political spotlight at the special session of the Legislature earlier this month. A backer of Senate redistricting, he is being pushed by constituents in Northampton, Vance, Warren and other Eastern counties to run for Lieutenant Governor in the spring primary.

He is one of the legislators continuing to fight the Gag Law, passed in the waning days of the General Assembly.

Sen. Martin's speech will be open to the general public. The doors will open at 6:30 p.m. and a registration desk will be staffed for students who wish to join the YDC.

The third District senator is a graduate of Wake Forest and the Wake Forest Law School. He served as solicitor of Northampton County Recorder's Court and as a Trial Judge Advocate in the 47th Infantry Division. Since military service, he has practiced law in Rich Square and has served two terms in the State Senate.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Committee Jettisons 'Tough' Rights Bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House Judiciary Committee, won over by President Kennedy's persuasion, Tuesday jettisoned a "tough" civil rights bill and adopted a compromise proposal that had bipartisan backing.

Both measures would ban racial discrimination in public accommodations such as restaurants, hotels and theaters; strengthen Negro voting and job rights, and allow the federal government greater initiative in taking civil rights suits to court.

Tuesday's two votes climaxed an intensive personal effort by the President to sidetrack a far-reaching bill written by a judiciary subcommittee which the administration felt stood little chance of winning approval by Congress.

The subcommittee measure was killed by a 19-15 vote. The parent judiciary committee then voted, 20-14, in favor of the more palatable substitute which some Negro leaders have charged was a "sell-out."

A final vote on formally sending the measure to the House was put off until the committee's next meeting, expected shortly.

U.S. Accuses Reds Of Violating Geneva Pact

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States Tuesday accused Communist North Viet Nam of violating the 1962 Geneva agreement on Laos by resuming shipments of war material to the Red-led Pathet Lao.

State Department Press Officer Richard I. Phillips said the "military re-supply" from North Viet Nam began about three weeks ago and was clearly a breach of the Geneva accord.

NATO Out Of Date, Murville Says

PARIS (UPI) — French Foreign Minister Maurice Couve de Murville Tuesday said the current structure of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) is out of date and called for sweeping reorganization of the 15-nation alliance.

He stressed, however, that a major reorganization will be possible only if other European members pull their full weight.

Brinkley Accepts Symposium Bid

By KERRY SIPE

Among those who have accepted invitations to speak at the Carolina Symposium in April is NBC News commentator David Brinkley, Dick Hesse, publicity chairman of the Symposium announced yesterday.

Social critic Marya Maness, noted political scientist and economist Hans Morganthau, publisher Irving Howe, and Sen. John S. Cooper (R-Ky.) have also made definite plans to appear, he said.

Bill Davis, executive secretary of the Symposium, said that the final list of speakers was the result of close to 50 invitations. "We've been doing a lot of talking," he said.

Hope is still high that columnist Walter Lippman, author James Baldwin, director Gore Vidal, and Admiral Hyman Rickover will accept invitations to appear, said Davis.

The theme of the Symposium for 1964 is "Arms and the Man: National Security and the Aims of a Free Society."

Hesse reported that its main purpose was to "explore the ramifications of the cold war and its development in the past four years . . . Not only in an economic and political sense, but also in the fields of art, news media, creativity, personal attitudes, and education."

The first night of the Symposium will be a preview and general outline discussion in which all of the speakers will appear, said Hesse. Panel discussions on the various effects of the cold war on American life are being planned.

The Carolina Symposium is a student-operated organization subsisting entirely on private and Student Government donations. It was formed in 1936 "as an effort of the entire academic community in Chapel Hill to foster an awareness about the things around us," Hesse said.

Law Alumni Fete Set For Weekend

Law students, faculty, and alumni will observe Law Alumni Weekend here Friday and Saturday. The highlight of the weekend will be the Homecoming Day football game Saturday between UNC and the University of Georgia.

Appropriate legal steps have been taken to insure a Carolina victory. The Honor Court of the UNC Law Student Association has enjoined Coach Hickey to cease and desist from all plans and activities which will not lead to an overwhelming victory for the Tar Heels.

The weekend will also include the Law Alumni Annual Banquet Friday night and the observance of Law Alumni Day on Saturday.

Law Alumni Weekend is traditionally a time for the renewal of old acquaintances between the faculty and former students. It also provides an opportunity for new professors to meet members of the practicing bar.

Journalism Dean Retires In June

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Norval Neil Luxon, credited with giving the UNC School of Journalism a space-age look and establishing it as one of the foremost journalism schools in the country, will retire as Dean of the school next June.

The career of the 64-year-old newsman-educator will not be ended, however. Luxon will direct his efforts toward teaching and research for another five years.

A University rule stating that all administrators must retire when they are 65 necessitated Dean Luxon's retirement. He will be 65 in May.

Luxon came to UNC on December 1, 1953, with a dream of building a School of Journalism that would rank with the best. His plans were to broaden the scope of the journalism curriculum through new quarters for the school and top-notch faculty members to teach and advise aspiring journalists.

His dream has been realized.

Howell Hall, the home of the School of Journalism, was dedicated on October 21, 1960. Consolidated University President William C. Friday, speaking at the dedication ceremonies, referred to Dean Luxon as "the man behind it all."

Luxon's personal fight for new journalism school headquarters was long and hard. He first brought the subject to the attention of the Legislature in 1955 but it decided that it was too soon for such a move and did not provide funds for capital improvements for Howell Hall.

Dean Luxon then "buttonholed" Governor Luther Hodges every time he saw him and reminded him what could be accomplished if the journalism school had new headquarters. After much persuasion the 1957 session of the General Assembly appropriated the necessary funds.

Dean Luxon came to UNC from Ohio State University where he was Assistant to the President from 1946 until 1953. He worked his way up from instructor in journalism to professor during his 25-year stay at Ohio State.

His newspaper experience includes: assistant city editor of the Columbus (Ohio) Citizen 1923-1925; city editor of the (Canton, Ohio) Daily News 1925; editor of the Oteen (N. C.) Skylight 1926; and assistant news editor of the El Paso (Texas) Herald 1927-1928.

Dean Luxon is a member of Sigma Delta Chi, Kappa Tau Alpha and Phi Alpha Theta fraternities.

Since coming to UNC as Professor of Journalism and Dean of the School of Journalism, he has continued to conduct a vigorous campaign for high standards in journalism education.

In various speeches, the dean has focused the attention of educators and newspapermen on the need for rigorous academic preparation and high standards in institutions engaged in training tomorrow's journalists.

The speeches have included the Humanities Lecture, "Responsibilities of the Journalist," at Chapel Hill in March 1957; a speech at the Associated Press Managing Editors meeting in Philadelphia in November 1956 and the American Educators of Journalism presidential address in August 1957.

He has written more widely on professional education for journalism than has any other journalism educator, and he has lectured extensively on professional education for journalism.

Dean Luxon was married to Ermina Cornelia Munn of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, on September 22, 1928. They have one son, Norval Neill, Jr.

Accident Victim In Fair Condition

Two UNC students were reported injured when the car in which they were riding overturned near Cary Sunday night.

James Robert Peck, 21-year-old son of the town manager of Chapel Hill is reported in fair condition at Memorial Hospital after suffering loss of an eye, brain damage and broken bones when he was thrown from the car.

Benjamin Wyche IV of Charlotte suffered a leg injury, but was not hospitalized.

Highway Trooper C. N. Spain said Peck was driving west on N. C. 54 about one-half mile from the town limits when the car left the highway and overturned.

Peck was first taken to Rex Hospital for emergency treatment and then transferred to Chapel Hill.

The officer said ambulance attendants told him Wyche was wearing a seat belt, but Peck was not.

BEAUTY CONTEST

Due to the late hour of selection of the 1964 Yackety Yack Queen and members of her court, the complete story will run in Thursday's DTH.

UNC HAS NO SCHOLARS?

Nominations for this year's Woodrow Wilson Scholarships are running far behind those received last year, according to Frank Duffy, Associate Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

With only a few days left, nominations total only around 30, compared with almost 80 at this time last year. All nominations must be made by October 31.

According to Dean Duffy, any faculty member can nominate, "any student who expects to become a college teacher, and whom he considers a worthy prospect for the profession."

The scholarships, given by the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation are worth $1,800. Last year 1,000 scholarships were given—11 of them to UNC.

Nominations must be mailed to the Foundation's regional chairman, I. B. Cauthen, University of Virginia, Charlottesville.

75% Of North Carolinians Favor Speaker Ban--Phipps

By JOEL BULKLEY

About 75 per cent of the people of North Carolina support the controversial state Speaker Ban law, Chapel Hill attorney and Commander of the N. C. Dept of the American Legion L. J. Phipps estimated Tuesday night.

Phipps, Orange County's representative in the General Assembly when the bill was enacted, outlind the proeedings in the House during consideration of HB 1395, commenting that "anyone there could have objected to the third reading of the bill and thereby postponed final action on it until the next day if they wanted to."

He told a Gerrard Hall audience of 130 persons "I don't know if the bill has any merits" but indicated he supported it because it went along with the N. C. and national thinking of the American Legion.

Phipps said the Legion had adopted several resolutions in recent national conventions urging the baning of known Communists from speaking on state property.

"I feel the bill was a much needed one," Phipps said, adding he has no desire to curb the right to study or teach Communism in public schools.

He noted that "we owe the Legislature one debt of gratitude for the way they have looked after the University and if they made a mistake there will be another session of the General Assembly in 1965 which can rectify it."

Phipps urged more praise be given Senate President Clarence Stone of Rockingham County because "he is a good friend of the University who, according to a friend, worked almost singlehandedly to save a five-million dollar appropriation for the University's medical school and hospital."

The former Recorder's Court Judge indicated he would support a measure to give the governor of North Carolina the veto power. He added, however, the Speaker Ban Law would probably have passed the House and maybe even the Senate by the two-thirds majority needed to override such a veto.

Phipps said the idea that a "Communist cell exists on the campus here" has probably influenced many people in the State to support the so-called gag law.

In closing the two-hour meeting, Phipps expressed gratitude for the attentiveness and courtesy of the audience. He said he had been warned not to expect such a reception.

Eastern Adds New Non-Stop Service

Eastern Air Lines added new non-stop evening service from Chicago to Raleigh-Durham on October 27 when winter schedules become effective.

Flight 125, a Super Electra providing both first-class and tourist accommodations, will depart Chicago at 7:45 p.m. CST, arriving Raleigh-Durham at 10:47 p.m. EST. The new schedule is the fastest service ever provided between Chicago and Raleigh-Durham.

To Explain Changes In Trial Board

By PETE WALES

Student Legislature Monday night passed a resolution inviting faculty and Administration officials to come and explain the recent changes in the Student-Faculty Review Board with them.

The resolution "invites the Dean of Student Affairs, the Dean of Men, and the chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to appear" before legislature tomorrow night.

Dean of Student Affairs C .O. Cathey and faculty committee chairman Gordon Cleveland said they would be happy to appear before Student Legislature. Dr. Cleveland will not be able to appear before next week because of previous commitments.

Dean of Men William Long was not available for comment.

The measure passed in a roll call vote: 27 for, eight against and three abstentions.

The resolution also expressed "grave concern" over the "unilateral abrogation" of the section of the Student Constitution creating the Board.

It expressed appreciation for the "concern of the University Trustees" in hearing Student Government leaders present the issue in the special meeting Monday afternoon.

Vice-President Bob Spearman spoke first on the resolution presenting the legislators with what had happened and with Student Government's concern over the method in which the change was made.

"This is a matter of serious concern and therefore it is important that they (the Administration and faculty officials) come down here to explain the situation and answer any questions we may have."

Phil Baddour, (SP) majority leader, pointed out the problem of legislators explaining a unilateral faculty action to their constituents.

He felt it would be beneficial for better understanding of the faculty's decision if the faculty presented their decision and their reasoning before the legislature.

Same Himes (UP) and Bo Edwards (UP) spoke against the resolution saying that Student Government was being "too active and too conscientious" in this matter and others. They expressed the fear that the Ad-

Physicists Meeting Goes On Despite Speaker Ban

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Despite fears that the Speaker Ban Law would cause the American Physical Society to change its plans, it now appears that the organization will hold its annual meeting jointly at UNC and Duke either in 1965 or 1966.

Chancellor William B. Aycock implied in a statement Monday that the law might cause difficulty in holding the meeting at UNC.

According to Dr. Eugen Merzbacher, who is in charge of making arrangements for the meeting here, the Department of Physics has received no word of a change in schedule.

"We notified the Society as to the existence of the law right after it was passed," says Dr. Merzbacher. "We assured them that the APS would not have to check the political affiliation of its speakers. In as much as we have not heard from them on the subject, it probably means that they are going ahead with original plans. The meeting might be held in 1966 rather than in 1965, but that could be for geographical reasons having nothing to do with the law."

The meeting, according to Dr. Merzbacher, will include two types of lectures. There will be about 30 "invited lecturers" who will give technical talks of about 40 minutes. In addition, there will be some 500 "contributed papers" which may be sent in by APS members all over the world.

"We have no idea who the Society may want to invite," says Dr. Merzbacher, "or who will send in the papers. It is possible that if the trend toward friendlier relations with the Soviet Union continues, the Society may want to invite someone from there. We simply do not know how the law would apply to such a case."

Duke has offered to host the meeting by itself in the event the Society has reservations about holding it in Chapel Hill.

"When the law was passed," says Dr. Merzbacher, "I contacted the secretary of the APS to inform him of the facts. It is absolutely necessary that the Society have free choice of speakers if the meeting is to be held here. He told me that such a problem had never arisen in the past and that the Society might possibly have some reservations about holding the meeting under such conditions, but as far as I know, the law has not resulted in a change of plans."

UNC Presbyterian students joined with students from nine other North Carolina colleges Sunday to unanimously adopt a resolution against the controversial Speaker Ban Law.

A delegation from N. C. State drafted the resolution and presented to to the members of the Westminster Fellowship Synod at Camp New Hope in Chapel Hill.

About 17 UNC students were present at the conference, which totaled abut 80 delegates.

The resolution protests the speaker ban law for a number of reasons, among them it:

—restricts education by denying lectures on academic subjects because of political beliefs;

—it denies a clear understanding of communism, and the means to combat it;

—insults the intelligence of the administration, faculty, and students of the schools affected, denying of trust at these schools;

—and overestimates the persuasiveness of Communist speakers and underestimates the ability of students to refuse communism.

The UNC Presbyterian campus pastor, Rev. Harry Smith, said he felt the resolution necessary and supported it wholeheartedly.

SERVICES TODAY

Graveside services for Kenan Professor Loren Carey MacKinney will be held today at 3 p.m. at Old Chapel Hill Cemetery.

Prof. MacKinney, 72, had been a member of the UNC faculty since 1930, and was named a Kenan professor of history in 1955.

Joe Hilton Succeeds Dale Ranson As Track Coach

Joe Hilton
. . . New Track Coach

Joseph Truman (Joe) Hilton, a fixture on the UNC track scene since 1946, today was named head track and field coach of the Tar Heels.

The announcement of Hilton's elevation was made by Athletic Director C. P. (Chuck) Erickson. Hilton succeeds the late Dale Ranson, under whom he had been assistant coach since 1952.

"Coach Hilton worked hand-in-hand with Dale and the two made Carolina's track program one of the South's finest," said Erickson. "It is only fitting that Joe carry on Dale's work. There could be no other choice."

Hilton, born in High Point in 1917, served as an athlete under Robert (Coach Bob) Fetzer and Ranson long before he became a UNC assistant. After graduating from High Point in 1935, Hilton entered the University and participated in three sports —football, basketball and track.

After graduation in 1940, Hilton coached at Goldsboro High for two years. He served with the Navy during World War II as a deck officer on an aircraft carrier, returning to UNC following hostilities.

In 1948, Hilton, who had been serving as a coach for two seasons, obtained his Master's degree in Physical Education.

Hilton was an intimate friend of the Ranson family and was at the bedside when the dean of

Time For University To Stop And Evaluate Where SG Is And Where It's Going

As most of those who have dealt with him know, UNC Student Legislator Arthur Hays is usually maddeningly deliberate in his words and actions. He feels a strong sense of personal responsibility for the position of trust his fellow students have elected him to hold down. In his triple-job as chairman of the Finance Committee, chairman of the Elections Board, and Parliamentarian, he screens and scrutinizes money requests and other matters under his purview in a most responsible manner. Sometimes he overdoes it, as a matter of fact. But the point is that Hays is no casual trampler of procedure and tradition.

Thus, when Hays says, as he did in a letter to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday, that "Elected members of Student Government, whether members of the executive, legislature, or judiciary, must seriously re-evaluate their continued participation in the workings of the University" because of the recent action by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to unilaterally abolish the Student-Faculty Review Board, then it is high time that the entire faculty and administration got together for a good look at what is going on.

Hays is not alone in preferring to resign rather than continue working "in a Student Government that is regarded, and treated, as an empty shell." No one who tries to be honest with himself can long acquiesce in allowing himself to be used as a mere front for someone else to work through. The fact that Arthur Hays, a most deliberative fellow, has suggested that this is what Student Government is trending towards, partially at least because of an uncaring attitude on the part of the faculty and administration, is a strong indicator of the present state of affairs.

If the faculty and administration is as well-motivated and concerned for continued student cooperation as we believe it is, then those individuals invited to speak to Student Legislature Thursday night will do so, and do so fully and frankly.

In the meantime it might be well if more of our busy faculty and administration members not directly involved in the current controversy make the effort to find out what is going on and let their views be known.

If this whole matter is a tempest in a teapot, let's find out now, not tomorrow or next month. And if it isn't, let's find that out too.

Read These Rules, Then Resume Firing

We have been having a great deal of trouble and misunderstanding over letters addressed to the Editors of the Daily Tar Heel, and it is now necessary to again state the rules of the game.

The DTH will accept and print any and all letters to the editors if they are, in the judgment of the editors, neither in bad taste nor libelous. Personal attacks on the editors are usually libelous, in bad taste, written by scoundrels and generally totally fallacious, but nevertheless generally acceptable for the paper. Personal attacks on others, however, will not be printed if they are libelous.

With the upcoming elections this paper will not, out of fairness to all candidates, print any letters of endorsement for the various candidates. We could, with the present stock of this sort of letter, fill the editorial page for the next two weeks, which is obviously absurd. This policy will be reviewed and revised for the much more important elections in the Spring.

If the author of a letter desires anonymity, he should bring the letter to the DTH offices and explain why he desires to remain unknown. Only in the most extenuating circumstances, and for the best reasons will the requested anonymity be granted, and then only at the discretion of the editors.

We have, of late, received several letters with pseudonyms and false addresses. Some of the letters have inadvertently gotten into the paper but, unfortunately, many letters of merit never get printed because of false names.

Now that all the rules are clear, fire at will.

Our Constitution A Sham?

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

The actions of the Faculty concerning the Faculty Review Board bring to light an attitude toward the Student Constitution that has been increasingly evident in the last few years on the part of some members of the faculty and the administration. This attitude is implicitly evident in the actions taken in recent years by faculty and administration officials.

This is the idea that the constitution is binding on the students only, and that the faculty and administration may (and indeed must) operate at their own discretion. This conception stems from the clause in the Constitution that gives the faculty and administration "ultimate authority" in student matters. This perhaps is necessary—"ultimate authority" that is. This is not to say, however, that the faculty or the administration has desmretionary powers granted to it by the Constitution. The whole spirit of a Student Constitution would deny this. The Constitution is a compact between the two parts of the University: the "permanent" or continuing part of the University (the faculty) and the "transient' part of the University (the students) Both are part of a University, both are necessary, and it is the complementary nature of the two parts that gives the University its "wholeness" or unity of purpose.

The Student Constitution is a constitution in that it recognizes a relationship between students and the faculty-administration. The faculty-administration is not the "University"—though it is formally established as such by the North Carolina General Assembly. In the Middle Ages when the University was developing, the relationship between students and faculty was more direct. The students paid each teacher under whom he studied. The relationship was entirely reciprocal: the faculty had something to impart and the students were there to receive this. The simple financial relationship points up the primitive function of faculty and students.

However, in our modern society, education has become institutionalized as have most other functions of society. You may call this good or bad (be you a conservative or a liberal), but it is a fact. The financial relationship between students and faculty is no longer simple. A specialized function of the faculty has developed into the Administration. But the spirit of the University should not have changed, though the form has.

It is a mistaken idea for the faculty or the administration to assume that it is "the University" because it is relatively more permanent. Students are important, too, and they have rights—if not power. The students who used to "establish" the faculty (i.e., pay their salaries) have now abrogated this function to "society".. Now the faculty and administration are responsible to "society" for the protection and culturization of the students, or so the attitude seems to be.

Admittedly, the faculty is advocating the changes in the composition of the Faculty Review Board in order to protect the right of students to "due process." But the arbitrary manner in which they have instituted this change shows a basic lack that should govern faculty-student relations.

It may be unrealistic in this "depersonalized society" to advocate a return to a basic conception of reciprocity in faculty-student relationships, but perhaps it is in the nature of students (if not faculty) to be idealistic.

If we are to regard the Student Constitution as binding on the students only, then it is no constitution at all. Let us be honest with ourselves, then, and get rid of the antique curiosity. Let's not be sentimental. There is nothing more useless than a constitution if it has lost its spirit, for the Student Constitution can only be founded on the "good faith" of both parties.

Lost Treasure

By STEVE DENNIS

Lost Treasures of the Mediterranean World, by Robert Payne, Thomas Nelson & Sons, 1962, $7.50.

"In the continuing dialogue which the archaeologist holds with the past, all the best lines come from the dead," comments Robert Payne in his excellent book on important archaeological finds in the past thirty years. Many of the "lines" in this "dialogue" are illustrated in the one hundred thirty-nine black and white illustrations to the book.

The general reader whose knowledge of archaeology may be limited to major sites in the Fertile Crescent, Greece, Rome, the Orient, and Central and South America is in for a surprise with this book. Payne discusses thirty-seven sites, many of them quite minor, but of increasing importance as they continue to be excavated. Some of these sites are new; others are being continued, or resumed. All of them are yielding significant finds which necessitate a constant re-evaluation of past historical accounts of the peoples who created them.

The immense bronze crater of Vix in France discovered in 1953, the Easter Island-like heads of Antiochus I at Nemrud Dagh, and the many Roman and Byzantine mozaics which are being restored are likely to be of particular interest.

This is a book which can easily be read in under two hours, yet one to which the reader is likely to return to study the illustrations, which are of superlative quality. Of particular value is Payne's introduction, which discusses the craft of the archaeologist and attempts to define the importance of achaeology in a nuclear and space age. This section deserves to be read even if the reader is interested in nothing else in the book.

Payne writes that his book, "though it deals only with recent discoveries around the Mediterranean lake, is designed to show what we have scarcely begun. Whole empires, entire cities, remain to be discovered. A thousand Greek statues lie at the bottom of the sea, and in the last sixty years scarcely a dozen have been brought to the surface. Whole libraries remain to be discovered, for it is unthinkable that we have lost forever the unknown works of Sappho, Aeschylus, and Sophocles. As the archaeologists grow more cunning, and the spades dig deeper, we can expect to find more treasures than we ever hoped for. There is more treasure under the earth than over it; and the old vessels slumbering in the darkness have not long to wait before they see the sun again."

The only complaint one is likely to have about this book is that its sole color plate is on the front cover.

Trash And Dogs

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I have been wandering around this campus for almost a month now. Where are any of these litter receptacles referred to in The Tar Heel of the 9th I havn't seen any. Also, it seems that the University is a home for unowned canines. Are these transfer students from Dook, or are they just visitors? There are more dogs on campus than girls.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Intolerable

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The recent decision of the faculty committee to remove student representatives from the Student-Faculty Review Board is distressing to many students, but I find it intolerable.

It seems that the good faith existing between the administration and student leaders which has been proclaimed in recent years has been arbitrarily destroyed by an insensitive committee. I do not question the final authority of the administration in matters of student discipline, but I do question their approach to the exercise of this authority.

An important function of any university is to train students to think critically and to deal humaneiy with those who err from the legality or differ from the dominant opinion of a free society. How can students grow in the virtues of tolerance, compassion, and critical inquiry when the actions of well-meaning teachers belie those principles they seek to imbue?

Clearly the failure of the faculty committee to consult student leaders before reaching its legally valid decision is a clandestine refutation of its apparent faith in student responsibility. As one of many shocked students I regret the committee's method and believe the committee did not consider the full import of such action.

Carolina's motto is "Light and Liberty." It would seem that neither the faculty nor the administration would intentionally blot out the spirit of either one by such an uncalled-for breach of trust.

DTH Defended

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I would like to make a few comments on Richard Creel's letter to the editors on October 27, 1963 concerning the articles written about Madame Nhu.

Apparently Mr. Creel has carried his fetish for blatant criticism of the Diem regime far beyond the point of reasonableness. It appears that Mr. Creel has seen one word "alleged", and has disapproved so violently of Mr. Kirkpatrick's and Mr. Blackwell's articles that in his furor over it, he has become unable and unwilling to look at certain Facts.

First of all, Mr. Bulkley's article was a report of what Madame Nhu said at Raleigh and not a critique of the Diem regime. As for the usage of the word "alleged" in Mr. Bulkley's statement, "Her family has been criticized for its alleged persecution of Buddhists." I think Mr. Creel should take a look at the situation in which it was being used: Madame Nhu was here denying any persecution to the Buddhists and denying the United States charges against the Diem regime. If it is pictured as the US being on one side showing its well documented charges of persecution of the South Vietnamese by the Diem regime and Madame Nhu on the other side denying them with what she considers proof, and finaly a reporter—note that I say reporter and not an editor or critic—in the middle of these two trying to report the story without bias, then one may well see how the use of the word "alleged" would be proper. Also, if Mr. Creel had taken the time to look up the word "allege" in the dictionary, he would find that the first definition is "to declare or affirm" and the second definition is "to declare or affirm without proof." ("Webster's New World Dictionary," 1958.) In view of all the facts that Mr. Creel has presented as evidence of the Diem persecution of its subjects, does it not seem that the first definition of allege is what was meant? Actually I think this furor over the one word is an argument of semantics and not really an important part of the picture.

The main point is this: Criticism and critical analysis of the Diem regime belong on an editorial page and not in a front page news item. As was said before, the item written by Mr. Bulkley was merely one on Madame Nhu's visit to Raleigh and was not meant to be a report of all the past and present happenings in South Viet Nam.

As for the criticisms of Mr. Kirkpatrick's article, I feel that the front page was not the place for such an article, and that in some respects it was in poor taste for the DTH to print it. However, I cannot see how this can be acceptable validation of the blatant charges made against the DTH staff by Mr. Creel Since Mr. Creel is one who likes to know the facts, then it appears incongruous that he has not taken the time to document his charges against the DTH staff and policies as well as he did to prove the charges against the Diem regime.

If the time were taken by Mr. Creel to try to prove his charges against the DTH, I feel certain that he would find the reporters and editors far from being politically naive, far from being cheap and vulgar, and far from being completely apathetic and unaware of "basic values of human dignity and human justice."

In summary it appears to me that Mr. Creel's letter was conceived in obvious anger—anger so great that it has made him unable to be reasonable or rational about any of his charges. In fact, his reasoning about the DTH appears to me to be more on the level of Madame Nhu's reasoning about the Diem regime's persecutions: both are irrational and can easily be proved false.

In Tribute

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Many of us on the Library Staff are shocked and saddened by the sudden death of Professor Robert J Getty last Thursday night. Mr. Getty was well known to us as one of our most constant patrons in the Library among the faculty. We would see him about four days a week all the years he was here, either ordering both new and old books for the Classics Department in our Aquisitions section, or taking out many personal loans at the Circulation Desk, or just browsing studiously in the Stacks. Through his rare kindliness and solicitude for people, and with his vast scholarly interest and knowledge of books, he became one of the Library's best faculty friends.

Never to be forgotten will be: his unique way of speaking in a slurred Irish-British accent and the happy lilt of his voice; his old-world type of gentlemanly courtesy; his quiet, dignified manner combined with an outgoing friendliness, a ready smile and a youthful sense of humor; his steady but kind look right into your eyes, and the feeling he gave of his personal attention to each individual or subject at hand. In the physical bulk of this large man there was the grace of something soft and light and tender which he never tried to hide.

Just Kidding?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I was surprised and disappointed by your recent editorial attacking the Di-Phi newspaper, A Voice in the Wilderness. For the information of your readers, I think it is only fair to point out that the article which criticized The Tar Heel for its "unceasing stream of leftwing, brainwashing articles" was entitled "Trivia." The same article also criticized its author, (the editor of the Voice) the Di-Phi, (the sponsor of the Voice) and the president of Di-Phi. The president, Mr. Hubert Hawkins, was, in fact, called "the noted leftist and master of hyperbole." This same column also described the purpose of the Voice as being to inflict right-wing, brainwashing articles" on its readers.

Your bitter and derogatory editorial not only attacked the Voice, but the Di-Phi as well. It is ironic that "Trivia" was described by its author as a "feeble stab at humor" in the very same iesue, and apparently all of the objects of its comments except The Tar Heel took it in stride. Come now, gentlemen, where is your sense of humor? There are many who tell me that you are continually on the defensive about your editorial policy, and I'm afraid this must be the case. Is your position so precarious that it can't stand a little kidding?

North Carolina coaches died last week. During his undergraduate days, Hilton lived with the Ransons. Joe and Dale worked as a team in developing a great number of outstanding performers.

While Dale concentrated on distance running, Hilton tutored the weight and sprint aspirants. Among the top athletes Joe has guided are Barry Tiedeman and Heath Whittle, vaulters; Tommy Clark, the current high jump king; hurdlers Jim Brown and Jack Moody; vaulter and broad jumper Charles Yarborough; Bob Kirk, javelin; Bob Seligman and Roger Morris, shot and discus; Harry Brown, sprinter and javelin, and Jeff Newton and Ronnie Jackson, sprinters.

As an athlete at Carolina, Hilton arrived with an impressive background. Participating on a team which captured the State championship, Joe placed as the No. 1 prepster at throwing the javelin.

As a Tar Heel, Hinton scored often in the javelin and hurdles, but also took time to compete in the broad jump, high jump and vault. He ran on the first shuttle hurdle team to represent Carolina in the Penn Relays (1937). Hilton held several dual meet and CAAU javelin records until his mark was erased by Kirk here in 1949.

Hilton considers one of the major accomplishments during his service under Ranson was helping coach the hurdle shuttle relay team which in 1949 set a Penn Relays record of 59.6 for the 480. The unit included Bill Albans, Dick Taylor, Bobby Morrow and Jack Moody. The time stands today as a school record.

"My sole aim is to try to give the same guidance and dedication to track that was associated with Coach Ranson's era," said Hilton. "No one will replace Dale. It is rather a matter of trying to keep pace."

Other than his track duties, the new coach serves as director of freshman athletics.

Hilton was married to the former Virginia Reid, of High Point, in 1941. They have three children: Truman, 20, a sophomore at Eastern Carolina College; Libby, 16, a student at Chapel Hill High, and Reid, 13, who attends junior high.

COSMOPOLITAN CLUB

The Cosmopolitan Club resolved Sunday night to elect a new vice-president at a later meeting.

Terence Yen, club president, said that the vice-presidential vacancy has been created by the resignation of Harotune Dekirmenjiane because of heavy academic work.

Nominations for candidates will come from the Executive Committee and the floor, he said.

The Club also voted to appoint a subcommittee to revise its constitution and subject to general assembly approval.

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS

The Chapel Hill League of Women Voters will sponsor a community service program to acquaint newcomers with the town.

Superintendent of Schools Howard Thompson wil talk on school administration and financing. Joe Augustine of the Chapel Hill Merchants Association will speak on services available in town. County Commissioner Gordon Cleveland will explain the local tax structure. The meeting will be held at 8 p.m. in the Institute of Pharmacy, 109 Church St.

THEY SING HONEST FOLK SONGS.

IN A WILD,
DRIVING,
SPIRITED, EXCITING, AND SOMETIMES QUIET
NEW WAY.

THE JOURNEYMEN

Just listen to their Capitol album, "New Directions in Folk Music."

You'll hear the rocking, driving way the Journeymen sing "Someday Baby," a low down blues out of Chicago. The fun they have with "Stackolee," the wild song about a legendary terror of New Orleans. Their quiet and moving version of "All the Pretty Little Horses," one of the most beautiful lullabies ever written. Their spirited ragtime rendition of "San Francisco Bay."

Then you'll know what's new in folk songs. And what's best.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

IN A WEEK when the football team bears down on national ranking against Georgia, the soccer team prepares for its key game with Maryland, and the cross-country runners face chief rival Duke, Coach Dean Smith is concerned with only one thing: the health and welfare of his basketball team.

First time Smith took a look at his varsity, there were 18 guys out there ready to run, jump, dribble and shoot. Since then, Smith's figured he might as well hold practice in a hospital as on the Woollen Gym floor. Half UNC's club has had to miss some if not most of the sessions to date.

Important among all the aches and pains have been the injuries to Charlie Shaffer, Bryan McSweeney and Terry Ronner. Shaffer (6-3, 195), whose list of athletic accomplishments is shorter than only his medical case history, is currently waiting out a groin injury which he first incurred in the ACC tournament last season.

It was okay in the spring when the aggressive senior sparkled for the tennis team, but he hurt it again in a tourney over the summer. Smith says the doctors have notified Shaffer he is not to work hard for three weeks. This would take it up to November 15.

McSweeney (6-5, 190), another senior, was in the hospital with the flu last week and missed three days of practice. He could be right back this week, but it is still questionable. Ronner, the big (6-6, 210) transfer from Wilmington, is again out with the troublesome knee that sidelined him all of his eligibility last year. His status for the rest of this season is very much up in the air. Smith is not sure Ronner will be able to play at all.

The absence of these three has severely hampered Smith in an attempt to get off to a fast start on his adjustment of positions.

A Lot Depends On Mike Cooke

GRADUATION LOSSES HAVE to be called serious even though only two men saw what you would call "considerable action" last year. Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet operated UNC's 1-2-2 or 1-4 offense to near-perfection, and they are gone.

In Brown's place, the "quarterback" position where most of the play direction takes form, Smith has installed Mike Cooke (6-2, 190) —the ACC's best "sixth" man last year as a forward. Shafffer was the other main change, also from forward to guard. But his injury has slowed the conversion process.

Shaffer's position, along with that of Ray Respess', Smith calls the wing. Out here, the UNC coach wants relatively big men who can shoot and move quickly. Respess (6-4, 207), who seems to have locked up one of these "wing" positions already, has also made somewhat of a change since he played pivot much of last year.

Behind Shaffer has been McSweeney — again a change of position. Smith has had Bryan alternating between the wing and the pivot, but (also, again) his injury has hampered the adjustment.

Underneath, where Smith will tentatively play two men, is magnificence and a question mark.

Billy Cunningham (6-5, 218), the noted Kangaroo, is as exciting as he is brilliant, and he is not going to be replaced much. Only foul trouble or a broken neck will force his absence. He too, though, is practicing at both the post and the wing.

The other pivot spot is being contested by Billy Galantai (down in weight to 220) and sophomore Bob Bennett. Galantai, says Smith, is currently ahead, but Bennett is also being tried at wing, and the 6-8 soph's speed may eventually put him at that spot with a second sophomore, Jimmy Smithwick, plus Ronner and Artie Katz moving to the pivot. Galantai's trick knee has also caused some concern again.

Smithwick (6-5, 200) has looked very impressive in practice, as have sophs Johnny Yokley and Ray Hassell playing behind Cooke at the key guard position.

Billy May Have To Carry Them

SMITH DOESN'T LIKE to admit it, but it is no secret that Cunningham may have to carry this team through the early games. Although the shooting may be better and the rebounding will definitely be improved from last year ("Best depth in forecourt since '60," says Smith), speed and defense will be down.

Past Cooke and Shaffer, the UNC backcourt is admittedly weak—at least, as of now. One of the two rookies, Yokley or Hassell, must come through to give the Tar Heels insurance when foul trouble hits. Even the two starters at the guard spots must prove they can do the job back there. After all, both have moved into relatively new assignments.

"Cooke is an intelligent ballplayer, and that's what we have to have back there," says Smith. "I think Mike can do the job. He is finally where he belongs after having to play up front for us for two years. I look for him to have a great year.

"You've got to remember that he played guard in high school and a few games last year at the position for us. But, then again, he is taking on some tremendous responsibilities as our quarterback. So it is a new role."

Smith is also looking for great things fro Respess, the smooth-shooting junior from Pantego.

"Ray is one of three men (along with Cooke and Cunningham) who already have their positions sewn up. We have always felt he was one of our finest shooters, but last year he was out of position, and he didn't get his bearings as soon as we had hoped.

"Respess is another guy who is now at the spot where he should be. He wasn't used to playing with his back to the basket as he had to last season. This year, he should not be reluctant to shoot."

The question came up as to scoring power, where it would come from, etc. Thinking in terms of Cunningham averaging 50-60 points a game is not, as some people believe, the current fad among the basketball brain trust. More like 48.

Seriously, Smith said. "We should have balanced scoring with the exception of naturally, Billy. Last year, a great deal of our success came from the fact that this club was so unselfish. Larry (Brown) of course typified this. Mike Cooke will have to direct it this year.

"We will not have the good driver we had in Larry last year. But Respess facing the bucket, Cooke and Shaffer from outside and Bennett, who I feel is a potentially great shooter, coming fast, will give us good balance."

Cunningham, sometimes unbelievable as the league's best soph last year, will probably face some stacked defenses this time. As Smith agrees, he will have to work harder for his points around the league and elsewhere this campaign.

The schedule's high points, in addition to conference series with Duke and Wake Forest (whom the Tar Heels were unable to beat last year), includes games with Indiana (at Charlotte), Notre Dame (at Greensboro), Kentucky and NYU.

In preparation for the tough road, Smith has been holding scrimmages (varsity-varsity, varsity-frosh, mixed, etc.) every Friday night which have been drawing pretty well. This Friday at 7:30 a full dress scrimmage between the varsity and freshmen will take place. Bob Lewis and Ian Morrison are the names, and there hasn't been as many people out watching the freshman team since Billy Cunningham. And that isn't too long ago.

UNC Frosh Have Score To Settle

UNC'S FRESHMAN FOOTBALL team has some kind of score to settle, but in an indirect way this week. The Tar Babies, 3-1 on the year but humiliated at Virginia two weeks ago, 32-12, face Maryland's frosh at College Park Friday. And Maryland beat Virginia's "Jewels" 21-14 last week. Amen.

UNC Fights Virginia To 2-2 Marathon Tie

By ARMANDO ARIBA

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — North Carolina and Virginia fought through 88 minutes of regular-game action and two five-minute sudden death overtimes here yesterday, but the two could settle nothing and the marathon ended in a 2-2 soccer tie.

Virginia started strong against the Tar Heels of Coach Marvin Allen and took a 2-1 lead into halftime. UNC inside Billy Haywood, a baseball pitching star in the spring, tied it up at 8:03 of the third period, and from there the two teams played brilliant defense to the end.

Marty Kruming, Carolina's swift wingman, tallied the first score of the game at 11:13 of the opening quarter to put UNC up, 1-0. But the Tar Heels bogged down soon thereafter and furnished the Cavaliers with several scoring opportunities, two of which they converted.

Jerry Fisher drove a goal home from wing at the 18:42 mark of the first period to tie for UVA. And Leon Moore put the Cavs out in front a little later with a hard 15-footer at 5:31 of the second.

Haywood's marker after the half completed the scoring.

Carolina's defensive play, though strong later in the game, suffered a great deal beause of the absence of George Beim, the fine center half from Palisades, N. Y. Beim took sick Monday and did not dress yesterday. It is believed tonsilitis is the cause.

Coach Allen, visibly disappointed, pointed out the fine play of Charlie Battle, Park McGinty, center Pete Blake and Haywood as being factors in UNC's spirited defensive play.

Carolina actually played better in the overtime than in the regular game. UNC had the better opportunities to score in the extra periods but could not capitalize.

Charlie Ray in the Virginia goal was somewhat spectacular on a play in the second overtime when the ball was headed by three Carolina men (Blake, Jim Talbott, and Drew Murphy). The Cav goaltender batted the ball out of danger to the left when it appeared he would have no chance for the save.

Buddy Siegel, UNC goalie, also played his usual steady game, considering the cold and windy conditions much of the day.

Loud Scores Three As Frosh Win, 5-1

By STEVE HAWTHORNE

The North Carolina Freshman soccer team sent the Duke Freshmen back to Durham today with their Blue tails between their legs. From the opening minutes of the gome, Carolina displayed the drive and determination which were to carry it on to a 5-1 win.

First blood was drawn by center forward John Loud on a beautiful assist from fullback Terry Henry. Duke threatened only twice during the quarter, and was unable to score. Henry made an admirable save as one Duke shot got away from Carolina goalie Bob Johnson, and the Duke attack was stopped.

Seven minutes into the second quarter saw forward Hal Minis put Carolina's second tally into the Duke nets. Twenty-seven seconds later Minis scored again on a combination that the goalie never saw. Wing Pepe Rosas made a leaping cross to Loud, who passer to Minis, who upped the score to a big 3-0.

Late in the first half Duke showa little life, but it was too little and too late to be effective. With seven seconds remaining, Loud, on an assist from inside John Lacey, scored again. Duke goalie fell on the ball, rolled with it, did everything but dance with it, and then obligingly flipped it goalward, to end the half on a 4-0 note.

The third quarter opened with Loud scoring once again as he drew the goalie out and fired in a shot from roughly 25 yards. Duke center forward McCrery managed to squeeze a shot in with ten minutes left in the period, finishing the scoring for the day with Carolina out in front, 5-1.

Coach Bill Schieffelin had not expected to win by such a wide margin and expressed great pleasure with the team's play.

He said that although the passing was excellent during the first half, it fell off a bit during the second, as the scoring would indicate.

UNC Favored By A Point Over Georgia

NEW YORK (UPI) — North Carolina's Tar Heels were named a slim one-point favorite over Georgia in their Saturday battle here yesterday.

In other games involving ACC clubs, Georgia Tech is an 11-point choice over Duke, North Carolina State 11 over Virginia, South Carolina 10 over Tulane, Penn State 6 over Maryland, and Clemson 28 over Wake Forest.

The odds-makers also named eight of the nation's top 10 ranked teams as favorites and listed the two others, Wisconsin and Syracuse, as only even money.

Texas, the No. 1 team in the nation with a 6-0 record, was listed a big 12-point favorite over SMU.

Make Georgia Run

UNC football coach Jim Hickey said yesterday he hoped his Tar Heels' game with Georgia would be more of a "running game than a passing battle."

Speaking at his weekly press conference at the Carolina Inn, Hickey noted that the Bulldogs' passer, Larry Rakestraw, was one of the finest quarterbacks in the country, but that Georgia's running game was not very strong.

"I hope we can make Georgia run," Hickey said. "If our pass defense can continue to hold up as it has done (among the top five in the NCAA), I figure they may have to turn to their running backs."

Diane Monroe Selected As The Fairest Of Them All

By HUGH STEVENS

Diane Monroe, a pert, brown-eyed beauty from Rockingham, was named the 1964 Yackety-Yack Queen over 102 other contestants Tuesday night in Memorial Hall.

"I feel just wonderful," the new queen beamed. "It's great just to go to Carolina. I knew we had a lot to be proud of, but after being backstage with those 102 other girls, I realize it even more. They're all wonderful sports, in addition to being beautiful girls."

The new queen is five feet, six inches tall and weighs 120 pounds. Her beaming smile was not dimmed by a few tears of happiness Tuesday night.

Diane is majoring in elementary education after switching this year from medical technology. Her reply to a reporter's question as to why she chose this field was, "I just love little kiddies!"

She named water-skiing and horseback riding as her hobbies, with the emphasis on water skiing.

Diane is no stranger to beauty contests, having served as the UNC Homecoming Queen last year. n the past she has also won a number of other titles.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Monroe of Rockingham.

The other eight finalists and their sponsors were Mary King, Nurses Dorm; Judy Zachary, Parker Dorm; Evelyn Marie Long, Pi Kappa Alpha; Judi Flanders, Phi Delta Theta; Elizabeth Lackney, Chi Omega; Susan Ausband, Kappa Alpha; and Judy Bassett, Chi Psi.

Interviews For Canadian Swap To Start Today

One of the many exchanges sponsored by student government at UNC is the Toronto Exchange. The purpose of the program is to give students at UNC an awareness of life "north of the border."

This year students from UNC will be briefed by representatives of the Canadian government, participate in seminars with other Canadian students, tour Toronto, and witness Canadian winter sports. This exchange is unique in that it involves 23 UNC students and does not conflict with classes.

The first phase of the exchange will begin on Friday, Nov., 22 when 23 Canadian students will visit Chapel Hill. This year the exchange commission will make an all-out attempt to introduce the Canadians to life in North Carolina. Accordingly, the theme of the week will be "North Carolina, Microcosm of the Changing South."

All students interested in participating in this program may attend interviews in the Roland Parker lounges from 4-5 p.m. today, Friday, and Monday.

Trustees Tighten Admission Policy

By JOHN KING

Faced with a 35 per cent enrollment increase since 1959, the University Board of Trustees Monday unanimously adopted two policy changes suggested by the Admissions Advisory Committee.

The two new admission policies are (1) that the admission of out-of-state students to the University be modified so that applicants whose birth place was North Carolina, and sons and daughters of persons born in North Carolina be counted within the 15 per cent out-of-state quota; and (2) that the effective date for admitting undergraduate men to the University at Greensboro be changed from the fall semester of 1964 to the summer session, 1964.

Committee chairman Lunsford Crew of Roanoke Rapids said that total enrollment in the University had increased from 16,363 in 1959 to 22,075 in 1963. By institution the change during the five-year period has been as follows: at North Carolina State from 5,854 to 7,451 (a 27.5 per cent increase); at the University at Greensboro from 2,586 to 3,737 (a 44.5 per cent increase); at Chapel Hill from 7,923 to 10,887 (a 37.4 per cent increase).

"The problem or relating growth of enrollment in the University to maintaining the adequacy of facilities and excellence of staff is, of course, of paramount importance," Crew said at the meeting.

"The officers and faculties of our institutions are constantly studying this problem to the end that the maximum number of students may be admitted consistent with resources and desirable standards," he continued.

Crew pointed to the enrollment increase at Chapel Hill as the most critical problem. The year 1,283 more students enrolled at Chapel Hill than in the preceding year, an increase of 13.36 per cent. The present enrollment of 10,887 is 800 students in excess of the number for which funds were budgeted this year, and 300 more than the number for which funds were budgeted for next year.

He reported that the basic factors considered in admitting an applicant for the freshman year are: the high school record, including his rank among his classmates; the scores on the College Entrance Board examination; the recommendation of his school principal, and other indications of character and citizenship.

"At Chapel Hill last year the number who left the first-year class for academic reasons was reduced from 14 per cent to 11 per cent over the previous year by this standard of admission," Crew explained.

The Trustees also heard a report from William Medford of Waynesville, chairman of the special advisory committee assigned to select a new chancellor, who indicated that the selection process may be a long one.

Medford said the final report may not be available for five or six months.

"This is a normal length of time for this sort of thing," he said.

Medford said his group had held four meetings and discussed a number of possibilities to replace William B. Aycock, who is resigning in June to return to his law professorship.

"Pure economics may be a deciding factor," he said. "The price on university administrators is going up."

Sen. Martin Calls Gag Law Biggest Mistake Since 1900

By SUZY STERLING

"I am convinced that this was the greatest single legislative mistake since 1900," State Sen. Perry Martin said of the recently enacted Speaker Ban law at the first meeting of the UNC YDC here last night.

Senator Martin contended that the "best way to oppose communism is to understand it. There is no reason why we should fear it."

He also noted that depriving people of knowledge of communistic principles will only serve to instill a magnetic desire in those otherwise not interested.

Criticising the hurried manner in which the bill was passed through the Senate, not appearing on the usual Senate calendar or being processed by committee action, Sen. Martin said we "voted by number before it was realized what the bill entailed."

He also added that in the third reading," when there was a sufficient margin to defeat the bill, the movement was stopped by the familiar argument not to "embarrass the President of the Senate."

He went on to explain that the Speaker Ban refers not only to those known as communists, but also to those who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment.

The latter includes as well as freedom from compulsory self-incrimination, those provisions which guarantee no trial in a criminal court unless indicted by a grand jury, immunity to a re-trial for the same crime, and federal government payment for private property.

Meet The Candidates

UP

The University Party candidates for Sophomore class officers are Larry Ehrhart, president; Bernard Baldwin, vice-president; Faryl Sims, secretary; Jerry Teele, treasurer; and Camilla Walters, social chairman.

Larry Ehrhart is a Morehead Scholar from Orleans, Mass. He attended Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., where he was a cheerleader, business manager of the yearbook, a member of the wrestling team and the prom committee. At UNC he served on the freshman executive committee and is a participant in the freshman-sophomore honors program.

"I am sure that you have heard about my challenge to the junior class. Briefly it consists of scholastic and athletic competition between the two classes," he said. "It would be climaxed by a sophomore-junior dance which would feature the crowning of a Sophomore and a Junior Queen.

"Intra-class activities include an academic scholarship for a deserving sophomore, and a newsletter and questionnaire—the results of which would be sent to class and campus committees," Ehrhart added.

"I also propose correspondence with the WC Sophomore class and possibly an All-Consolidated Sophomore Dance. In addition we would like to sponsor a co-rec carnival.

Bernard Baldwin attended Virginia Episcopal School, where he played football and golf and worked on the staff of the school paper. He is from Lynchburg, Va.

"After talking to many of the outstanding members of my class, I have become extremely concerned with their apathy—an apathy which exists because of the lack of organization and activity of last year's class," Baldwin said.

"As Vice-President, I would combat this organizational deficiency by supporting the Inter-Class activities, which would give the many highly qualified members of the class of '66 some outlet for their abilities," he added. Also, devote my efforts and time to the realization of our other plans such as the newsletter, questionnaire, and NSA communications."

Faryl Sims is from Coral Gables, Fla., where she was a member of the National Honor Society, the National Forensic Club and was social coordinator in high school. She has served on the UP executive committee and the freshman class cabinet.

"The secretary of a class must act as a member of the executive committee and be responsible for communications between that body and the class at large," she said.

"My proposals for better communications are three-fold. First, I would like to establish a regular newsletter which would inform our class about campus and class activities. Secondly, I feel that there is a definite need for students to give their opinions on controversial issues and on future plans for the class.

AAUP Will Hear Moody

Ralph Moody, North Carolina deputy attorney general, will be the guest speaker at the fall meeting of the University chapter of the American Association of University Professors, to be held here next Monday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall Auditorium.

The topic of discussion will be the North Carolina speaker ban law. Following Mr. Moody's address, a panel of UNC professors will discuss the topic. Panelists are Henry Brandis Jr., Dean of the School of Law; Carl W. Gottschalk, prof. of medicine; Arnold S. Nash, prof. of religion; and Corydon P. Spruill, prof. of economics.

SPECIAL SESSION TUESDAY

Dr. Gordon Cleveland, Dean of Men William Long, and Dr. C. O. Cathey will appear before a special session of Student Legislature Tuesday night, rather than at tonight's regular session.

They will explain the decision of the Faculty Committe on Student-Faculty Review Board.

The Tuesday meeting was scheduled for the convenience of the faculty members, who could not appear tonight.

UP SP

(The Student Party sophomore candidates failed to meet the deadline for party platforms, so only the biographies will appear.)

The Student Party candidates for Sophomore class officers are Bill Diehl, president; Dicky Baddour, vice-president; Priscilla Patterson, secretary; Jeff Davis, treasurer; and Ruthie Parrott, social chairman.

Bill Diehl is from Daytona Beach, Fla., and attended high school in Kinston, N. C. He attends UNC on an Escheats University scholarship, and has been active in dormitory activities. He was co-captain of his high school football team, vice-president of his senior class and a member of the National Honor Society. He also served as president of the Senior Boy's Hi-Y.

Dicky Baddour attended Goldsboro high school where he was president of the Latin and Math clubs, chaired three student government committees and was a delegate to the Student Council convention. At UNC he is an advertising salesman for the Daily Tar Heel.

Priscilla Patterson served as a freshman cheerleader and was publicity chairman of her class. She served as a freshman counselor and is participating in the sophomore honors program. At New Bern high school she was a cheerleader, a member of the National Honor Society and a class marshal.

Jefferson Davis is from Charlotte and is a member of the student legislature. He serves as treasurer of the Student Party, is a member of the Publications Board and is on the Judicial Committee of SL. A member of the Young Democratic Club, he is also on the staff of the Carolina Quarterly.

Ruthie Parrott attended Salem College last year, where she served on three social committees. At Kinston high school she was secretary of the student body and president of the Latin Club. She was also a member of the student council for four years. Last summer she was a member of the UNC Junior Playmakers, and appeared on the Ted Mack Amateur Hour as a dancer.

SG Conducts Frosh Show

Student Government will sponsor a freshman to freshman program for class officers to meet their constituents Monday night at 7 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The three-man committee of freshmen, George Lundburg, chairman, Harold Berry and Bob Brace which formulated the idea, Wednesday announced plans for the Election eve meeting, the first of its kind in recent years.

Candidates for frosh president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman will introduce themselves to their classmates, state their platforms, goals and ideas for the class and answer questions.

In a prepared statement the committee said, "Let us not be like all freshman classes have been in the past: uninformed, uninterested and uninspired. We have taken it upon ourselves to start the ball rolling; now it is up to you, the rest of the class to keep it rolling and attend this meeting. We must take an active interest in the class and school, and accomplish something this year besides just being here."

Student Body President Mike Lawler yseterday urged all freshmen to support such initiative by attending the meeting.

WUNC RADIO

WUNC radio will present a spetial Masterwork Halloween program tonight from 8-10 p.m. The program will feature the Symphony Fantastioue by Berlioz, Night on Bare Mountain by Moussorgsky, Danse Macabre by Saint-Saens, The Planets by Holst, Mason Funeral Music of Mozart. It's a scary show, especially arranged by Thurman Smith, the Music Man of WUNC.

CONDITION IMPROVED

James Robert Peck, 21, a senior from Chapel Hill, yesterday was reported "slightly improved" after having "a fair day" in Memorial Hospital.

Peck suffered possible loss of an eye and broken bones when the car in which he was riding overturned near Cary last Sunday.

Lawler Debates Dookie On 'Gas Station Law'

DURHAM — Student Body President Mike Lawler characterized the controversial state Speaker Ban law here Tuesday night as "a gas station issue with the same implications as if one was asked, 'have you stopped beating your wife?'"

The description came in a four-way debate on the law Tuesday night at Duke University.

Joining Lawler in opposition to the law was Dr. Lawrence Wallace of the Duke Law School faculty.

Pitted against Lawler and Dr. Wallace were Miss Jo Ellen Sheffield, a Duke junior, and Horton Poe, a Durham attorney.

The debate, held in the Duke Woman's College adutiorium, was sponsored by Duke's NSA committee.

Each panelist gave a six-minute presentation, with Dr. Wallace, a former law clerk to Supreme Court justice Hugo Black, speaking first.

Wallace called the law a definite repression of speech, and said there was a legal right of the state university to listen to speakers "reasonably" in accord with due process.

Cites Supreme Court

He questioned that membership in the Communist Party was sufficient grounds to bar a speaker. He cited Supreme Court hearings on the membership clause of the earlier Smith Act, in which it was decided that there was a difference between innocent or purposive membership in the Party.

Wallace concluded by saying that the law legislates against the background or associations of a person, whereas the real discrimination should be against the purpose and content of the speech only.

Poe, in defending the law, admitted that the timing was such as to railroad the law through, but that in itself did not make the legislation bad.

"To permit use of a public institution for propaganda that is hostile to our country, and also a threat to national security, seems to condone that propaganda," he said.

Poe. said "people's minds that are growing are easily indoctrinated." He continued that all schools have a right to teach Communism academically, noting that nothing in HB 1395 prevents this.

Not Restriction

"I can't interert this bill as a restriction of academic freedom," he said. "A Communist speaker is not wanting to teach, but to indoctrinate."

Lawler attacked the bill by saying that its effects are "disparate with the sincerely stated concerns of its authors. I submit that their concern for the security of our society and the education of its young people is not fulfilled by this piece of legislation.

"Complete discussion and acquaintance with diverse ideas, even those which challenge the very fabric of the society, strengthen the faith of a people in democratic institutions," he said.

The law he continued, "accomplishes a legal exclusion of legitimate and vital knowledge from the state college or university. It already has done so; and will continue not ony to exclude such legitimate knowledge but also will make it increasingly difficult for the State to maintain the faculty necessary to keep abreast of the rest of the nation."

"Lack of Faith"

Lawler concluded that the law represents an "unfounded lack of faith" in the trustees and students.

Miss Sheffield began her comments by saying that she doesn't agree with the bill, but she upholds the right of the legislature to pass it.

"The legilsature determines where the dollars are going, and they had a right not to want to use public buildings for Communist speeches," she said.

In the question period, Lawler asked, "If to use an auditorium is a misappropriation of state funds, is it also a misappropriation for the library to use state money to buy Communist books?"

Poe countered that such funds were for knowledge, for "the seeking of truth." "As I understand the word," he said, "indoctrination is not truth."

Wallace added, "it becomes a big problem when someone just decides what the truth is."

Blast Administration

Poe said he thought the purpose was to curtail Communist activities among the students. "The administration is being ridiculous in opposing this bill," he added.

Wallace answered Miss Sheffield's question about the effect of the bill on the gubernatorial race by saying that a candidate who could hold out as a "rabble rousing Communist fighter" will have a good chance.

The Great Pumpkin Comes Tonight

To Scare The Students

And Grab Girls

Tonight is Halloween.

Somewhere in the United States, from some sincere pumpkin patch, the Great Pumpkin will rise up bearing toys and candy for all.

Chapel Hill, like all superstitious small communities in the country, will await the arrival of the Great Pumpkin.

And as they wait, they will be performing a number of different rituals to celebrate the grand coming.

Zeta Psis will dress in formal tails and await the annual coming of the Tri-Delts.

The PTA dorms, Parker, Avery, and Teague, will mingle uncostumed with girls from four dorms in the Ram Varsity parking lot.

Beta Theta Pi will mix with Kappa Kappa Gamma in costume from 3 p.m. until.

Students will hold chariot races while Administration officials hover on broomsticks taking ID's.

Chi Psi will revel in costume and the Phi Delts will mingle with the Pi Phis. Champagne and grain is expected.

Young trick or treaters can expect the usual tricks from fraternities in the form of water.

But the real Great Pumpkin will come sometime tomorrow evening to the Chi Phi House. Bathtub gin and apple bobbing will be the fare at the annual "Great Pumpkin Party."

Then comes Georgia and Rakestraw and toga parties.

On Sunday the Great Pumpkin will return to his sincere pumpkin patch and the Hallowen weekend will be over.

Not even the National Safety Council has predicted the final outcome.

A Superb Example Of Democracy In Action

Several significant things stand out from Tuesday night's visit to the campus by L. J. Phipps, over and above what was said at the meeting.

The first significant item is that upwards of 100 persons, mostly students, turned out for the meeting although the Yack Beauty Contest was going on in Memorial Hall a short distance away. This is a strong indicator of community interest in the Speaker Ban issue, and goes a good distance towards hogtying the perennial cliches about the apathy that supposedly exists on this campus. In addition, it demonstrates that there are many who desire to hear and discuss points of view with which they do not necessarily agree, simply because hearing those points of view is essential to a full understanding of any issue.

Secondly, the audience was, in the words of Mr. Phipps, "attentive and courteous." We had every reason to believe the audience would be exactly that, and we are glad that our convictions were borne out. We hope it serves to let other persons with unpopular views know that they can always get a polite hearing from the touchstone of higher education in North Carolina.

Thirdly, and perhaps most significantly, the meeting was proof that however much many of us believe our democratic traditions have been impaired by the passage of the Speaker Ban law, the situation is far from unsalvageable when a legally-selected Representative answers a request from his former constituents to come before them and account for his actions.

The meeting, in short, was a superb example of Democracy in action, and we look forward to many more like it.

We leave the job of evaluating what was said at the meeting to those of you who attended or heard or read about it.

The Uses Of Political Adversity

By DAVID COOPER
The Raleigh News & Observer

It's entirely possible that there's nothing like a good drubbing at the polls to give a politician an objective view of political life.

If so, then former South Carolina Gov. Fritz Hollings fits the pattern.

In a speech Saturday night in Asheville to 1,200 Tar Heel Democrats, the youthful, handsome Palmetto State attorney displayed what is for him a new view of Southern Democratic Party politics.

His tone sounded like that of Lyndon Johnson when Johnson stumped the South in 1960 for the Democratic national ticket after losing the presidential nomination to John F. Kennedy in Los Angeles .

In fact, Hollings sounded like a good man to help the Democratic Party in the South in next year's presidential fracas.

A Kennedy supporter in 1960, Hollings tried last year to unseat veteran South Carolina Sen. Olin B. Johnston. The campaign was waged along an anti-Kennedy, anti-civil rights line. Hollings lost, and lost badly.

He showed in Asheville, however, that he is over the defeat. "A funny thing happened to me on my way to Washington," he wise cracked.

But even more important for Southern Democrats, Hollings packed a message of political moderation on the question of civil rights and Negro demands for equality in the South.

"I don't like it; I've been a Southern Governor and I feel just like you do on this particular score," he said frankly. "But it's time to be politically mature . . . whether we like it or not.

"We don't like the fiction, the force and the hurt feelings. But we live in a changing era and I don't think any of us believe in second class citizenship in this country."

He even had described Attorney General Robert Kennedy as "a good attorney general," but left no doubt that he is not pleased with his actions as attorney general. "I think Bobby's real trouble is he's very efficient," Hollings said.

He said he was "tired" of people "cussing Washington," and the line that "I used to be a Democrat but because of civil rights I'm now a Republican."

He quoted at length the last lines written by Asheville native Tom Wolfe in which Wolfe magnificently described his vision of the majesty that could be American democracy.

"I hear them cuss (President) Kennedy," Hollings said. "I remember how they cussed Tom Wolfe." He painted a glowing picture of industrial progress in the South with the coming of the space age, but warned that Southern Democrats must not fall back into the stagnant morass of political hate and ignorance.

"Remember," he said, "the Republicans have always given us good cause to vote Democratic."

Hollings also revealed some rib-snapping political humor.

Praising President Kennedy for his efforts to solve the Southern textile crisis, he said, "The closest the Eisenhower administration ever got to the textile problem was Sherman Adams' vicuna coat."

Hollings noted that Louisiana Gov. Jimmy Davis, the hillbilly singer, recently sent him a photograph of Davis riding a horse into the Governor's office at Baton Rouge. "That's the first time they ever had a whole horse in there," cracked Hollings.

Some who heard him thought Hollings' off-the-cuff speech was one worthy of study by Southern political scientists trying to make sense out of the Southern scene.

Hollings himself said it marked one of the few political speeches he has made since he developed "political lockjaw" after his defeat by Johnston.

National Democratic Party campaign czars might well consider loosening Hollings' political lockjaw even more in the South next year.

Another Tragedy

Once again the campus and the community have been shocked by the mangling inflicted upon our fellow students as a result of an automobile accident.

James Robert Peck, 21, a senior from Chapel Hill, is reported to be improving slightly after suffering possible loss of an eye and broken bones when he was thrown from his car as it overturned outside Raleigh last Sunday night. His companion, Benjamin Wyche, a UNC student from Charlotte, also was injured but not so severely as Peck.

Only a few weeks ago, on October 11, one of our number died in a similar accident.

Such tragedies as these must be halted. We — you and us — are the only ones who can prevent them from happening. It is clear that we must all start doing a better job of driving safely.

Want It Or Not?

By PETER RANGE

Student Night at Playmakers last week was a success. A full house of students responded with enthusiasm to the opening night performance of "Little Mary Sunshine."

Most significant, however, is the fact that enough students were interested to fill the 330-seat theater for the special performance. The Student Night was designed to make drama more accessible to students, to stimulate greater interest in drama on campus.

For the Carolina, Playmakers to do this required a very special effort. On very short, two-week's notice, Foster Fitzsimmons, director of this first production, revamped the play's rehearsal schedule in order to squeeze in Student Night one day earlier than the originally scheduled opening date. The Playmakers business office was quick to help, offering the tickets for $1.00 in order to break even on the production, having the special tickets printed immediately.

The APO Service Fraternity donated four precious hours of ticket-selling daily for one week. Graham Memorial underwrote the production of Student Night. Student Government endorsed it and offered its full cooperation.

The students came through. And they liked it. Everyone was handed a flyer explaining Student Night at the door. Their comments were asked for. About one-half of the audience turned their comments in. All were positive. Some contained constructive criticism.

The Playmakers offered to run a Student Night for each of the remaining four productions of the year: (Long Day's Journey Into Night, J. B., The Busy Martyr, and The Braggart Soldier) if the students showed enough interest. A season ticket for all four plays was offered at $3.50, tickets for individual productions would be $1.00 each.

Of the students at the first Student Night answering the questionnaire, eighteen said they would like to reserve two season tickets, thirty-nine wanted one season ticket, and sixty-three said they would buy their tickets individually for each play.

To fill the house for this first Student Night took a good deal of hard work and extra effort by many people. Ticket sales carried on in Y-Court and Lenoir Hall demand that someone sacrifice some time. Obviously this method cannot be employed before each production. The tickets must be marketed through standing channels (Graham Memorial Info Desk, Playmakers Business Office) and the interested students must be willing to go out of their way to get tickets.

Mr. John Parker, Playmakers business manager, announces that if students demonstrated considerable response to the opportunity of inexpensive theatre-going by attending the Student Night performances this year, then student tickets would be sold next year at the student price but with all the privileges of other ticket holders: Their seats will be reserved, they may attended on any night of the week (including the weekend), they may buy either season or individual tickets.

Obviously the show cannot go on if only half-a-house shows up. One would think it a foregone conclusion that out of 10,800 students, 330 would be seriously interested in drama. But it is not a foregone conclusion.

While deliberating whether to stage the next Student Night or not (at the risk of a failure), the Playmakers are hoping for more student response to the proposal (Letters to the Editor, etc.). Do they want it or not?

Letters

No letters will be edited in any way, unless they are unreasonably long. Letters must be typed and triple-spaced.

I'm Really Proud Of Our Boys!

Free Flicks Poor

By HENRY McINNIS

"As a child I spoke as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things." The persons who selected the current fall semester's films could well reflect on this Biblical wisdom. There is little excuse for college-level audiences to have extracted from their student fees money to pay for such transparent trash as "Imitation of Life." There are a few more bombs to come too.

It is reasonable to ask that the Free Flick Committee consider more closely the obvious lack of cinematic and artistic quality in past years' selections, and to cull from the gross garbage and prevent wasting students' money, time and leisure. The danger lies in a too authoritarian approach towards individual movies. But there ought to be a more discerning list of flicks than the one we now have.

There seem to be two distinct ways of judging films considered for presentation at Carroll Hall: entertainment and popularity value, or cenematic achievement. Everyone somewhat expects to be entertained as well as intellectually stimulated. But there are many, many movies which combine both functions superbly, and the Committee chose these: "Singer Not the Song"; "The Country Girl"; "Seven Year iltch"; "Lust For Life"; "How to Marry A Millionaire"; "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof"; "Rocco and His Brothers"; "Les Liasons Dangereuses".

Possibly the three worst movies of the last ten years have found their way here to our silver screen: "Imitation of Life" is one of the most unintentionally hilarious movies over to come from Hollywood. It's basically Hollywood's idea of the race problem, and it was also an excuse to doll up Lana Turner and capitalize on the publicity she received as a result of the Johnny Stompanato murder. Lana looked ravishing as usual, and second only to poor Joan Crawford, she endured Everything a Woman Does until every cliche worked itself out in time for the final love clinch.

"Midnight Lace" was according to it's producer-director Ross Hunter, intended for women who frequent and haunt the movie houses on lonely afternoons while hubby is working. And does it stink! The movie's substance is as fragile as its "Lace" and Doris Day, America's apple-cheeked eternal vergin, does nothing more than parade around in Jean Louis gowns, drawing from her repertoire of facial expressions two or three grimaces of fear, sweetness, and feeble passion. Poor Doris was photographed through gauze, mocked "Time," and one can feel for the girl who now is a woman but whose roles and photography insist she remain girl. The ultimate insult to Doris was placing her in Marilyn Monroe's unfinished "Something's Got To Give." Doris is no Marilyn. Neither is anyone else.

Carolina students should be severely whipped if they miss any Monroe movie. Hers was a personality which transformed any vehicle into livid excitement. To educate our co-eds we could have at least brought the wholesome family movie "Whatever Happened To Baby Jane?" Bette Davis can teach any dramatic necessity with the batting of her enormous orbs. Let's have more strange, unorthodox movies in place of the insipid, sniggling sex "comedies." If a movie doesn't stand out from the ordinary in some way, then can it, Committee! Please.

Will Charlie Try For One More?

By PHIL NEWSOM
United Press International

Among President Charles de-Gaulle's detractors at home, the charge most frequently voiced against him is that he has "isolated" France.

His independent nuclear policy is isolating him from the United States and his NATO allies, and is imposing upon France a heavy financial burden.

His "grand design" for France, which led him to ban Britain from the continent as a member of the European Common Market, has irritated not only Britain but also West Germany, with whom he seeks especially close ties.

In addition, the grand design is threatened by internal pressures.

There is mounting unrest in labor and among French farmers. Inflationary pressures threaten the "hard franc" which helped transform France from the "sick man of Europe" to one of the healthiest.

Among aging world leaders few would admit that another man could do the job better. Least among these would be DeGaulle.

And so it comes as no surprise that DeGaulle is beginning to drop hints that he will seek a second term as president of the French Fifth Republic.

The strongest hint of DeGaull's intention thus far came in his current tour of France's Rhone Valley.

He said that for a quarter of a century he had understood the wishes of the French people. And:

"I am determined to continue to do so since I have the strength."

De Gaulle's present seven-year term ends at the close of 1965. On Nov. 22 of this year, he will be 73.

For some time now the question of DeGaulle's successor has been a favorite subject of speculation among French newspapers. But recently the same newspapers which had been pulling out the names of various "crown princes" suddenly erupted with reports that De Gaulle might not quit after all.

There is reason to believe the reports were planted by De Gaulle himself.

DeGaulle's nuclear program is still some eight to 10 years away from making France an effective nuclear power.

Among his possible political successors are many who gladly would welcome Britain into a united Europe, scrap De Gaulle's own grand design and willingly sacrifice some French soverignty in exchange for that unity.

Before he steps down, De Gaulle wants to be sure that France irrevocably is bound to the course he has outlined.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Not Forgotten

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It is fitting that we think together for a moment on the recent death of Prof. Robert John Getty, of the Department of Classics.

Mr. Getty won the respect and love of all those who met him. No kinder person ever shared with UNC the miracle of human friendliness and warmth; no more noble character allowed his excellent example to teach and inspire other scholars both young and old.

As a part of his being a wonderfully real human being, Mr. Getty was a scholar of broad knowledge and understanding. The loss is one which is to be felt not only by his family and friends and colleagues in the study of classics, but by every person who senses to the deeper welfare of the entire University and of the world of scholarship in general.

Once again we resent the cruelty of death and have to share in a measure of the sadness that now must follow.

At the same time we are inspired and humbled and comforted by considering the effects yet to come of a life lived well.

FIRE!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In the 24 dormitories at UNC, some 4700 men spend their days working and sleeping. They come from every part of the United States and the world. They all have one thing in common, however; they live in constant danger. None of them realizes that there is no FIRE ALARM in any of those buildings. Many of the residence halls, particularly these in the upper and lower quadrangles, have wooden floors and frames.

To make matters more hazardous, these men lock their doors behind them. Hence, if one man were to discover a fire during the night, he could not get into the other rooms on his hall to rouse his sleeping dorm-mates. Even though the Resident Advisors have pass keys, much time would be lost running from room to room.

A year ago this month, the United States became upset that we were so poorly prepared for nuclear attack. Suddenly, all over campus, there appeared a barrage of yellow signs indicating "fallout shelters." Why are we so concerned about a threat from the USSR when there is not a single warning system to protect us from a match or cigarette burning down a mens residence hall? Now that the immediate threat has passed, no one cares anymore. As a person who sleeps and works in a dormitory at UNC, I would like to see steps taken to protect almost half the students at this university from danger. We need a FIRE ALARM SYSTEM.

Trust Violated?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

As a student at UNC, I have often heard that our student government is one of the most powerful and active in the nation. Its growth, however, has always been under the auspices of the faculty with whom the "full and final authority" rests. How, then, has the student government reached its present level of power if its every action could be blocked by the faculty?

I believe it is because its leaders have behaved in such a mature and responsible manner in conducting its affairs that the faculty has not needed to block its programs. In other words, it has earned the respect and trust of the faculty.

Now we are at a time in which this trust has been violated, not by the students, but by the faculty, who have arbitrarily and "with full and final authority" removed the students from the Student Government Review Board. This action was not taken in the trust that has been established over the years but by one party of that trust. The faculty committee did not discuss the merits of the removal with anyone before their decision. They went to themselves for the true way, or as Dr. Cleveland, chairman of the faculty committee said, "The committee has made its decision without negotiation and within the area of its own jurisdiction." The mattter was not even discussed with Chancellor William B. Aycock who says that he did not know about it until Tuesday morning. Worse than that though, those whom it affects the most; those whose constitution is now in danger of being changed; those who have had their peers removed from the court; those for whom the move was supposedly taken; the students themselves or even their leaders were not considered.

Surely this decision is out of step with the free and liberal atmosphere which is talked about so much at UNC where debate, discussion, and argument are normally given before a final announcement, not after it.

No Protest

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It appears quite strange to me that pickets attacking the Diem regime can be raised very quickly, whereas days of effort produce no protest against the abrogation of sections of the student constitution by a faculty committee without consultation or notification.

Because of my views on student discipline, I don't wish to now discuss the merits of the various judicial review systems. I will contend, however, that no one can convince me that the manner in which the faculty committee removed the student portion of the judicial review board is anything less than despicable.

But just as despicable is the lack of concern among the student body. Your president, the elected spokesman of the student body, issued a statement and still all is silent. The editors of the DTH consider that the case is not their concern, but Lawler's. They feel that the Bateson and Lowenstein affairs are of more import to the student body.

When the Doug Moe case became public, the students hit the street. What has changed? Now students will not protest aught but segregation, fascism, and communism. Doesn't it mean anything when university officials are caught trying to make off with art treasures belonging to members of the student body, when they dictate rules without regard to past policy and without consultation and notification, when faculty members refuse to take a public stand on an issue which threatens the right to a free education.

Latin American and Asian students would be in the streets. What's wrong with the students of this university? Where are your guns, your bombs, your torches, your ropes, your crosses, your voices, and your newspaper? Where are the rest of your elected and appointed student leaders? Is your president to stand by himself? Will each group wait until it is affected directly? We did and had a portrait stolen.

There is a war in Viet Nam because paddy farmers are traditionally idioton (sic). What is wrong with American students?

Student Revolt Against SG?

MADISON, Wis. — An allegation that certain professors at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee have "encouraged a student revolt" against the policies of student government has been "referred back to the administration" UW-M provost J. Martin Klotsche said last Wednesday.

The incident which touched off dissatisfaction with the University Student Government (USG) was a United States Day forum held several weeks ago. According to Klotsche, the USG-sponsored seminar consisted entirely of conservative speakers.

The seminar became the target of some students and faculty criticism on the UW-M campus. There was discussion, said Klotsche, about a "group of students staging a revolt to express displeasure with the student government."

In order to broaden the view presented by such speakers as Fred C. Schwarz, director of the Christian Anti-Communist Crusade, at the U.S. Day forum, six faculty members "suggested" Klotsche stressed, that Frank Wilkinson, director of the national Committee to Abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities be invited to speak at UW-M.

USG President William Mett had rejected the suggestion claiming that Wilkinson would not meet the standards set by the group's executive board for speakers. He spoke on the campus two years ago.

The "revolt" against the student government was characterized by a criticism of Mett by another UW-M student.

Yale Students Face Treatment

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — The use of hallucination-producing drugs has spread to Yale University, causing many undergraduates to seek psychiatric treatment, according to the Yale Daily News. Several students have suffered borderline psychoses from the drugs mescaline and psilocybin.

At Harvard last spring, assistant professor of Clinical Psychology Richard Alpert was dismissed for administering mescaline and psilocybin to undergraduates. The use of mescaline, however, had not previously been reported at Yale.

At Yale, the hallucinogens were not given by a faculty member or by anyone connected with the administration. The students who purchased the drugs in Mexico, took them on their own initiative in an informal experiment.

It is not known what action the University will take.

No Women After Football

NEW YORK, N.Y. — David B. Truman, dean of Columbia College, announced last Thursday night that visiting hours for women in the dorms after the two home football games would be cancelled because of an earlier attempted panty-raid.

Addressing almost 600 male students, Dean Truman said, "We are determined that it is a part of our obligation . . . to see that you learn, if possible, the plosive situation such as Sunday night (the panty-raid)."

He said that the Sunday demonstration, and particularly the throwing of cans and bottles from dormitory windows, indicated that the level of maturity required for extension of dormitory visiting hours had not been reached by Columbia College students. He emphasized that he agreed with President Grayson Kirk that visiting privileges should be linked with the avoidance of riots.

Sports Courier

THE ANONYMITY BESTOWED upon guys running for long periods of time over far stretches of land was brilliantly portrayed by actor Tom Courteney in a motion picture last year called "The Loneliness of The Long Distance Runner."

But, on the campus of the University of North Carolina, Fall-1963, the long-distance runner is no longer a faceless silhouette with powerful legs and a blue jersey on his back. He is an admired athlete of strength, endurance and (in this case) brains. Admired not only for his guts to even subject himself to such a task, but also because he is a part of what may well become one of the Atlantic Coast Conference's strongest team dynasties.

Under the tutelage of the late Dale Ranson and his assistant Joe Hilton (just-named head track coach), UNC cross-country teams have always been excellent and have always taken their share of meets and championships. But this season Hilton has become a little greedy. The guys have won considerably more than their share. This season, UNC has become excellent to the point of embarrassment — to the rest of the league.

Strangely, the Tar Heels came out of last season's success (6-1 record, ACC Champions, State Champions with Larry Henry, the ACC's individual winner) worried about this Fall's team. Hilton lost Henry, Jerry Stuver, Carmine Lunetta and Charlie Little, figured his number five man, Bob Bennett, would be the only ace and the man to look for when counting points, and thought "our goose would be cooked this year."

Some cooked goose. To date, UNC has run past six conference teams with only a little sweat, and Bennett is still number five, only more consistently so this year.

It has come about from the efforts of four men who have stepped in and given UNC a "Big Five" seldom equaled in ACC cross-country. They are (in order of nothing ,really) Art Maillet, Mike Folk, Jerry Smith and Jim Meade. And Hilton's eyes light up when speaking of them, because it is the progress of their accomplishments rather than the accomplishments themselves that has been so exceptional.

A Spectator Sport It Is Not

THEY SAY THE Chapel Hill Garden Club draws better than a cross-country race, and I've got to believe it. But it's nobody's fault but the architect who installed the woods, hills, valleys, etc. that these guys run over and through. A brief explanation of where this kind of thing takes place when scheduled in Chapel Hill would go like this:

On the track . . . through the gate to the adjacent field . . . up through the woods . . . out and past Avery . . . up to the field house . . . up hill to Nurse's dorm . . . turn left to the water tower . . . cut down through woods . . . to Ehringhaus down Manning Road . . . to bypass . . . make loop by entrance at church . . . hook off to end of Fern Lane . . . go over bridge at creek . . . Up Dead Man's Hill through woods . . . around tennis courts by Avery . . . come back up to Avery . . . back through woods . . . down on track . . . around field again . . . finish at water fountain on the track. Pant, pant.

People just aren't gung ho about watching this type of event. And for reporters, it's like covering a duck-hunting expedition.

Dedication has to be the word for guys like Bennett, Maillet, Folk, Smith, Meade and their teammates. And it is this that has made their progress reach such phenomenal heights.

The heights have meant victories — six of them. And where low score means a win, Carolina has won: 15-43 over Wake Forest, 15-51 over Clemson, 23-32 over Maryland, 17-46 over North Carolina State, 17-45 over Virginia and 18-43 over South Carolina.

UNC meets today its final dual-meet opponent and its toughest one, Duke, before going to the ACC and State Championships in Raleigh next month.

The Blue Devils beat Carolina 27-28 last year and have two excellent runners this season (Cary Weisiger's brother, John and Bob White) but UNC is ready. The "Big Five" in all shapes and sizes want revenge.

Improvement Is Key To Strength

ART MAILLET IS a tall, gangly junior who transferred from Mars Hill College last year and sat out the cross-country season at that time. He was a fine basketball player in Flushing, N. Y. but got interested in long-distance running when he was introduced to it his senior year in high school. He performed well in indoor and outdoor track last year, and has placed no lower than third in all of Carolina's meets so far. Maillet has finished first three times, twice in a tie.

Jerry Smith, a slim red-haired junior, has followed much the same route on a progress report as Maillet. Last year, Smith was a nonentity on the ACC champion outfit. But the Fayetteville, N. Y. native has done a "tremendous job" in holding a permanent lock on one of the Big Five spots this season. He has tied for the top spot in one meet (Clemson) and finished no lower than sixth in any of the others.

Probably the most amazing improvement has come from Mike Folk, who, in one instance, has bettered his time from two years ago over the same course almost three minutes.

Folk ran for UNC in his sophomore year, but was not much of a standout. He studied in West Germany last year on a Goettingen Exchange Program scholarship and practiced over there.

This Fall he has come out again, won two races (the important Maryland meet and Virginia) and, in the latter match, clocked 19:54 over his 22:37 time of two years ago. This, says Hilton, is "tremendous progress."

Bennett and Meade are the two remaining, and their running careers are direct parallels.

Both attended St. Albans Prep in Washington and ran under Coach Sam Hoffman for four years. Bennett, two years ahead of sophomore Meade, came to Chapel Hill a Morehead scholar and has participated in both indoor and outdoor track as well as being a cross-country standout.

A short, powerfully-built runner, Bennett is the UNC captain and since his soph year here has bettered his time on every course in the league by at least two minutes. This again, "fantastic improvement."

As a freshman, Meade won only one race last season, and Hilton has been very surprised and tremendously pleased at his youngest man's performance.

The UNC coach calls the improvement of Meade (also a Morehead scholar) "dramatic" and points out the soph's showing in the early meets, in two of which he tied for first. Meade became the only one of the five to be held out of a race this year when Hilton kept him from running against South Carolina last Thursday.

But they will need Meade this afternoon — if only to make it a complete sweep. Hilton says he is a little worried about the Duke match. But I think he's kidding. In any case, cross-country at UNC has come of age, and interest in it should follow. The sooner the better.

Booters Play Without Beim, Haywood At 3

North Carolina's soccer team, frustrated by a 2-2 tie with Virginian on Tuesday, attempts to get back on the winning track against Belmont Abbey at 3 p.m. this afternoon on Fetzer Field.

Two key performers will be out of action this afternoon, but should be ready to go against powerful Maryland on Monday. Center halfback George Biem is in a Charlottesville, Va. hospital with tonsilitis, and halfback Bill Haywood has a stiff knee.

Park McGinty will be shifted from fullback to Biem's halfback spot, Wyatt Callie will take over Haywood's position, and George Butler will play the fullback position vacated by McGinty.

Belmont Abbey will not field a particularly strong team compared to some of Carolina's other opponents this season, but it will be a tough match and even tougher if the Heels take the contest lightly.

UNC Harriers Look To Duke For First Unbeaten Season

Hoping to wrap-up an undefeated season, North Carolina's cross-country team takes on a strong harrier contingent from Duke this afternoon, starting at four on the Fetzer Friield track.

The Tar Heels have compiled a neat 6-0 record this fall while the arch-rival Blue Devils have lost only once in four meets, to Wake Forest by one point.

Carolina dumped Wake by 27 points and also disposed of N. C. State, Clemson, South Carolina, Maryland and Virginia. The harriers, coached by Joe Hilton, have been paced by two sophomores—Art Maillet and Jim Meade.

Rounding out the "top 5" are Jerry Smith, Mike Folk and Captain Bob Bennett.

The key men for the Blue Devil runners are John Weisiger and Bob White.

Coach Hilton, who was the acting coach during the late Dale Ranson's illness and this week appointed as the new head coach, looks toward the meet with optimism.

"We feel like we could win it, but against Duke you never can tell," says the lean mentor. "We look stronger when you compare scores of the teams we've run, but I know Duke wasn't at full strength when they lost to Wake Forest."

Last season UNC's cross country team won the ACC championship, and during the regular season lost only once—to the Duke Blue Devils—by one point.

Town Rats Wipe Up Rogah In 24-18 Win

By AL KAPLAN

Felda Hightower scored two touchdowns, both on intercepted passes, and Jim Wygand scored once to pace the Alexander Poobahs to a 24-6 trouncing of the Craige Crusaders Monday in a first round playoff game.

In a game that was highlighted by three fights, the Town Rats canned the Everett Rogah 24-18, in a playoff. George Adams, Bud Palmer, Mac Fountain and Stu Orgain tallied for the victors, who held an 18-6 lead at the half. Two members of the Rats were ejected from the game. One for unnecessary roughness to Rogah Quarterback Pete Williams and the other during a hassle for the football on an Everett pass.

Old East, who had triumphed against Avery for a playoff spot, shutout the unorganized Manly Riverrats, 16-0. Tallying for the Primos were Barney Folger and Al Marshall.

Once beaten Mangum upset the undefeated Navy Sea-Lions 14-2, in another first round playoff game. Jim McIntyre and Lee Allen each scored touchdowns for the Redskins.

In other dorm playoff games, the Aycock Aardvarks edged the Alexander Bunnies 12-6. Scoring TDs were John Ward and Tom Hoffman for Aycock and Bill Carpenter for the Bunnies. The loss to Alexander made Parker the only dorm with two teams in the playoffs.

Dick Gardner provided the only touchdown of the game as the Parker Panthers defeated the Old West Packers 6-0.

Zeta Psi continued to win, this time defeating DKE 28-0 in a frat first round playoff game. Sam Thompson scored a TD and safety for Zeta Psi. Also scoring TDs were Sam Williams, Dave Frey and V. A. Barber.

Kappa Sigma also advanced to the second round playoffs, by defeating PiKA 22-12.

75% Of Carolinians DON'T Want Speaker Ban—Martin

Editor's Note: Due to early deadline, only part of Sen. Martin's Wednesday night speech could be reported. A complete story of the speech follows.

By DIANE HILE

"I believe that if the speaker bill is properly explained as you students understand it, 75 per cent of the North Carolinians wouldn't stand for it," State Senator Perry Martin told the UNC Young Democrats Wednesday night.

"I have explained the dangerous implications of the so-called Gag Law to many civic organizations and I found they agree with my objection to it."

The Democratic Senator from Northampton County, who is "considering running for Lieutenant Governor if the right gubernatorial candidate is chosen," discussed legislative redistricting, the so-called Gag Law and the defeat of the Court of Union Bill.

"I feel that the speaker ban law is the greatest legislative mistake since 1900," he said, "and I said so in the Senate."

"the bill was railroaded through legislature and it was not considered in any of the many legislative committees, nor was it placed on the official calendar. Instead, it came from the House by a special messenger and a voice vote was called before the Senators realized what was going on.

"The next day we managed to rally enough votes to defeat the bill. However, it was claimed that the revote would be embarrassing to the President of the Senate, so the idea was dropped."

Senator Martin called the bill a great insult to State-supported institutions, to the people of North Carolina and to the Fifth Amendment.

"I also believe that this insult will be removed before any of you present are elected to legislature," he said, "and if it is not, I hope you will remove it."

Commenting on the legislative redistricting, he said:

"Because some states have refused to redistrict, Supreme Courts are taking action by including such matters and problems under the equal protection clause. I am glad and proud that North Carolina legislature was able to resolve its differences in the four-day legislative session instead of in the Supreme Court."

"The decision was difficult. It was necessary to approve the Little Federal Plan, a constitutional amendment soon to be voted on by the public, in order to accomplish redistricting. We had to place between 90,000 to 91,000 in each district without cutting across county lines. This is difficult when we have counties whose population ranges from 275,000 in Mecklenburg to 4,000 in Tyrrell."

"I must also give credit to the legislature for their greatest act of courage," said Martin, "and that was the defeat of the Court of Union Bill."

The bill proposed to organize 50 justices who would decide if the Supreme Court has properly exercised its power.

"The Supreme Court has served our nation well since 1790," he said, "and in all times has been the real salvation of this nation. From Marbury vs. Madison to the Brown case to the religious issues there has been nothing comparable to the Court in the salvation of democracy of this nation.

"It is no time for a country to kill its umpire and look for something better. If life is changing steadily among races and creeds, then laws must change. It is up to the young citizens to defend the Court."

Senator Martin also made a plea for young Democrats to participate in government.

"The Democratic party is in real danger," he said. "Many mistakes made in the last legislative session were made by Democrats not worthy of the name. If these people take control of the Democratic party, North Carolina will no longer be known as the "Citadel of Freedom" in the South.

Faculty Unaware Of Trial Change

By PETE WALES

"I haven't the slightest idea of what you're talking about."

This statement, made by Law School Dean Henry Brandeis, was typical of over half the reactions of selected faculty members to last week's decision to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

The new Faculty Review Board met last night for the first time to hear an appeal by a freshman who had been convicted by the Men's Council for falsifying an attendance roll.

The freshman pleaded guilty but was appealing the sentence of two semesters probation. The Board reduced the probation time to one semester.

The Student Body President was invited to attend the review but did not attend.

"I felt it inappropriate to attend the meeting while the student community was still so seriously concerned with the way the changes were made," President Lawler said.

The chairman of the Men's Council and all the witnesses of the original trial testified in the review. Records of the original trial were also presented.

Members of the faculty interviewed about the changes announced by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline over a week ago had mixed reactions.

Over half of those interviewed were not sufficiently informed to comment.

"I'm against it," said Dr. Dan Pollitt, professor of law.

"I think we ought to have students participating . . . and if we're not, I think we ought to talk it over with them."

Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and History professor, felt it was "improper" for students to sit on the Review Board.

Dean Sitterson was chairman of the Faculty Executive Committee in the late 1940's.

"We heard all appeals from the student courts at that time. There were no students or Administration officials on the Board. It was done solely by the faculty.

"As for the method in which the decision was made, I would have to be better informed about the factors and procedures going on in the decision before I could comment."

"I think there are two sides to the matter," Journalism Professor Walter Spearman said.

"I think there are good reasons why students should be excluded from the Board, but since the Board was a joint student-faculty one, and had been recognized as such, I don't think the change should have been made without consulting the students."

"I don't know the facts," RTVMP Professor John Clayton said. "According to Gary Blanchard (DTH Co-Editor) and Bob Spearman (Student Body Vice-President), the students were not consulted.

"If this is the fact, I would regret it. I would hope that the faculty would consult with the students before making the change.

"As a general matter of philosophy, I regret the change. My personal preference would be to maintain a student-faculty board of review."

South's Best Minds Going North: Prestige Is Cause

By SUZY STERLING

"Many—and probably most—of the brightest graduates of Southern colleges pick graduate schools in other parts of the country for their advanced study," according to Dr. John L. Snell, dean of the Graduate School at Tulane University in a report released recently.

However, according to Dean Wallace, associate dean of the grad school here, "The problem is not serious at UNC. We get more applications than we can handle, possibly second in number only to Texas."

But the fact remains that those graduate students receiving fellowships are, for the most part, not using them in the South.

In the past three years the proportion of students using national fellowships to study in the South has decreased from 17 to 13 per cent.

Eighty er cent of southern students awarded Woodrow Wilson fellowships left the region for their advanced study.

Since 1960, the number of outstanding students in the South allotted National Defense Education Act Awards has decreased from 35 to 28 per cent.

These facts yield an inescapable conclusion:

Eighty per cent of southern stu- other regions in graduate education, is," as a result, "losing many of its best young minds to these other regions."

The report indicated only six Southern graduate schools with national reputations. Included were Virginia, Vanderbilt, Texas, Tulane, Duke and UNC.

But it was noted that "The South has far too few graduate schools of this caliber.And none of these listed in the top ten of the nation. Few of the outstanding students in other regions think of taking graduate education in the South."

Grad students here indicated several reasons for this "export of Southern brains."

Surprisingly enough, the prestige of a Ph.D. from a northern school was at the top of the list. It was also emphasized that a "higher quality of education was expected" from those schools having a national reputation.

Secondly, the students indicated that there are "wider job opportunities" in the North. It is "easier to get a job moving from the North to other regions." Getting a Ph.D. from the South was said to "limit the region of job possibilities."

Other less important reasons indicated were better Northern Library facilities, possible racial trouble in the South, and the desire to see another part of the country.

Dean Wallace noted that although the over-all graduate school here was not one of the top ten in the nation, "Some departments at UNC are best in nation while many others approach national stature."

He agreed that 'the majority of graduate schools in the south do not compare in quality to the ones which are attracting the outstanding student."

4 Organizations Get Funds Frozen

Four campus organizations have had student government funds frozen for failure to comply with budget committee regulations, Dick Akers, student body treasurer ,announced yesterday.

The organizations and their chairmen are the Carolina Forum, John Ulfelder; the Honor System Commission, Jane Yeager; the Men's Council, Whitney Durand; and the Women's Council, Carolyn Pinion.

Akers said the organizations failed to appear before the budget committee as requested to discuss their finances. He said that all campus organizations receiving student funds were instructed to appear in order to find out what their responsibilities to the committee will be.

"We have set up a system whereby every organization will be required to furnish monthly statements to us," Akers said. "We will issue periodic financial statements based on these reports."

Akers indicated that the organizations will have their funds withheld until they comply with the regulations and are prepared to issue monthly reports.

Chamber Concert Tonight

The Moscow Chamber Orchestra, under the direction of Rudolph Barshari, will open the tenth season of the Chapel Hill Concert Series with a concert tonight in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m.

UNC students will be admitted free by ID cards.

Fourteen strings, supplemented by two oboists, two hornists, and a harpsichordist-organist comprise the ensemble. All the musicians are graduates of the Moscow Conservatory.

While the repertory's foundation is music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, this core is augmented by the works of other periods.

The Orchestra was formed in 1955 by musicians eager to play a repertory not usually performed in concert series. They gave what time they could spare from their jobs with opera, symphony orchestras or music schools.

An immediate sucess following its 1956 Moscow debut, the Orchestra was added to the Ministry of Culture's group of dance, musical and dramatic ensembles.

The Moscow Chamber Orchestra is an orchestra of soloists and each is heard in a solo part during the course of the program.

The program for tonight's concert includes: Symphony No. 29 in A Major, K 201 by Mozart: Divertissement in F Major, by Bartok; Visions fugitives (arranged by Barshai) by Prokofieff; and Concerto in B Minor for Four Violins by Vivaldi.

ALL SAINTS DAY

A public procession with chanting of the ancient litany of All Saints will highlight a Scholars' Mass at St. Thomas More Catholic Chapel on Gimghoul Road tonight.

The procession will begin at 5:15 p.m. from the basement of the chapel. Solemn high mass will be held after the procession, with a sermon by a Jesuit priest on "The Pursuit of Knowledge in the Presence of Truth."

All Saints Day is an official Holy Day of the Roman Catholic Church.

$53,512 GRANT

A grant of $53,512 has been awarded to Dr. Lyle V. Jones by the National Institute of Health for continuation of his study on aphasia, the speech malady which primarily affects stroke victims.

Dr. Jones is director of the Psychometric Laboratory at UNC and professor of psychology.

For the past five years Dr. Jones has been working with a University of Chicago team to determine the differences between normal speech and the speech of aphasia patients

Chest Drive Tonight

Only $43,012 is needed to raise and reveal the mystery of the fifth flag.

Five flags will report the progress of the 1964 Community Chest Drive which begins today. The first four flags will each represent 20% of the total quota, and will flutter daily on the corner of Franklin and Columbia Streets. The fifth flag will not fly until the quota has been reached.

Approximately 500 Chapel Hill and Carrboro residents have agreed to help in the campaign according to Mayor Sandy McClamroch, chairman of the drive.

Proceeds will benefit nine charitable organizations with the Red Cross receiving the largest share.

The cooperation of merchants, as well as that of area news media, has been assured.

Van Doren To Speak

Mark Van Doren, Pultizer Prize-winning poet who is considered one of the best American poets now writing, will present the Weil Lecture here on Nov. 13.

The lecture theme will concern the position of classical education in the development of citizenship today.

Van Doren, 69-year-old native of the 'all but invisible village" of Hope, Ill., now resides in Falls Village, Conn.

He became a teacher — a second choice to becoming a writer — at Columbia University in the fall of 1920. Although his teaching plans were short-term, they continued uninterrupted for almost 40 years.

He was awarded the Pultizer Prize for poetry in 1939 and his stature as a poet has grown steadily since.

In addition to his poetry, he began writing fiction and nonfiction stories in the mid-1940's.

One of the most recent publications of his works is "Mark Van Doren: Collected and New Poems, 1924-1963," which contains more than 800 poems spanning a period of 40 years, some published for the first time.

The Weil Lecture will be presented at 3 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Phelps Makes Dorm Speech: Is Speaker Ban Law Violated?

By GARY BLANCHARD and DAVID ETHRIDGE

Larry Phelps, a spring graduate of UNC and a self-acknowledged Marxist-Leninist, spoke informally on campus Wednesday night.

During his talk, Phelps reportedly referred to himself as "a communist, with a small 'c' " apparently meaning he is a communist in philosophy, but not a member of the Communist Party.

However it is still uncertain whether his speaking violated the Speaker Ban Law, and if so, who is responsible for the violation.

The double-pronged uncertainty hinges on several factors, which cropped up in a DTH investigation following the incident.

First, Phepls was not invited to speak by any "authorized" student group. Yet only student groups "authorized to invite visiting speakers" are covered under the Board of Trustees' directive of July 8 implementing the controversial law.

Phelps spoke at the unofficial request of several students living in Everett Dormitory.

Second, only one of the law's three prohibitions could possibly apply to Phelps. This is the section barring speakers who have taken the Fifth Amendment "in refusing to answer any question, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities, before any duly constituted legislative committee . . ."

Phelps said during his talk that he felt this section applied to him because of his recent appearance before the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) while it was investigating last summer's trip to Cuba by 59 Americans, including Phelps.

However, a check with Lou Russell, a HUAC staff member in Washington, revealed that Phelps took the Fifth Amendment four times during his testimony, but only in answer to questions concerning his associations with Jacob Rosen and John Salter.

(Both are known members of the Progressive Labor Club, an avowedly Marxist-Leninist group more militant than the U.S. Communist Party. Salter is a former UNC student who went to Cuba with Phelps.)

Thus whether Phelps is covered under the Fifth Amendment section depends on a legal decision as to whether Phelps' refusal to answer HUAC questions about his associations is the same thing as "refusing to answer any question, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities," which the law specifies.

The other two prohibitions of the law apparently could not apply to Phelps because he is not "A known member of the Communist Party" and he is not "known to advocate the overthrow of" the U.S. or state constitution.

The third factor clouding the issue is that the law says no college or university supported by the state "shall permit any person to use the facilities of such college or university for speaking purposes" who falls under the law.

However, the law provides that "This act shall be enforced by the Board of Trustees . . . or by such administrative personnel as may be appointed therefor by the Board of Trustees . . ."

The Trustees' directive says that "This policy shall be enforced by student representatives of student organizations authorized to invite visiting speakers . . ."

It therefore appears that responsibility for the execution of the law is vested solely with the "authorized" person issuing the invitation to the speaker—and no "authorized" person invited Phelps to speak.

However, University officials were aware Phelps was speaking and an administration representative attended the meeting after checking with his superior.

The representative, Matthew Ott, assistant to the Dean of Men, said he was informed of Phelps' scheduled appearance about half an hour before it occurred. He was also informed that Everett Dormitory President Paul Dickson had refused to allow the dormitory social room to be used for the talk.

Ott therefore called Dean of Men William Long to determine what should be done.

Chancellor William B. Aycock said Long queried him about the matter, asking him if he had "any information that would put him (Phelps) on the taboo list."

Aycock said he told Long that he was "distrubed about it, but I couldn't say whether he (Phelps) could speak or not."

Ott said he received word back from Long "that the social room could be used."

It was. Phelps, joined by Salter, discussed their Cuban visit from 11 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.

"What was done was the only responsible thing that could be done under the circumstances," Long said late last night. "If we had had concrete evidence that he was a self-avowed communist, whatever he means by that, that would have put a different slant on the thing.

"But we didn't have that evidence then," Long continued, "although we feel we have it now. So we would have to step in and prevent him from speaking if he tried to speak in the future, knowing what we know now."

Professed Marxist Talks About Cuba

By JOHN GREENBACKER and HUGH STEVENS

Larry Phelps, a former UNC student who calls himself a "Marxist-Leninist," told Everett dorm residents Wednesday night that "Cuba's revolt is the most important historical event since the American Revolution."

Phelps and John Salter, also a former UNC student, spoke in the dorm about their trip to Cuba in defiance of the State Department travel ban.

The discussion was prompted when Phelps, a former Everett resident, came to visit a few of his friends in the dorm during the afternoon, bringing Salter along. They agreed to carry on an informal question and answer period with interested students in the dorm social room about 11:30 p.m.

"Why do you think the Cuban government sponsored the trip?" Phelps was asked.

"They feel they have a story to tell which is not being told here, and they believed that we (the students who made the trip) could tell it," he said. "The U.S. has a Berlin wall of its own around Cuba."

Salter told the students, "about 70 per cent of the Cuban people are behind the government. About 20 to 25 per cent are apathetic, and five to ten per cent are counter-revolutionary."

"The people are willing to defend their country," Phelps said. "A quarter of a million U.S. lives would be lost if we try to invade Cuba."

In reply to a question concerning the Cuban people's position on Russian aid, Phelps said, "the Cuban people want Russian aid. They feel it is the aid of a friendly nation its purpose is not insidious."

Phelps said the Cuban people are aware of the plans and ideology of the Castro government. "People know what they are doing when they revolt," he said. "Castro has always educated the people about his intents."

When asked if the original revolt was intended to place a Communist government in power, Phelps answered, "certainly there was shock when the announcement on intentions was made, but the circumstances in the country forced Castro to become Communist for the benefit of the people. The people believe in Fidel. When the people don't see, Fidel will explain."

Phelps and Salter were asked why the people didn't form a democratic government if they were so interested in it.

Salter replied, "The people have a voice in the government. All workers are members of local party groups called Syndicates. There is only one party. Each year, ten 'best workers' are chosen from all the Syndicates in Cuba, and they are admitted into the ruling body of the party."

Salter admitted that the inner party sets the qualifications and chooses its own membership. He did not comment as to whether this form of government was an oligarchy.

Phelps admitted that the diet of the average Cuban was not as good as before the revolution in many respects. "This is to be expected after such a radical change in the economic system," he said. He said he felt living was better for the people under Castro than ever before.

Anger was aroused during the discussion when Phelps made several derogatory statements about U.S. aid to Vietnam, and confessed that he cheered when he saw films of U.S. helicopters being shot down in Vietnam while he was in Cuba.

During the discussion, Don Carson, an Everett resident, read to Phelps the text of the state Speaker Ban Law. Phelps said the third part of section one (which concerns persons who have invoked the Fifth Amendment concerning subversive activities applied to him. Many of those present expressed the fear of adverse official reaction. At one point, a reportsive activities applied to him.) by Peter Williams, another resident, who did not wish the meeting to be publicized. They were restored only after the reporter said that he had not been assigned to the story by the Daily Tar Heel.

Harvard's Dorms Used For Orgies

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI)—Wild sex parties at Harvard University, the nation's oldest college, were disclosed Thursday by Harvard officials.

College Dean John U. Monro said visits by coeds and other women to Harvard dormitories "has come to be a license to use the college rooms for wild parties and sexual intercourse."

Under college rules, Harvard men may entertain women in their rooms from 4-7 p.m. Monday through Friday and from noon to midnight on Saturday.

Monro's disclosure of the parties by "a few" of the university's 13,700 students were made in the Crimson, Harvard's under-graduate daily newspaper. His remarks were confirmed as authentic by a college spokesman.

Monro said he and Dean of Students Robert Waston "have been badly shaken up recently by some severe violations of our rules and recent standards of behavior and the feeling that the college itself seemeed to be contributing to an atmosphere of 'don't care.' "

"Trouble has arisen because what was once considered a pleasant privilege allowing women in dormitories has come to be a license to use the college for wild parties and sexual intercourse."

Harvard, founded in 1636, shares classrooms with Radcliffe, a women's college.

A series of meetings between students and officials were held recently but failed to resolve a disagreement over changes in house rules.

Trick Or Treat And What's The Moral?

It was nearly midnight when the knock came on the door. Damn, we thought. They ought to keep those Treat-hungry kids out of the dorm—er, Residence Halls.

"Go away," we shouted. "There's no one here."

The knocking subsided and we resumed studying the quiz file we had just borrowed for tomorrow's exam. This sure beats reading the textbook, we thought.

Suddenly the knocking began again, this time accompanied by a strange, eerie sound, almost like music.

Angrily, we got up and headed for the door.

"What the devil do you w—who are —what is this?"

The strange apparition in the doorway resembled a ghost we had once seen about midnight in a haunted house.

"Look," we said. "There's no time for fooling around. Got this wicked midterm tomorrow and—"

"Shut up." The Apparition smiled, in a toothsomely menacing manner. "Shut up and come with me."

Realizing we were up aaginst something most un-campusly, we dropped our quiz file and fell in behind The Apparition, who was floating down the hall toward South Building.

From somewhere within the folds of his misty frock, The Apparition produced a key and let us into Chancellor Aycock's office. We glanced around in the weird glow caused by The Apparition's smile and recognized that everything was in its usual place William Richardson Davie peered out from his fram above the mantel; the bottom left desk drawer was full of material on Honor Council cases up for appeal; the bookshelf was full of tomes with stuffy titles.

"I have brought you here for a special reason," said The Apparition. "I have been instructed by The Great Pumpkin to give you a glimpse of Halloween Past, Near-Present and Future."

What the hell, we thought. Might as well humor the thing.

"Okay, Apparition," we said. "Shoot."

Immediately the gloom lifted and it was daylight. The Chancellor, grey-haired and wrinkled, was sitting behind his desk, hard at work explaining to student body president Mike Lawler Jr. why he felt Lawler should use his influence to get Student Legislature to withdraw its resolution banning all members of the General Assembly from speaking at any state-supported colleges and universities. Lawler seemed to be only half-listening.

The phone rang and the Chancellor excused himself.

"The editor of the Raleigh News and Observer? Certainly, put him on . . . Hello, Jesse? What's that? Of course I've read The Daily Yellow Journal. Comment? Hell no I'm not going to comment. Dammit man, if I commented every time they attacked me I'd never have time for anything else. I'm sorry, Mr. Helms. I just can't. Why don't you try Kitty Carmichael . . . no, of course she's not a Communist. Don't you remember? We investigated her last year. Disgustingly wholesome gal, remember? Okay . . . right . . . so long."

"This," whispered The Apparition to us, "is a vision of Halloween Future. It is a warning of what is to come for you unless you change your ways and stop cramming for quizzes. Bill Aycock crammed for quizzes and look where it got him. He tried to retire in 1964 but they couldn't find anyone else to take his job, so he had to stay on. This could happen to you."

We shuddered with horror. Thrice. And suddenly—poof—it was gloomy again and The Apparition was leading us out of the Chancellor's office, towards Memorial Hall.

Cold, clammy fog was clopping in on horses' hooves as we arrived at the main entrance to Memorial Hall. Suddenly the main door swung open, as if on command, and we followed The Apparition inside.

All was dark and silent save for a low hissing noise.

"Watch," said The Apparition, and suddenly it was early evening and students were booing and hissing at the forlorn figure on the stage, who looked like a rooster with a starched comb.

Above the din of disapproval the speaker was screaming, "You don't don't understand . . . you don't understand! I tried to stand up against Bobby, I really tried to. How was I to know that J. Edgar Hoover was on his side?

"I just couldn't turn down old J. Edgar. Why, that would be like shaking hands with the devil. Sure, I tried to tell him that it wouldn't work, that a 3-eyed Martian just wouldn't be accepted here, that we weren't ready for it yet, that it shouldn't be forced on us. But J. Edgar said it had to be this way . . . ."

"This," said The Apparition, "is a vision of Halloween Near-Present . . . an event about to happen. You see that man on the stage, the one the students are throwing their Student Handbooks at? He's the Governor. He looks like P. Beverly Pond, but he is you unless you change your ways and stop cramming for exams. He crammed for exams while he was teaching Law at Slake Forest, and look where it got him."

The sound of leaves crunching beneath our tread resounded off the walls of Gerrard Hall as we crossed Y-Court and strolled onto the mall, between Murphey and Saunders and up to the front door of Lenoir Hall. The smell of cold food clogged our nostrils as we walked past the Sundries Counter and into the main dining room.

"Be very still," said The Apparition, cracking the ghostly knuckle on his right hand . . .

The room was filled with students, all carrying Student Specials on their trays. None of them, however, was eating. They were straining to hear what the man standing on top of the great coffee urn was saying.

". . . and for that reason, my friends —ouch, this damned thing is hot—for that reason, that very legitimate reason we most regretfully must announce that we are increasing the price of Student Specials to 37 cents. As I say—ouch, oh! my instep!—as I say . . ." Then the crowd made its move. As one, they rose and advanced toward the giant coffee urn, trays at the ready. At a pre-arranged signal, they began throwing jello, salads, liver and all their other ammunition at the man.

"This," said The Apparition, "is the spirit of Halloween Past. It is a fate you have escaped so far, but a fate which could easily befall you unless you mend your ways and stop cramming for exams."

And then it was dark again, and everyone was gone, and The Apparition was leading us back to the dorm—er, Residence Hall.

And all of a sudden we were back in our room.

"Thank you Apparition," we said.

"Oh," it smiled. "After tonight you can call me 'Appy.' All my other friends do."

"But, wait . . . before you go, with dawn coming up like crazy, what is the moral of what we have seen tonight?"

"That," it smiled, "is for you to decide."

Needless to say, we flunked the quiz.

Faculty Council Slams Gag Law

Statement on the North Carolina Law to regulate visiting speakers at State-supported colleges and universities, unanimously adopted on Oct. 22 by the faculty council of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, presented to the University Board of Trustees on Monday.

We believe that those members of the 1963 North Carolina General Assembly who voted for the statute banning certain speakers at State supported institutions did so because they believed it to be in the best interest of the State. And, like them, we are opposed to communism. Nevertheless, we have the strongest objections to this statute.

There are strong reasons for believing that the statute is unconstitutional under both the North Carolina and the Federal Constitutions; but this is not the place for a legal argument. We recognize that the General Assembly has the power, so long as it stays within constitutional limitations, to regulate the affairs of State supported institutions, including this University. And, obviously, there must be some regulations regarding the use of University property. We believe, however, that the Assembly should not undertake the regulation reflected in this statute. A political body is far from an ideal forum in which to regulate such matters of educational policy. The present attempt at such regulation is most disquieting to us and to university teachers everywhere. A legislature which succumbs to this temptation may soon go further and enact statutes intended to strike at other matters which it finds distasteful. The statute is a step toward substitution of politically controlled indoctrination for reasonably objective education. Regulation of speakers on the campus is best left, along with other matters of educational policy, to the trustees, the administration and the faculty.

To the extent that the legislative purpose may have been to prevent advocacy of the overthrow of our government by force, violence or other unlawful means, the statute adds nothing to existing law. Ever since 1941 such advocacy in a State owned building has been a crime in North Carolina. The 1963 statute goes much further. It undertakes to prohibit any person to whom it applies from speaking on any State supported campus on any subject. Under this statute it would not even be possible to invite the Russian Ambassador to come and speak about the nuclear test ban treaty, cultural exchanges, or the present differences between Russia and China.

A doctor, scientist or other expert from a foreign country is banned if he is known to be a member of the Communist Party or to advocate the overthrow of our Constitution—otherwise he may speak, even if he is from behind the Iron Curtain. Yet the diseases of humanity, the behavior of light rays and the properties of hybrid corn pose the same questions to the communist and the non-communist. A university is a place where anyone who may have useful knowledge should be welcomed as a visitor to share that knowledge. By this statute, this University is shut off from some of those who possess it—perhaps even prohibited from using the services of scholars from foreign countries who can go to other universities under exchange programs approved or encouraged by our government.

Any American—scholar, scientist, doctor, lawyer, author, poet, artist, or laborer—is banned if he has invoked the Fifth Amendment in refusing to answer "any questions, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities, before any duly constituted legislative committee, any judicial tribunal, or any executive or administrative board of the United States or any state." He is banned though there is no proof—and no other basis for assuming—that he is a communist or that he has ever advocated the overthrow of our Constitution. He is banned for the sole reason that he has exercised a right guaranteed to every citizen by the Constitution of the United States—a right which does honor to the Anglo-American concept of justice and which, as much as other single factor, justifies our claim that our system of justice is superior to that of the communist countries.

We do not believe that speakers visiting our campuses have created serious danger to the State or its youth. The wise and great men who wrote into our Constitution a guarantee of free speech were fully aware that the privilege can be abused. Fortunately, they were also aware that the danger to a free society from abuse of free speech is not nearly so great as the danger from attempting to curtail or suppress free speech. We devoutly believe, with them, that error is far more likely to be enshrined by legislative fiat than by untrammeled debate in a public forum.

The new statute reflects a fear regarding the strength of our democratic institutions which we do not share. Freedom of discussion on the campus has made few if any converts to communism. Over all the years, we doubt that even one of the very small number of student communists was induced to become a Party member by speeches on the campus. More probably, student communism has resulted from a tragically irrational reaction to inequities and injustices in our society. The rare student communist either was already such before he arrived, or would probably have become a communist had he never come to the campus. Indeed, free discussion on the campus, the general tenor of which is always overwhelmingly anti-communist, actually points out to students more constructive methods of giving meaning to their genuine idealism, which the State and nation badly need to encourage and preserve. We fear that the new statute is a step toward destruction of freedom in the name of its preservation. We believe that a university campus is a place where any idea should be open to free discussion—whether it be promise of a communist utopia, a Birchite charge of treason in high places, or the thesis of a governor that salvation lies only in defiance of the federal courts. Youthful faith in American institutions can be engendered and preserved far more effectively by meeting our challengers openly than by attempting to put legislative stoppers in youthful ears.

Political tampering with the educational process can, over a relatively brief period, drastically lower the quality of the higher education affected. Legislative censorship, once begun, carries an invidious threat of future proscriptions, and inevitably stirs fears in the minds of both faculty and students that expression of unpopular sentiments may produce reprisals against them. Further, to secure and retain faculty members of high quality we must compete in a nation-wide market. It is an inescapable fact that any legislative curtailment of free expression on a campus is a black mark against the institution in the eyes of the overwhelming majority of the best university teachers in America—teachers who are, nevertheless, anti-communist by strong intellectual conviction. We recognize and deeply appreciate the great efforts made by the 1963 General Assembly to provide adequate support for the University and for higher education in general; but, despite the improvement effected, we still have grave difficulties in competing for faculty members. This additional handicap could be disastrous.

There are many learned societies of national and international character. A number of these have met in Chapel Hill, in the ordinary course of events many more would desire to do so, and some at this moment have Chapel Hill under consideration. The programs of these meetings are not arranged and their speakers are not selected by the host school. No learned society of standing would seriously consider allowing the host institution to interrogate and possibly blackball its duly selected speakers. They will not meet in Chapel Hill if the University lays down any such condition. And many of the finest teachers will not join or long remain members of a faculty at an institution which these learned societies will not consider as a place to meet. This tends further to lower the prestige of an institution known to be under this kind of legislative restriction.

At this heavy cost to the institutions and to the general quality of higher education in this State, what positive purpose can be accomplished by the statute? The student who is not permitted to hear a speech on his campus may still read quotations from the speaker in the newspaper, may see and hear him on a national news telecast, and may read any books or articles he has written. The student may take advantage of an opportunity to visit a private institution and hear the speaker. A student may also, of course, hear the speaker at any off campus spot in the same community where the school is located. The prohibition itself will incite curiosity and give the person banned a larger student audience than he would otherwise have had.

If an author is dangerous as a speaker, he is more dangerous as an author, for his printed words are permanently available. Is there not danger that the General Assembly, once embarked on this course, will ban books from libraries and otherwise undertake to police the ideas to which a student may be exposed? Indeed, a ban whih operates only against speakers on the campus is so clearly inadequate as a device for insulating the student mind (assumed by the banners to be naively susceptible) that, rationally, it must be either abandoned or extended.

The above discussion is necessarily predicated on some implicit assumptions as to what the General Assembly intended the 1963 statute to mean. However, in fact many questions inhere in its interpretation. What significance is to be attributed to the fact that, whereas the title of the statute refers to "visiting speakers," the text of the statute refers more broadly to "any person"? The statute prohibits use of "facilities" for speaking purposes. This University owns not only auditoriums, but also classrooms, dormitories, a campus, a hotel, a telephone system, and a television station (carrying, among other things, national news programs). Are all of these embraced? The statute bans those known to advocate "overthrow of the Constitution." Is this equivalent to "overthrow of the government"? Is advocacy of radical change by constitutional amendment included? (There is no mention in the statute of "force, violence or other unlawful means.") Examples could easily be multiplied. This vagueness is one reason for questioning the constitutionality of the statute; but, more important for present purposes, such vagueness makes enforcement of the statute a more difficult business, fraught with possible legal pitfalls.

We deeply regret the manner in which this statute was rushed through both Houses of the General Assembly in its dying hours —without prior notice, without any opportunity for a hearing, without mature consideration, without even a normal opportunity for debate. Significantly, the bill as introduced was derived from a bill introduced in the Ohio Legislature; but there an opportunity was given for a hearing and the statute finally enacted did not involve legislative regulation of campus speakers.

In summary, by this statute the General Assembly, while attempting to protect our liberties, has unwisely interfered with educational policies, curtailed legitimate freedom on our campuses, and created serious barriers to the maintenance of higher educational institutions of a quality which, in the light of the Assembly's more constructive efforts to improve higher education, the State has a right to expect.

it all came to me one night while i was smoking a Marlboro and listenin' to some music.
here is what it was . . . i thought about flowers.
an orchid . . . like her. (a subtle sophistication) a rose . . . full of beauty and charm.
a violet . . . little in size, but radiant.
i could go on and on like this but i won't you see, what god did one day was he took these (what i mean is he borrowed) good qualities from all his flowers and put them together into one of the sweetest
girls i've ever met . . . . . you should meet her.
where??? is probably what you are asking.
(try the Chio house one day, when you have the time)
let me tell you what god told me last night . . .
he said, "you are lucky . . . you know what this girl is really like." he's right.
i love her, A "Lamb"—with heart of "gold".
like i said, this all came to me one night while

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Distortion?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I know not whether James F. Perry is a truly damned Yankee or a damned converted Southerner. Whichever the case, I do know his letter to the editor reflected an irrational, hot-headed, and poorly informed point of view, one which is presently causing much needless racial strife here in Dixie.

If he is a damned Yankee, which I strongly suspect, he should first turn to his own damned Northern problems before spearheading isolated cases in the South and snowballing them into inconceivably gigantic proportions. I have witnessed Negro slum conditions in New York. I have observed the "ghettoed" Northern Negro standing in mile-long relief lines. I've read of daily gang fights and murders in Central Park, but are THEY EVER related by the news to racial strife? No, NEVER! In George Wallace's own words, the South is a victim of distorted news, and I'm afraid Mr. Perry has fallen prey to it.

I have futilely tried to grasp why Mr. Perry would pin the blame on Gov. George Wallace for the sparsely sprinkled hostile acts deterring integration. Gov. George Wallace loves and cares for the Negro race. To me, Wallace represents the directly needed cool, calm, reasoning approach to racial problems. The hypocritical Northern leaders who have gained office through paying homage to the precious Negro vote, have many times as many racial problems on their hands than do the many, believing, true-to-their-word Southern leaders.

Bad Faith

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The action by the faculty in removing the students from the Student Faculty Review Board was ridiculous and reflected bad faith on the part of the faculty involved. The reason given for this action was that the board was originally only an experiment. Well, if it was an experiment, then why was it allowed by the faculty to continue for so long as if it had become a permanent feature, and why didn't the faculty say something against incorporating the board into the student constitution?

It seems that the spokesman for the faculty completely evaded these questions in the comments he did and did not make. It would appear that the faculty would have the student judiciary reduced to a mere grand jury which decides if there is sufficient cause for the consideration of an infraction.

As a matter of note, the Constitution of the United States assures that courts shall follow due process in convicting a defendent. It appears that due process involves a few other concepts such as judgement by one's peers. Apparently the faculty has been ignorant or oblivious of this guaranteed right.

In closing, I assure you that if I were ever brought before any such court (Heavens Forbid!) as the the administration has proposed, and convicted unjustly, I would seek recourses in the state or federal court systems quicker than you could say Anne Carter

Closed Minds

Editors, The Tar Heel,

It was all very saddening. From Mr. Phipps' "God bless Paul Green," to his frequent invocation of J. Edgar Hoover; from a questioner's attempt to have the Speaker evaluate the relative propaganda value of the spoken and written word; from Mr. Phipps' irrelevant though engaging musings about Gerrard Hall's place in his heart to his stirring though illogical defense of government by poll-taking; from the audience's emotional response to Ku Klux Klan to their restiveness throughout the long, long evening.

There was no communication between the audience and the speaker. He had come, while others had refused. He did agree to answer questions from a none-too sympathetic audience. But there was no dialogue, no sharing of views, no attempt made at resolving issues. Mr. Phipps showed his political acumen—one could no more get him to answer a question that he preferred not to answer than nail jello to a tree. In closing, Mr. Phipps fecetiousiy commented that he had not come "to persuade" the audience of anything. Mr. Phipps needn't have worried for the audience had not come to hear the merits or shortcomings of the Speaker Ban Bill—they came to see the show, to hear the questioners "get" the speaker or to hear their own, long ago petrified opinions voiced from the podium.

The North Carolina Legislature, in passing Bill 1395, apparently is very concerned with the susceptibility of the young, impressionable students that attend school-sponsored political forums throughout the state. Perhaps they should give some thought to a far more serious question—the already closed minds that are no longer open to any kind of political dialogue.

Freshmen That Beat Virginia Are Tar Babies' Host Today

By BILL LEE

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — The Carolina freshmen wrap up an exciting season here today against Maryland with the kick-off set for two o'clock.

A week ago the Tar Babies beat Duke despite a number of near costly mistakes. However, they were able to capitalize on the breaks sent their way.

Coach George Barclay commented, "We made it close by giving them two easy touchdowns — that pass interception and the blocked punt. But when we had to get up and go, we were able to do it."

The Tar Babies salvaged the game on Leon Fonvielle's block of a game-ending field goal attempt.

They won't be able to make those mistakes against Maryland. The Baby Terps, last Friday, beat a lauded Virginia squad, the only team to which Carolina has bowed.

Barclay said, "We're expecting a real tough game. Maryland's got a big team and they like to run. They're most effective on their option run or pass off of the "I"" formation. This week we've been practicing our defense against the "I".

In Maryland's 21-14 victory over Virginia, several Terps showed their rowess. Tom Lalli, a swingback, made a spectacular 89-yard kickoff return.

Maryland rolled up 328 yards total offense and 316 of these were on the ground. Some 205 yards were picked up by their tailbacks.

Terry Pezula rushed for 105 yards in 14 carries. Bo Hickey had 54 yards in nine tries and Whitney Marchiniak gained four in 12 carries.

Quarterback Phil Petry and end Dwight Guyton also figured in the scoring.

Carolina Starters

Starting for Carolina will be Bobby Knott and Bo Wood at ends, Pat Jessup and Buzz Hodges at tackles, guards Dave Erimias and Joe Fratangelo, and John Cornelius at center.

At quarterback will be Danny Talbott. Leon Fonvielle and John Green will be at the halfback positions and Spencer Barrow at fullback.

In the Duke contest, Barrow led the ground game with 35 yards in 10 carries. Talbott leads the rushing over the season with 146 yards in 21 attempts.

Jeff Beaver and Talbott have combined for 699 yards through the air, Beaver having contributed 423 of them. The two quarterbacks have thrown 126 times, 65 successfull.

Knott: 14 Passes

The most popular receiver has been end Bobby Knott, who has pulled in 14 aerials for 219 yards and three touchdowns.Bud Phillips has grabbed a dozen for 99 yards.

Holding the defensive hopes for today's contest are guards Erimias and Fratangelo, both of whom played well against Duke.

Tackles Ray Meador and Lee Davis, end Bob Powell and center Chuck Alexander will not make the trip due to injuries and ailments.

Phillips and Fratangelo will be co-captains for the game.

Must Rush Larry

By JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

A lot of people think that if we can stop Georgia's great passing attack tomorrow, we will have the game sewed up. I can't say I agree with this.

Naturally our big objective is to put an effective rush on Larry Rakestraw. He's a tremendous passer—so good it keeps me awake at night just thinking about the way he throws that football. If we can hold down his passing game, we will be half-way there. But Georgia does have a running attack and we can't afford to be lulled into a sense of security every time Rakestraw doesn't drop back to throw.

Georgia moved the ball well on the ground against both Alabama and Kentucky. Against Kentucky Rakestraw did not throw a pass until the second quarter. They run the belly series real well with two good fullbacks (Leon Armbrester and Seward Hurst) carrying the ball. Rakestraw himself is the team's leading rusher. He's tough on the bootleg. When he drops straight back you've still got to watch out for the draw play or the screen pass.

When they pass, look for three receivers downfield. A big end named Mickey Babb is their ace receiver. Other prime targets are Barry Wilson and Pat Hodgson, who share the other end assignment, and their two halfbacks, Billy Knowles and Fred Barber.

We don't plan any special shift in our secondary to take care of Babb (6-4, 227), though it's going to take some doing on the part of our short fellows (Gary Black and Ronnie Jackson) when he comes into their territory. In order to always have a big man on Babb, we'd have to re-set our whole defensive backfield. It wouldn't be worth it.

I think we are in pretty good shape for this game. We lost fullback Jimmy Eason the other day in practice when he broke his hand, but overall we're okay. Eason will be out for the season. Frank Bowman will take his place and Barry Westfall moves up to the third unit.

John Atherton is our other injured man. He may get in for a little action, but I have my doubts.

Soccer Team Puts Zip On Belmont, 6-0

By RON LOGAN

North Carolina's soccer team vanquished Belmont Abbey 6-0 Thursday afternoon as wing Jim Talbot rammed three goals into the nets.

The Heels ran their record to 4-2-1 at the expense of an out-manned, out-conditioned, out-played Belmont crew which suffered its seventh loss in as many games.

Outstanding play by Belmont Abbey goalie Paul Poshman saved the game from turning into a complete rout. Poshman was credited with 26 saves in the contest, and several were on the spectacular side.

Contributing scores to the Carolina offensive were Talbot (who tallied at 13:00 of the first period, :45 left in the same quarter, and 17:00 remaining in the second quarter), and Marty Kruming (who scored at 7:00 of the second), Jim Muchmore with 14:45 left in the fourth), and Steve Painter at the 6:20 mark in the final period.

"I was pleased with our offensive performance, and our defense kept the ball on Belmont Abbey's side of the field a good part of the time. I thought that Jim Talbot and Frank Lankford played outoutstanding games also," commented UNC coach Marvin Allen.

UNC Goes Unbeaten; Duke Falls By 21-36

By MAT FRIEDMAN

The UNC cross-country team followed the script it has been using all season and completed its first unbeaten season in six years with a 21-36 victory over Duke yesterday.

The Harriers still have the State and ACC championships on Nov. 5 and 11 respectively remaining on the schedule.

Once again, it was the outstanding twosome of Art Maillet and James Meade carrying the Carolina colors as they breezed home in a tie for first place. The time, 21:05, broke the course record set here against South Carolina last week in the first race over the new four-mile course.

Bob White and John Weisinger took third and fourth for Duke. The latter is the brother of miler Cary Weisinger, a former Duke star.

Jerry Smith, Mike Folk and Charles Lefler finished fifth, sixth and seventh for UNC. Captain Bob Bennett took tenth. Randy Repass and Vic Gray were eighth and ninth for the Duke Harriers.

The crisp, cool day was a most satisfying one for Joe Hilton who recently succeeded the late Dale Ranson as head track coach here. The Harriers, who bowed to Duke by a single point in their only defeat last season, got revenge easily and impressively.

Maillet Leads Early

Maillet set the early pace with a very fast 62 seconds before Folk, Meade and Weisinger moved ahead and shared the lead for the next two miles.

Maillet then moved back up with Folk dropping back. the UNC "M-M" boys broke away from Weisinger at the 3¼ mile mark and rode home shoulder to shoulder, hardly out of breath.

Less than a half-hour later, the UNC freshmen almost duplicated the varsity feat with a 20-39 victory over the Duke frosh. Trip MacPherson and Eddie Daw provided an almost identical photo-finish, tying for first over the shorter three-mile course.

Coach Hilton said he was "real happy" about the unbeaten season and was very optimistic about the Harriers' chances in the ACC Championships.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Women sometimes ask how much make-up should one use This is a difficult question to answer as amount can be determined only by the dictates of an individual's coloring and tastes. In general, it is safe to say that any amount of make-up that produces a natural look is the proper if not perfect amount.

Too little use of make-up is every bit as great a disservice to a woman as is too much. Make-up for work about the home or garden is less demanding, of course, than requirements for evening and social life which must meet more exacting standards of effect.

Meeting proper standards as concerns your hair is no problem at all when you cultivate the happy habit of making periodic visits to Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon. # Footballs To Fill The Air In Kenan

Dogs Battle Heels Today

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina, winner of five straight Atlantic Coast Conference games, is out to prove its record is no fluke as it hosts air-minded Georgia this afternoon in Kenan Stadium.

The contest, scheduled for a 2 kick-off, pits the Tar Heels' best-in-the-nation pass defense against the deadly arm of Larry Rakestraw. The Bulldog quarterback currently ranks third among the nation's leading passers.

A crowd of 35,000 is expected to be on hand for the "Band Day" struggle which is the first of three straight home dates for the Heels. Clemson visits Chapel Hill next Saturday and George Petra and the Miami Hurricanes blow into town on November 16.

Coach Jim Hickey's Carolina team has come on fast in the last three weeks. After stumbling through their first games with a 2-1 mark, the Tar Heels have looked good in downing Maryland, N.C. State and South Carolina to move their record to 5-1.

Georgia has followed a similar pattern of success. After getting crushed by Aabama in their opener, the Bulldogs have gone undefeated in their last five contests. Coach Johnny Griffith's 'Dogs have downed Vanderbilt, South Carolina, Miami and Kentucky while tying Clemson.

"We are indeed pleased with our pass defense," says Hickey, "but of course we haven't faced anyone like Rakestraw yet. This will be our big task—to contain Rakestraw."

Pass defense is a team effort, though most of the credit (and most of the blame) will fall on the secondary. However, the key to a sound defense against the pass is a strong, no let-up rush on the passer. This responsibility is mainly in the hands of the two defensive ends and a "red-dogging" linebacker.

Starting at the terminals for the Tar Heels today will be Bob Lacey and John Hammett. The former, more noted for his pass-grabbing antics, is nevertheless a fine defensive end. He will be relieved at times by Frank Gallagher, a defensive specialist, and the key figure in Carolina's assault on N.C. State's Jim Rossi two weeks ago.

Hammett returned to the UNC lineup last week after being hobbled by a bad ankle since the Michigan State game. He is regarded as the team's best defensive end.

The fourth person who figures to play a big role in the Heels' attempt to bottle up Rakestraw is linebacker Chris Hanburger. The rugged junior is a sure-tackler and always seems to end up where the ball is. When UNC decides to shoot a linebacker straight through to the quarterback, Hanburger is the man to do it.

Stressing the importance of the rush is not meant to underrate the importance of the secondary. Safeties Junior Edge and Ronnie Jackson and corner backs Dave Braine and Eddie Kesler have covered receivers this fall like dogs cover this campus, and the results have been spectacular. Occasionally the quartet will "give" the opposition the short pass in order to protect against the long one, but many times the ball has been batted down and 11 times it has been intercepted.

The second team defensive backfield is as sound as the first. Gary Black and Tommy Ward man the safeties, while Ron Tuthill relieves Kesler at one of the corner backs. Braine, a defensive player all the way, plays with the second unit as well as the first.

Football Horrorscope

Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House, portrayed (or maybe betrayed) earlier in the week by the Daily Tar Heel as the Great Pumpkin in disguise, was busy setting up Halloween goodies when he picked some football winners the other day.

HOUSE

Some of the games in the selection were treats, some were tricks as the great Harmonicat obliged the Horrorscope (entering its seventh and most justifiable week—the week of All Saints).

Hesitant at first that they might disturb the Chance at dinner, the Horrorscopers moved about the neighborhood in costumes of pigskin and white lace. They succeeded in scaring off all little ghosts and goblins, but a lady in red moving stealthily out of the shadows brought terror to their hearts.

Chancelor House's house, however, was warm and friendly and, after feigning ignorance of all games (except that UNC would smash Georgia), he got down to business and proceeded to choose (not guess) the victors.

This man knows!, we thought as in amazement we watched him go through the games skillfully and with great care.

He said Maryland was going to surprise the experts this week; Duke wouldn't stay down long; it was about time Auburn got beat; and gave a patriotic vote to Missouri because of his many friends there.

The Chancellor also said he wished "Poor Old Wake" could come up, but feared this was not the week. Maybe not the decade either, Chance.

The Horrorscope had a commendable performance last week with everybody hitting well except guest star Otelia Conner and panel leader Curry Kirkpatrick.

The group record was 78-42 for a .650 mark, and it boasted of two 15-5 logs turned in by Ron Logan and Al Kaplan. Mat Friedman was 14-6, John Montague 13-7 and Kirkpatrick, a weak 12-8. Otelia saved some face (of what she has left to save) on a 9-11 chart, by picking Ohio State's upset of Wisconsin. She was the only one to do so.

The year's mark now stands at 431 right, 227 wrong with 42 ties for a percentage of .655. Kirkpatrick is three games ahead of the pack on 78-30-7 (.722) with Logan at 75-33-7 (.694) and Kaplan at 74-34-7 (.685).

Expulsion Request, Parker Top Slate

By HUGH STEVENS

The Men's and Womens' Councils asked Student Legislature Thursday night to approve the penalty of expulsion.

Speaker Bob Spearman said in introducing the Council's penalties to the body, "this represents a departure from the wishes of last year's council, which indicated it did not desire this penalty."

The penalties of the Council must be approved by the legislature periodically. There were no other major changes in the list of penalties, which was turned over to the Judicial Committee for consideration.

Spearman said that Whitney Durand, Men's Council chairman, had made the requst on behalf of the Council "in order to provide a full range of penalties for every type of offense."

Durand said in his request that the Council realized that the expulsion penalty was not completely in keeping with the policy of correctional as well as punitive sentences. The Council felt, however, that the penalty of suspension with recommendation that the student not be readmitted was not useful nor fair in many cases. This is currently the most severe penalty that the Council may administer.

The body considered a number of Presidential appointments to Student Government committees, approving all but one without debate. Objection arose, however, to the appointment of Kellis Parker, a Negro, as a co-chairman of the Toronto Exchange Commission with Jaene Yeager.

Himes Speaks

Sam Himes, who spoke first, said, "I have talked with a number of people, and thought about this matter a great deal. After weighing the matter and considering the consequences. I feel that we must not approve this appointment."

Himes listed several reasons for his opposition to the appointment, saying first that he felt Parker's appointment would "place a great burden on Miss Yeager. He declined to state his reason for the statement, saying "we are all aware of the underlying facts in this matter."

Himes continued, "the chairman of this committee must work with people here in Chapel Hill and in Toronto. These people are not necessarily students—some are merchants and other persons outside the University. Some people might take the wrong attitude and refuse to work with Mr. Parker, which would injure the work of the Commission."

"I cannot see why someone who went to Toronto last year is not able to take charge of this committee," Himes continued.

He commented, "I san see Mr. Parker's attributes. He has done a lot for Student Government. But I think his appointment would be unfair to Miss Yeager. I don't condone the things that might happen if we approve this appointment, but they might happen nevertheless."

On a question from the floor, Himes reluctantly admitted that the "underlying fact" to which he had referred earlier was that Parker is a Negro.

Himes said in answer to questions that he had not talked with either Parker or Miss Yeager on the matter.

He then said that Parker "has not shown too much willingness to work with Miss Yeager so far." He said Parker had entered an article in the Daily Tar Heel about the Commission against the wishes of his co-chairman. He said he received his information on the matter from a "reliable source."

He said he saw no reason why the people in Toronto should object to Parker's appointment.

Baddour Argues

Phil Baddour, SP floor leader, said he had consulted with Mike Lawler and asked him his rationale behind the appointment. "After talking with him," Baddour said, "I feel that Kellis is qualified to handle this job. And this is the only question before us."

Baddour said he felt that someone on the Exchange last year should be appointed, but that no one was available. He said Parker had the time for the job, the necessary experience in dealing with foreign students, and the organizational ability required.

"As chairman of the International Students Board, Kellis has shown himself to be very competent," he said. "He is a very articulate person, and I know that he handles himself well in such matters."

Baddour admitted that there might be times when situations could arise that only Miss Yeager could handle. "However," he said, "I know that Lawler consulted with Miss Yeager before making the appointment, and she agreed to work with Kellis."

"I do not think," he concluded, "that the problem of contacts with some people will place an undue burden on Miss Yeager."

Munny Yates, speaking in opposition, said he felt that the appointment would have been a good one if it had been any other committee.

"We should use judgment in this matter," he said, "and I feel that good judgment compels us to refuse this appointment."

Yates also said that the purpose of the Exchange was "primarily social" and he felt Parker

Comments

Reached yesterday for comment on Sam Hime's statements to the legislature, Jaene Yeager and Kellis Parker said emphatically that no problems exist in running the Toronto Exchange, and "none are expected."

"Kellis has done more work than any co-chairman I have ever seen," Miss Yaeger said.

"I've worked with co-chairmen in similar posttions before," Parker said, "and there were no problems. As hard working as Jaene is, I surely don't expect any in the future."

The co-chairmen agreed that the Exchange is already moving forward, and in fact, "it's all up to the Canadians now."

Watch Out! Election Time

The fllowing violations of the election laws are to be reported to the Attorney General's office or to the Elections Board:

1. It is a violatin of the Campus Code to tear down or deface political posters.

2. Expenditure of funds on behalf of any candidate or party is an Election Law offense.

3. On Election Day, no campaigning or political posters are permitted within a 150-foot radius of polling places.

4. It is an Election Law violation for any candidate to be a poll tender in the district of which he is a resident.

University property must not be defaced.

THE BIG PAYOFF

The Chael Hill Board of Aldermen Tuesday night authorized an appropriation of $100 apiece to the 21 men on the Police Department force last summer.

The appropriation covers overtime benefits for members of the force who handled various racial demonstrations here last spring and summer.

Police Chief William D. Blak reported that the department had put in more than 1500 hours of overtime duty handling the demonstrations.

Meeting Scheduled For Dec. 6

By JOEL BULKLEY

The possibility was posed yesterday that the recent decision of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board may be reconsidered.

It came in the form of an announcement that the Faculty Council will meet with student leaders and faculty members concerned with the matter.

However, George Harper, chairman of the Faculty Council, declined to specify the exact purpose of the meeting.

Earlier, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey announced that he and Chancellor William B. Aycock had requested the Faculty Council's Agenda Committee to include the matter on the schedule for the December 6 meeting because it was of "sufficient concern."

Cathey said he expected Student Body President Mike Lawler to present the student views, but indicated any interested students could appear before the meeting by contacting either Lawler or Harper.

Harper said the Faculty Council was "concerned over the recent decision," but indicated he didn't know what results could be expected.

Student leaders, who have expressed great concern over the dropping of the three student members of the Review Board, expressed appreciation for the opportunity to present their views to the Faculty Council.

Student Body Vice-President Bob Spearman said this direct confrontation and communication with the faculty is the only way we can discuss our differences.

The Review Board, created as an experiment by the faculty committee in 1956, handles all cases that are appealed from the Men's and Women's Councils.

It was composed of three or more faculty members, along with the President of the Student Body and the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Councils.

Top Cadets Chosen By Air Force

Ten UNC AFROTC Cadets were named Distinguished Military Cadets this week by Lt. Col. Gordon D. Kage, Professor of Air Science.

Selected were Walter M. Crumpler, Salemburg; Walter L. Doughton Jr., Washington, D. C.; Clifton P. Dunnegan Jr., Winston-Salem; George D. Lynn Jr., Mountain Home AFB, Idaho; Braxton R. Mathews, Kipling; Joseph L. Hodges III, South Boston, Va.; David W. Howe, Greensboro; David M. Williams Jr., Long Meadow, Mass.; William R. Phillips, Roseboro, and Robert D. Skees, Greensboro.

These Distinguished Military Cadets were selected for their academic excellence and their perseverance of high leadership qualities and action within the AFROTC Cadet Cors. This award is one of the highest that can be given within the AFROTC program.

DRAMA OPENINGS

Chairman of the GM Drama Committee, Carolyn Logue, has announced that openings are available for performers in a series of poetry readings and one-act plays.

"No past experience is necessary. This is a series designed to attract interested persons who might not feel that they are professional, but who still want to perform," she said.

A performance is planned before the Christmas holidays. Interested persons can call Miss Logue at 968-9023.

Spechar Resigns SL Post In Protest

Hugo Spechar, SP legislator, offered his resignation to the Student Legislature Thursday night in protest to the recent actions of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline in dropping students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

Spechar also introduced a resolution to the body intended to abolish the student judiciary system. Article II of the resolution states "Student Government hereby grants the Committee on Student Discipline its obvious desire for strong-armed techniques in the area of student conduct."

In its opening statement, the bill says that the committee's action "indicates administrative disdain for student cooperation in matters of student conduct."

Spechar presented his resignation in the form of an open letter to the University community. It is reprinted in its entirety below:

I understand you as unity: a community composed of faculty, students and administration, functioning differently yet lying on the same field so dependent on each other that if separated you could not be thought of, much less exist. When, as an individual, I joined in a common venture of mutual learning and teaching, I thought we entered a contract equally upheld by each other. I accepted your "full and final authority" over me, and you promised to open yourself to a partner's free quest: you offered to teach at all levels, one of them self-government, by allowing my ideas to develop while you criticized them.

Now, the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline has broken the commitment. When the faculty refutes the privileges of my constituency and of myself as their Student Legislature representative, our partnership of self-government is dissolved. You compel my resignation from this government we instituted together, for in these terms of denial I cannot represent my fellow students. We must part in this sense, only finding fracture in the contractual coexistence we once established. With our principles gone, my integrity suffers and yours is endangered.

The faculty's decision is not objectionable according to the written law of the university; it just does not fulfill our spirit of mutual self-respect. The process by which Student Government has been alienated in the arbitrary abolishment of part of its constitution is a process of death, of Student Government becoming useless wood, cut for near-sighted expediency. To this pile of waste, to the heap of superfluous activities that here and there the university still maintains as a recollection of past weaknesses and frustrations, my constituents refuse to be added.

So long as the faculty and administration do not consult students and mistrust their good judgment, by check-mating before calling check-mate, the benefits the University accrues from an educational self-government vanish. With this loss, the faculty negates a teaching opportunity, and the student finds a deficit in his learning.

As Student Government becomes irrelevant, as the Student Legislature's working material—the Student Constitution—is unilaterally and arbitrarily nullified, as student representatives find themselves placed at the margins of the University, no student representative can justify his political actions in the life of the University. So I resign my legislative post.

I tell my constituents how impossible it is to represent them when their will is meaningless to the University Community. To you I can only say that when a cleavage of principle occurs, when dissolution follows a breach of contract, to attempt further partnership is a fool's quest.

A legislator cannot come to a judgment on what "can be done" without some assurance that it will be done. Neither can he propose "what should be done" when he has been denied any possibility of being right. In this case the legislative process becomes superfluous and nonsensical. And to pursue blindly the matter is to prostitute a legislator's role. This I refuse to do.

Disagreement between faculty-administration and students does not represent struggle and reaction but rather different opinions critically facing each other on common principles.

Should this trend toward fragmentation of the University Community tend to accumulate similar past events and to project them into heavier blows to your identity, you may easily find yourselves floating like three isolated balloons: in the air, without reason, not free but attached to the ground by loose strings. Your fragmented personality may blow away. Your three faculty-students-administration elements may well vacillate over the physical campus, separately and without purpose. If this were to happen, look back and reflect, and if still you do not take decisive action, then just wait, patiently, without protest, for an endless wavering from any idiot's breath.

Diem Ousted

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI)—Vietnamese marine, army and air force units rebelled today to overthrow the regime of President Ngo Dinh Diem.

The United States promptly ordered forces in the Pacific to start moving toward Viet Nam to protect American lives if necessary.

Diem was arrested and jailed and his brother, Ngo Dinh Nhu, powerful head of the secret police, was assassinated by rebel forces, diplomatic sources said in Tokyo.

The rebels struck at midday. By nightfall they were reported in control of most of the country following fierce fighting.

The American forces ordered to Viet Nam are primiarily part of the 7th Fleet, and were expected also to include some air and ground units. The United States already has an estimated 15,000 troops in Viet Nam.

President Kennedy and his highest aides maintained a careful watch on reports of the revolt, which the State Department said was led by 14 Vietnamese generals backed by anti-Communist, pro-Western civilians.

The United States asserted categorically that it had nothing to do with the revolt in South Viet Nam.

But in Beverly Hills, California, Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu said she "definitely" believes Americans were involved in the coup against the Diem government in South Viet Nam, asserting "no coup can develop without American incitement and backing."

Everett Affair's Unanswerable Questions

It appears quite certain that Wednesday night's visit to the campus by Larry Phelps and John Salter was not, technically, a violation of the Gag Law. There is little doubt, however, that it was a violation of the spirit of the Gag Law, and it will undoubtedly be judged as such by those proponents of the law who take special delight in damning the University.

This is extremely unfortunate because it could conceivably result in undoing much of the effectiveness of the University administration, the Faculty Council and the Board of Trustees in attempting to combat the law. But trying to pin blame for the incident upon anyone in particular is an exercise in futility.

Was Peter Williams, Everett's Intramurals Manager and an IDC Representative, wrong in persisting to arrange the bull session even though he had good reason to believe it might not be a wise thing to do, in view of the general uncertainty over the Gag Law and the specific misgivings of dormitory and other student officials?

Were Chancellor Aycock and Dean of Men William Long wrong in effectively, although apparently unwittingly, overruling dormitory president Paul Dickson's decision not to allow Everett's social room to be used for the informal gathering?

Since it was unclear who had authority in this situation and there was doubt as to Phelps' status under the law, did the Chancellor err in failing to assume authority and postpone the session until a questionnaire could be issued to Phelps?

In attempting to answer these questions one must bear in mind that University officials received no word that the meeting was coming off until nearly 11 p.m. at night, and that there was little hard information to go on. Uncertainty was the only distinguishable element in the entire affair.

Thus the questions posed above are essentially unanswerable. Besides, there is little to be gained from attempting to assign blame. The significant point is that the affair dramatically demonstrates once again the vague and indefinite character of the law and its abiding perniciousness.

The enduring tragedy of the Everett affair, and those that undoubtedly will follow, is that so much valuable time and effort must be spent in attempting to follow the vague dictates of this shameful law, which clearly does far more harm than good. If there were a case of good intentions gone astray, this is it.

Still and all, the law is there and no good can come from failing to attempt to abide by its restrictions. And as specific enforcement of the law is vested in us, as individual students and faculty members, and not in the Chancellor or any other University official, we must proceed with great caution wherever the law may apply if we are not to hamstring our own efforts to get the law repealed.

All I Did Was Dial This Number, See...

The other day, as we were frantically attempting to get in touch with President Friday to tell him of invaders at the gates, we got cut in on another telephone conversation by mistake. We aren't quite sure exactly what happened, but after getting a busy signal the first five or six times we tried to call, we suddenly found ourselves listening to two unfamiliar voices discussing something we could make little sense of.

Naturally curious, we stayed on the line in an effort to understand the conversation, but we were never completely successful. We took a few notes to study at length, but still haven't come up with any solid theory.

However we do have some hunch what it could be about, and thought we might just print our notes as we have them and see if they are helpful to anyone.

"First of all, don't worry about any quick kicks. They don't have anyone who can do it."

"Watch Rakestraw's feet. He tips off what he is going to do by the way he holds his feet. If one foot is behind the other it means he will drop back to pass. If his feet are together, it means he is setting himself to spin and hand off."

"Any other tip-offs on Rakestraw?"

"No, just the feet. But watch defensive back Brigham Woodward. He commits himself fast on pass defense. A good receiver can slip behind him easily, but then he was injured this week and may not play."

At this point our notes got sketchy due to some electronic noises combined with the slow, soft drawl of the parties on the line. We jotted down what we could, but the names and facts aren't too clear.

Somebody called Ricemiller or Rucemeuller or Reesmiler or something is supposed to be dangerous up front. We weren't able to catch in front of what. Also somebody called Baer or Babs or Bamb is supposed to be even more dangerous up front. The electronic tone grew loud and we again missed what all this danger is in front of.

We caught one more complete sentence before the voices faded out for good. "Watch out for a big play called 'eighty eight pop', it is the key one. Alabama killed them on it, but they defensed it perfectly."

Like we said in the beginning, we have a hunch what this was all about, and we did get a hint from the last sentence. If Alabama defensed it well, it probably has something to do with a civil rights demonstration.

Interference

In our democratic society, it is essential that the public be informed about what is going on. The chief way in which the public is kept so informed is through the medium of the press, and its newsgathering arms, reporters. This is no less true for the campus than it is for the country in general.

Thus, it is that the campus should view with great concern the efforts of Peter Williams, an Everett dormitory resident, to wrest a reporter's notes away from him because Williams did not wish the news about a bull session on Cuba to get out.

We are assured that Williams was acting, however impulsively, upon the highest of motivations. That, however, is not the point. Interference with the legitimate efforts of a newsman to gather news reaches to the very core of our society's workings. If the interference is allowed to go unprotested, then the way is paved for further interference, and this cannot be tolerated.

We urge those individuals who would question this point of view to reflect on the fact that history, morals, and nearly every other authority, clearly show that it is far better in the long run that the truth be known than to allow the rumor-spreading that always follows in the wake of uncertainty.

HUAC Is Out Of Bounds

(Ed. Note—The following article was written at the request of the editors by Stu Eizenstat, a UNC Congressional Intern last summer who dealt with the House UN-American Activities Committee as part of a research project performed at the request of the Congressman to whom he was assigned.)

By STU EIZENSTAT

Having heard such controversial talk in Congress about the House Committee on Un-American Activities, I was very apprehensive as I walked into the Committee's office to gather information on its role in fighting Communism.

I was told by the the counsel for the Committee, in an office whose left wall was decorated by photographs of American Communist Party leaders, that the Un-American Activities Committee was born in 1945. He said it has since been playing an important role in the battle Congress is waging on behalf of the American people against the insidious Communist menace. The Committee, he explained, by holding public hearings, informs Congress and the public of the present objectives of American Communist activity and recommends effective legislation to counter this activity. Thus, as Communist tactics change, so can Congress' legislation to combat it.

The Committee can and does spotlight clearly to the public present Communist activities and threats. The public vitally needs to know more about what Communism is: its aims and methods for attaining these aims. Thus, as a committee to inform and recommend legislation, it may have a valid and useful purpose.

However, the Committee does not perform the worthwhile function for which it was organized. It often neglects the strict rules under which it is to operate and becomes a third-degree session for anyone the Committee feels has Communist leanings. Thus, instead of informing Congress of present Communist goals and tactics, the extremely powerful and sometimes ruthless Committee becomes a watered-down version of McCarthy's head-hunting Committee.

As Cecil Crabb states, "Such investigations are supposed to bear relationship to legislation. Instead, several well publicized investigations in the post-war era have had little or no apparent connection with legislation . . . They have tried to get . . . information which . . . was highly damaging to Nationaal security".

Furthermore, the members of the Committee seem to forget that the Congress of which they are a part has never made it a crime to be a member per se of the American Communist Party. Only if a member actively and purposefully organizes to overthrow the Government is he liable to conviction. Thus, a person who stands on a soapbox and says he feels the President should be assassinated is not guilty of a crime, but if he gives out guns for the task, then he is liable to imprisonment. Yet, the Committee attempts to put stigma of "Commie" on many social reformers who simply feel that state ownership is the best way to help America. The Committee is in effect convicting these people, along with many inno-

The Door Must Close By 1965

The good, solid, careful, patriotic people who make up the Board of Trustees of Consolidated University of North Carolina came to the defense of ancient university freedoms yesterday as they formally condemned the speech—gag law enacted so hastily by the 1963 legislature.

It was imperative that there be this defense of these ancient university freedoms on the part of the trustees. It is good that the defense took the form it did: Dignified, firm, decent, solidly grounded. It is good that the defense came from such solid and widely respected citizens as former Speaker Frank Taylor, Attorney Hill Yarborough, Judge H. L. Riddle, Banker Percy Ferebee,Mrs. Mebane Holloman Burgwyn, Attorney W. C. Harris. That lady and those gentlemen are of unimpeachable character, of unimpeachable patriotism, of unimpeachable records of service to their country and their state and our University.

In defending the University of North Carolina they were defending an institution which has stood for the freedom of all men for close to two centuries. It is tragic that the freedom of the University should be so attacked as is now the case in this speech-gag law. But, it has ever been the case that freedom must be defended, and the University which has so often defended our freedoms so vigorously and so well now needs the support of those of us who would defend her own freedom.

She got that support yesterday from men whose words and whose actions mean so much. That support came through those who gave it knew full well that there are in North Carolina some people who will do their best to misrepresent those words and those actions. One trustee said that opposition to this Speech-gag law would mean that the trustees "will be going to the people as supporters of communism."

Praise be that that feeling of fear didn't bother the other trustees. Praise be that they are willing to be subjected to attacks from some others if that is part of the price they must pay for being willing to support the freedoms of the University and the other state-supported colleges of North Carolina.

Down through the ages, the university has always been the place where the freedoms of men have been safe, where those freedoms were nurtured and protected and helped to grow. Those freedoms have been maintained in the university atmosphere of freedom of inquiry, freedom to seek the truth in any place where it may be found.

The true university cannot be made the pawn of those who would say to it that it cannot hear this speaker or cannot seek a truth in any quarter where truth may be located, or cannot permit its professors to teach unpopular truths, or cannot have in its libraries the books which might say unpopular things. So far, our University and our other colleges have been the victim of only a law saying that they cannot hear certain speakers. But the law is a foot in the door, and the witch hunters never wait long before putting another foot in such an open door.

The Trustees took a step yesterday toward closing that door. During the long months ahead before the 1965 legislature meets, they will need the help of all friends of freedom in getting this door closed in 1965.

Shocking Matter

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The recent unilateral action of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline to abolish the Student Faculty Review Board strikes me as a shocking matter with which every student should be concerned.

As a foreign student raised in a different environment it took me some time before I could understand the nature of Student Government at Carolina. As I see it, Student Government here is based in close cooperation and communications among students, Faculty, and Administration. Now, this means to me that students do not have any rights, but a series of privileges was obtained through years of hard work and responsibility on the part of the students. If the Administration decided to abolish Student Government it could do so legally, let there be no doubt about it. But then, why was Student Government ever formed? If the basis for the existence of Student Government is communication with South Building, then what is the purpose of the Faculty Committee in taking unilateral action that undermines this base of Student Government? The Faculty Committee has abrogated a part of the Student Constitution which they had formerly supported when it was proposed for approval. Why?

I can see no reason for the recent trend in the behavior of the Faculty and Administration undermining Student Government and student participation in University affairs except that the Faculty and Administration are distrustful of Student Government and students in general. If this is the case, what is the Honor System, the Campus Code, even Student Government worth? These are the things that we are more proud of. These are the things students in this University have cherished for a long time. We are proud of our tradition, but I am afraid that tradition and the institutions we have are in a steady decline. I would prefer to resign my seat in the Student Legislature rather than to work for a meaningless system so weak that it is doomed to failure. We can show our discontent with the Faculty's decision; at least we have the right to speak and we should take full advantage of it. Let the Faculty and the Administration know that we are displeased, disappointed, and concerned. Show them that we can be trusted and that we are responsible. Apathy can only result in failure.

The Faculty has asked us to convince the Student Body to abrogate the section of the Student Constitution that deals with the Student-Faculty Review Board. I do not agree and I will not cast my ballot in favor of what I think is betraying the very basis of Student Government and Student Autonomy.

Comical?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

After listening for two hours to L. J. Phipps talk about everything but why he supported the speaker ban bill, and respond to questions without answering them, I find him to be a comical tragedy. By comical, I am speaking in a sarcastic sense about how his views are grossly contradictory, but he is apparently unaware of this, and by a tragedy, I mean it is a tragedy that this man was ever allowed to have a legislative vote.

Phipps–Spitballs

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I attended the Evening with L. J. Phipps held tonight (Tuesday) in Gerrard Hall. I came away with two impressions:

First, and more trivial, concerned a fortunately small segment of the audience. Seated next to me was an attractive young girl—apparently, judging from the lapel pin on her coat, a member of the SPU. While I was not exactly in agreement with the recent cartoon on this group — unusual beliefs and quaint ways of demonstrating them are not necessarily childish—this girl and her partner, with their incessant chatter, writhing, and (so help me) industrious conversion of the cards given out for written questions into old-fashioned spitballs certainly deserved a bronzed Mickey Mouse beanie for their efforts. I am sure she did not expect to come to the program to hear remarks with which she would agree; she could at least have listened in order perhaps to comprehend the position of those with whom she disagrees.

Second: I didn't expect to hear things with which I agreed, either—but I did labor under the delusion that I might hear an intelligent statement of the pro-Speaker Ban position from an educated and well-respected citizen with training and experience in law. Instead, the audience was treated (after 25 minutes of autobiographical chatter) to a collection of platitudes on God and Country unbecoming to a reasoned argument. We heard that the only difference between the 1963 and 1941 laws is that the more recent one uses the word "Communist." (The most superficial research will indicate a somewhat more basic difference).

We heard Commander Phipps say he would not advocate banning books by Communists; but he was completely unable to find a difference between a Communist speaker and a Communist book except that one is heard and the other is read. We heard the law read to us three times (good legislative procedure) and a letter from one of its sponsors, all as non-answers to intelligent questions. We heard that Judge Phipps does not believe Chancellor Aycock's statement that he knew of no Communists in the student body at the time of the Col. Royall furor in 1962—but no proof to support this lack of belief. In short, we heard nothing.

We were also informed that opponents of the Gag Law have not been opposing Communism at the same time. Mr. Phipps and I must have been reading different opposing statements. But for the record, Commander Phipps, I am opposed to any form of dictation to the individual of what he may or may not hear, read, or think. That opposition most emphatically applies to Communism, as well as to a number of other things.

I had hoped that the people of this State would not fall for the slogan mentality that tends to speak out in favor of this law. My childlike faith has just suffered a heavy blow.

A Little Tardy?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Last Tuesday night the candidates for sophomore and junior class offices were scheduled to visit Lewis Dorm. The junior candidates were supposed to come by at 9:30 and the sophomores at 10:30.

By 9:30 nearly all of the juniors in the dorm were waiting in the social room, but where were the candidates? It was later disclosed that they did not campaign that night.

A few sophomore candidates came, but they were late.

We juniors who waited thirty minutes for nothing would like to make these points:

1. Speakers or debaters should notify those concerned if they do not epect to appear.
2. It is important to be punctual.

We do not make these points, because we think class elections are important. On the contrary, we are just passing on some fundamental knowledge that someone seems to be lacking.

If the candidates do not think this oversight was their mistake, we would be interested in hearing what the Elections Board has to say.

HOW SMALL CAN YOU GET?

Today let us address ourselves to a question that has long rocked and roiled the academic world: Is a student better off at a small college than at a large college?

To answer this question it is necessary first to define terms. What, exactly, do we mean by a small college? Well sir, some say that in order to be called truly small, a college should have an enrollment of not more than four students.

I surely have no quarrel with this statement; a four-student college must unequivocally be called small. Indeed, I would even call it intime if I knew what intime meant. But I submit there is such a thing as being too small. Take, for instance, a recent unfortunate event at Crimscott A and M.

Crimscott A and M, situated in a pleasant valley nestled between Philadelphia and Salt Lake City, was founded by What, exactly, do we mean by a small college?

A. and M. Crimscott, two brothers who left Ireland in 1625 to escape the potato famine of 1841. As a result of their foresight, the Crimscott brothers never went without potatoes for one single day of their lives—and mighty grateful they were! One night, full of gratitude after a wholesome meal of French fries, cottage fries, hash browns, and au gratin, they decided to show their appreciation to this bountiful land of potatoes by endowing a college. But their generosity contained one stipulation: the enrollment of the college must never exceed four students. They felt that only by keeping the school this small could each student be assured of the personalized attention, the camaraderie, the esprit, that is all too often lacking in larger institutions of higher learning.

Well sir, things went along swimmingly until one Saturday a few years ago. On this day Crimscott had a football game scheduled against Minnesota, its traditional rival. Football, as you can well imagine, was something of a problem at Crimscott, what with only four undergraduates in the entire college. It was easy enough to muster a backfield, but to find a good line—or even a bad line—baffled some of the most resourceful coaching minds in the nation.

Well sir, on the morning of the big game against Minnesota, its traditional rival, a capricious fate dealt Crimscott a cruel blow—in fact, four cruel blows. Sigafoos, the quarterback, woke up that morning with an impacted incisor. Wrichards, the slotback, flunked his taxidermy exam and was declared ineligible. Beerbohm-Tree, the wingback-tailback, got his necktie caught in his espresso machine. Yuld, the fullback, was stolen by gypsies.

Consequently, none of the Crimscott team showed up at the football game, and Minnesota, its traditional rival, was able to score almost at will. Crimscott was so cross after this humiliating defeat that they immediately broke off football relations with Minnesota, its tradtional rival. This later became known as the Sacco-Vanzetti Case.

So you can see how only four students might be too meagre an enrollment. The number that I personally favor is twenty. Why? you ask. Because, I reply, when you have twenty students and one of them opens a pack of Marlboro Cigarettes, there are enough to go around for everybody, and no one has to be deprived of Marlboro's flavor, of Marlboro's filter, of Marlboro's staunch and steadfast companionship, and as a result you have a student body that is brimming with sweet content and amity and harmony and concord and togetherness and soft pack and Flip-Top box.

That's why.

17th Co-Rec Carnival Set For November 7th

The 17th annual Co-Recreational Sports Carnival will get underway at Woollen Gym at 7 p.m. on Nov. 7.

The competition will begin with the Block Exchange, Potato Spear, and Paper Plate Slide relays followed by a championship relay, the Balloon Burst. Individual trophies and team plaques will be presented.

Next on the agenda will be the miscellaneous events which will consist of Badminton, Table Tennis, Volleyball doubles, Tether Ball, for the women, and Box Hockey, for the men. The last event will be the Carnival Games, which will be held on the main floor of the gym. These games will consist of the Worm Relay, Hammer the Devil, Blow and Burst, Funnel Volley, Bean Bag Toss, Wash Day, Paper Plate Flip; and will come to a dramatic finish with Bean Straw.

At 9:45 p.m., individual trophies will be presented to event winners.

The relay teams will be composed of four women and four men. The rest of the events will be run by mixed doubles, with the exception of Tether Ball, which will be women's singles; and Box Hockey, men's singles.

Last year approximately 800 students participated in the competition which resulted in a tie for 1st place between Tri-Delta, Beta; and Spencer, ATO.

cent dupes, to continual castigation by their fellows. Besides, it is the F.B.I.'s job, not the job of a Congressional Committee, to investigate those actively seeking the overthrow of our Government.

If the Committee does not fulfill its function, but merely plays the part of a Congressional F.B.I., why do Congressmen so overwhelming vote to continue HUAC? As one Congressmen said, to vote against it could be political suicide, as unknowing constituents might get the impression the Congressman was "soft" on Communism, when actually he simply might feel that there are better ways of handling the Communist menace—and there are.

Mrs. Friday, First Lady Of CU

MRS. WILLIAM FRIDAY picks up children for school on Tuesday car pool—one of many projects in the life of the Consolidated University's First Lady. —Photo by Jim Wallace

By DIANE HILE

The great imposing house sits on Franklin Street and peers through the goldren colored leaves of fall at all who pass by.

Old students tell the new ones "that's President Friday's house," and then ponder over what sort of life goes on within the dwelling.

When the door is opened and the gracious hostess Mrs. William Friday greets you with a smile, you realize this is a home not just a house for the Fridays and their three girls Fran, 12; Mary, 7; and Betsy, 5.

The spacious house with its high ceilings and large rooms has been decorated to serve the dual purposes of entertaining guests and being a comfortable home.

Mrs. Friday also has dual roles — that of hostess and of mother.

"When I first moved into the house, it had been vacated for a year. There was no furniture —only rugs, a grandfather clock and dining room chairs," said Mrs. Friday as she began conducting me on a tour of the house.

"Otto Zanker, a decorator from Greensboro, Mrs. Kay Kyser and I all put forth efforts to decorate the house. In each room we tried to put North Carolina and also keep some of the old traditional taste of the house."

Learns About Wallpaper

Mrs. Friday takes special pride in her wallpaper designs.

"I found that it takes more than a technician to put up wallpaper correctly. Too often a design is cut in half at the bottom or top of the wall, but I found the problem can be remedied with the help of an expert."

In the small hallway leading to the first floor guest rooms she retiled the floor in a large black and white square design and used wallpaper that had only a fancy border at the top.

"This hallway is another redecorated room I'm proud of. When I first came here the floor was brown and the hall had no sense of spaciousness — even with the high ceiling. By putting the wallpaper border at the top and no other design, we accented the height of the ceiling and eliminated the feeeling of closeness.

As we walked through the large living room past the Steinway piano and the bookshelves with practically every book printed by the University press, the cheerful lightness of the room put me to ease.

Dried Flowers

"One of the hardest jobs I have is keeping the house cheerful for entertaining. I like to use dried flower centerpieces, so I dry flowers from my garden in silica gel. Right now I am drying blue hydragen, which is about the only blue that can be dried by this process. I have also dried some roses that grow wild in the back garden."

The drying process takes three to four days and should be done in a heated house. She showed me where she kept her dried flowers in the pantry as we moved on our way to the kitchen.

"I love the pumpkin color and I wanted a cheerful kitchen, so I combined the two," she said as we surveyed the impeccably neat and sunny kitchen. "We are happy that our kitchen facilities are so adequate for entertaining."

"But as large as the house is for entertaining, the dining room is too small. Fortunately, we have enough china and silver. But I hope to purchase some porch furniture next year so that on nice days the overflow of guests can sit outside and enjoy the garden.

"Recently, I have entertained 56 people and last week about 95. However, I try to participate in one State and one community organization a year. The rest of my activities are centered around the university.

This year she is working on the North Carolina Symphony and is Chairman of the Parent Youth League of Chapel Hill. This comparatively new organization was formed to help direct teenagers in their activities, and is based on similar organizations in other towns and cities in North Carolina.

"We have recently adopted a set of 'Guidelines' for Chapel Hill's teenagers and we hope that the parents will support it wholeheartedly," she said.

The Role of Mother

"Our children are quite used to our entertaining schedule," she said. "They have grown up with it and accept it as normal."

"My husband and I enjoy encouraging them in their studies. We have bird books, piano and dancing lessons and many other various activities.

"Once a week I run the car pool to school. I made six trips — then I only have to do it on that one day.

"I enjoy living in Chapel Hill. My husband and I both went to Carolina and we grew up in this State. When we moved here there was no great adjustment to make — we were merely coming home.

Coed

Commentary

By DIANE HILE

Another year, another Yack Beauty contest. Another queen, another court.

There were 103 entries in the contest, but by 11 p.m. the contest was over and 94 untapped beauties returned to their dorms and houses as did the chosen few.

Many condemn the Yack pageant for its hurried choice of candidates, its seeming unfairness.

However, I am reminded of the announcer, who said of the Miss America contestants, "everyone of these 52 girls are qualified and could be Miss America."

When Carolina's coeds walk down that ramp once a year every single one of them could be Yack queens. For once there is no typical Carolina coed. For once each girl looks and dresses with a personal touch. For once she can show the world that she can be pretty without madras and weejuns.

The ramp is a long one, the step to and from the "Old Well" is awkward. The girls behind the curtain are tense, the audience noisy, the judges unsmiling.

Some contestants walk the ramp as if they don't care, others walk like they won the contest the night before. Some smile, others don't.

The spotlights are so bright they burn their eyes. Music and announcer go unheard to those 103 who walk that first round. The tension could be cut with a knife. The intermission is a too long.

Cigarettes are smoked, cokes drunk, glamor abounds, beauty radiates and then,—63 girls are cut out of the contest as the second round begins.

The ramp gets longer—nerves tauter.

Finally, it's all over.

But is the beauty only skin deep?

Many members of the past courts have proven it is. Others have proven the opposite. Many of the girls become snobs, many have cultivated a cheap beauty. Still others have gone on to develop the poise and personality to complement their looks.

And the queens, are they really queens or have they too fallen from their pictoral images?

It is only a full page picture in a book, but the picture tells 10,000 words.

It is only one of the many contests on campus, yet is the least forgotten.

The Yack contest requires the less of its contestants than Homecoming, Beat Dook or Consolidated University competitions. It requires only looks.

The queens have kept their humility. The quiet unassuming beauties of the yearly picture are just that.

They defy everything the Carolina coed is reputed to be.

They defy everything the world expects a beautiful girl to be.

Dianne Monroe has won beauty contests since she first learned to smile. She should have expected to be the next Yack Queen.

But, when the red roses were handed to her—a beauty cried.

might have difficulty in this area.

Dick Ellis oppsoed the term "social" for the exchange, saying that "if Kellis and Miss Yeager are chairmen, it will not just be a social function."

Spearman Takes Floor

Spearman was then granted privileges of the floor, and said he would urge the body to approve the appointment.

"We should consider the relationship between this body and the president," he said. "Unless someone is definitely unqualified, the president should have the prerogative to exercise a great deal of latitude in his appointments. It is not our explicit duty to decide whether the man submitted for approval is better qualified than another."

"I also feel that the question of Miss Yeager's position is for her to decide, and not for this body."

He concluded, "while it is true that there are some people who might not want to work with Mr. Parker, and some students who might not want to go along on the Exchange, we should not cater to the private prejudices of some students in making public appointments such as this one."

n fact, Spearman said, "it is really our position to show other students that this appointment should be non-discriminatory."

The question was called by Neal Jackson, and the appointment was approved by a large margin. A motion for unanimity met with objection.

Larry Rakestraw To Test UNC Pass Defense

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

FRIED CROW IS much more appetizing with sugar sprinkled unsparingly over it. And NC State's 21-7 upset of Duke was a sweet ingredient to go with my meal of crow last week. The 7-0 zip for UNC over South Carolina added to the taste, and so Happiness turned out to be a 15-10 record, anyway.

A digression from last week's results is in order for today UNC faces a bigger game than most people think. The Tar Heels are concerned about their remaining ACC opponents (Clemson next week and Duke) sure, but it is this Georgia ballgame that will go the furthest in determining what has become utmost in the minds of most football followers around here—a post-season bowl game.

The feeling here is that a 9-1 record, even an 8-2, should get the Tar Heels an extra game this year. The bowl people aren't expected to be watching today, But, if UNC wins, they'll be here next week. And an early guess, premature but pleasant, is North Carolina—a distinct possibility for the Gator Bowl (against Syracuse, Pittsburgh or Penn State).

The 15-10 shot last week made the year a 101-38-11 for a .727 record. More laughs follow.

DUKE AT GEORGIA TECH. The Blue Devils are down but not out. Losers to State last week, they face a better team today. Billy Lothridge, Tech's answer to Jack Armstrong, is too much. Georgia Tech, by 10.

NC STATE AT VIRGINIA. The Wolfpack's schedule the rest of the year is just so much easy meat. This may be the ACC team at 9-1. But we know how good they really are, don't we? NC State, by 16.

WAKE FOREST AT CLEMSON. They're starting to yell for Hildebrand's scalp. Come on guys, he hasn't missed a block all year. And the rumor that Wake is going to play the Emerson Cardplayers at the half of the UNC-Duke game is absolutely untrue. The Deacs are playing Lincoln High School then. Clemson, by 42.

PENN STATE AT MARYLAND. It was a blinding snowstorm the last time these two played. It shouldn't snow today, but Dick Shiner and Darryl Hill, two of the league's best, will not be able to change last year's outcome. Penn State, by 13.

MISSISSIPPI STATE AT ALABAMA. The Maroon bubble burst last week in a loss to Memphis State. Alabama at home with Joe Namath coming on strong this second half is so very, very tough. Alabama, by 14.

FLORIDA AT AUBURN. The Tigers have to be the SEC surprise of the year. Unbeaten and untied, Jimmy Sidle is the name of the guy who got them that way. Up and down Florida is mostly down. Auburn, by 6.

Ole Miss-LSU: A Crucifixion?

MIAMI AT KENTUCKY. When Miami loses these days, it is no longer an upset. Hurricane coaches counted 15 dropped passes in their game with Georgia alone. The Kentucky sophs are growing up fast. I don't know. Miami, by 3.

MISSISSIPPI AT LSU. The yearly southern classic usually stirs up more excitement than sit-ins. Neither team is really up to its usual par, but fans in Baton Rogue will crucify the referees before they'll let the Bayou Bengals lose. LSU, by 7.

COLUMBIA AT CORNELL. As Archie Roberts goes, so goes Columbia. Ditto with Gary Wood and the Big Red. Who will have the better day? Roberts, in a tossup. Columbia, by 5.

SYRACUSE AT PITTSBURGH. They're probably fighting today for the title of second-best in the East. The Orange discovered a passer last week on the bench. And Richie King slaughtered Oregon State. No slaughter, but. Syracuse, by 10.

BUFFALO AT DELAWARE. UB, playing the tough schedule this year, takes on the best small-college team in the country. The Bulls beat Boston U. and Ohio U. already this year. But the Hens have too many blue eggs. Delaware, by 12.

AIR FORCE-ARMY (CHICAGO). Soldier Field will have more soldiers than it thought existed for this—the first meeting between the service institutions. Terry Isaacson is the NCAA's sixth man in total offense, but Army is steadiest. Army, by 8.

PURDUE AT ILLINOIS. Dick Butkus, the splendid Illini center, anchors one of the fiercest lines in a league of fierce lines. Boilermaker QB Ron DiGravio will find out what Ohio State did. 23 tackles by Butkus. Illinois, by 10.

Staubach Sets The Sail For ND

NAVY AT NOTRE DAME. I didn't know it, but juniors cannot win the Heisman Trophy. Therefore, Roger Staubach will not win it. He also will not win any hearts in Irish country. Just games. Navy, by 14.

WISCONSIN AT MICHIGAN STATE. The winner of this one looks to play Illinois for the Big Ten championship. Wisconsin is not going to be suprised (like last week) by anything the rest of the year. MSU, though, is the sleeper. Michigan State, by 5.

NORTHWESTERN AT MICHIGAN. Tommy Myers must be getting tired of being upset. The Wildcats have two real tough ones after this. Michigan will be sorry for it. Northwestern, by 17.

NEBRASKA AT MISSOURI. Both unbeaten in the Big Eight, the Cornhuskers and the Tigers may stage the best game of the day. The dogfight in this league will go down to the very last game. Missouri, by 2.

TCU AT BAYLOR. These guys Don Trull and Larry Elkins have professional eyes focused on Texas. Waco, to be exact, and both are leading the country in their specialties—passing and catching the ball. TCU is tough, but not tough enough. Baylor, by 7.

TEXAS AT SMU. Arkansas fell by four. Rice fell by four. Everybody shoots for that number one team. Texas, so far, has been equal to it. With guys like Duke Carlisle, Tommy Ford and Scott Appleton around, the Longhorns may get that big 10-Zip. Texas, by 5.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AT WASHINGTON. OK, so I missed the Oregon-Washington game. I didn't know the Huskies had Junior Coffey back from his injury. So he scores the winning TD at the end of the game. Southern Cal, though, is starting to smell the roses. Beathard, Bedsole, etc. may not lose again this year. Southern California, by 11.

OTHERS:

Dartmouth over Yale.
Ohio State over Iowa.
Minnesota over Indiana.
Arkansas over Texas A&M.
UCLA over California.

Georgia's Babb, Knowles And Hauss

End Mickey Babb (left), halfback Billy Knowles and center Len Hauss are three vital cogs in Georgia 'Bulldogs' vaunted passing attack which UNC must contain today. Babb is said to be top professional timber.

T-Babies Splashed By Turtles, 22-9

By BILL LEE

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Maryland's hard running frosh sloshed through the goo in a pouring rain to send UNC's Tar Babies to their second defeat, 22-9, here yesterday. It was the final game of the year for UNC, which finished with a 3-2 record.

The Baby Terps were in command from the opening kickoff when Tom Lalli took Danny Talbott's boot on his own four and ran 96 yards to paydirt. Lalli made an 89-yard kickoff return in Maryland's 21-14 victory over the Virginia freshmen.

Park downpour, the Tar Babies were able to complete only one drive, that in the second quarter.

Bud Phillips returned the kickoff following a Maryland field goal to his own 36. With the aid

Unable to launch a successful passing attack in the College of two passes from Talbott to Bo Wood and four carries by fullback Spencer Barrow plus a fifteen-yard penalty, the Tar Babies reached the Maryland 16.

From there Talbott faded back to pass, found nothing but Baby Terp jerseys in his backfield but eluded them with some fancy running and tossed a touchdown strike to Wood.

The Tar Babies failed to take advantage of a golden scoring opportunity in the first quarter when Jim Fortune ran the football 61 yards to the Maryland 19.

Barrow went to the 14 and Fortune then carried three times to the four but was stopped twice inside the two and Maryland took over on downs.

On the first play from scrimmage, quarterback Phil Petry fumbled and fell on the ball in his own end zone for a two-point safety and UNC's last score of the day.

A standout for Maryland was their big fullback, Whitney Marchiniak, who pile-drived through the mush and the outmanned Tar Baby line all afternoon for key yardage. John Gibson also contributed several key runs, including a 19-yard touchdown scamper for the Baby Terps' second touchdown in the opening quarter.

Georgia QB Threat May Be Whole Show

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Larry Rakestraw, the greatest thing to hit Georgia since peaches, hits Chapel Hill today. But the appearance is not expected to make too indelible an impression on UNC's own claimants to national fame.

The NCAA statistics scientists earlier this week labeled Carolina NUMBER ONE in pass defense among major college teams across the country. The numbers read: Games, 6. Attempts, 112. Completions 38. Interceptions, 11. Percentage, .399. Yards, 271, Per-Game Yards, 45.2. TDs 1.

That's quite impressive — 271 yards in six games.

To make some sort of a comparison, Rakestraw, in one game this year, gained 407 yards by passing.

Against Miami two weeks ago, the Georgia QB was 25 for 38 through the air and seven more yards by running. The performance broke the 401-yard single game passing mark established by Stanford's Dick Norman in 1959.

Currently, Rakestraw is the third-ranking NCAA passer (behind Roger Staubach of Navy and Don Trull of Baylor) and the third-ranking total offense leader (also behind Trull and Staubach). He is 72 of 128 for 984 yards and six touchdowns. His total offense mark is 1,150 yards.

Statements from the Tar Heel coaching staff to the effect that "He is the best signal-caller we've faced;" "One of the finest performers in years to have stepped on Kenan turf;" "As good a passer as there is in the country," are doubtlessly true.

But, not so incidentally, Rakestraw also leads his team in rushing (a feeble 166 yards), and this points out a definite weakness along the ground that UNC is looking to take advantage of.

When your high-yardage runner is averaging around 27 yards a game, you know where your only strength is coming from. And, however far Georgia has come this year (or however far the Bulldogs go), they do so only on the arm of Larry Rakestraw. This is not enough security to pit against the nation's seventh-ranked (in total defense) team.

Though Rakestraw has shown he is a dangerous rollout runner, Georgia appears to have no one else capable of threatening along the ground. UNC, thus, does not seem too worried about this phase of the game. It is their (up-to-now) sensational pass defense which must hold up to the challenge of Rakestraw. If it does, Carolina should win handily.

Georgia's ends are, after the quarterback, the most impressive of the Bulldog arsenal.

Mickey Babb (6-4, 227) was the big cheese in the pre-season analysis. But he is just now starting to make some noise. Babb led Georgia in receiving last season (20 catches) and is tied for the team lead at this point with 16 for 195 yards. The pros are after him for a tight end.

Alternating with Babb, a sophomore has moved in somewhat spectocularly. He is Pat Hodgson (6-1, 190), who missed last week's win over Kentucky but has still caught 16 for 285 yards. He captured nine of them against Miami (192 yards).

Barry Wilson, Georgia's split flanker, is a third Rakestraw target. Wilson has caught 12 for 123 yards so far this year.

Rakestraw's overshadowed companions in the backfield are halfbacks Billy Knowles and Fred Barber and fullbacks Leon Armbrester and Marv Hurst.

Knowles (5-10, 173) is the team captain and, average-wise, its leading rusher. He has picked up a 4.6 average with 55 yards total. Barber (5-11, 195) is probably Georgia's quickest back. He has run for 96 yards offensively and is a good linebacker on defense.

Armbrester (6-0, 186) was the Bulldogs' leading rusher last year on a four yards plus average and has gained 113 this year. But last week the other fullback, Hurst, started against Kentucky, and he may get the call again today.

Up front in the interior, Georgia has two sophomores at the guards, two seniors at a tackle and the center position and a potential All-American at the other tackle.

Wayne Brantley (5-11, 200) and Marv Smith (6-0, 187), a converted center, are the two soph guards while Len Hauss (6-2, 220) is a veteran three-year letterman at center.

The tackles are Benny Boyd (6-3, 225), a senior, and Ray Rissmiller (6-4, 230), the Bulldogs' finest lineman, who last year made the All-Southeastern Conference team as a sophomore. He is the big gun Georgia looks to on defense.

Another defensive gem is halfback Brigham Woodward, rated one of the SEC's best, who replaces Rakestraw when the ball changes hands. The Bulldogs' placekicking specialist is Bill McCullogh. He leads the team in scoring with 25 points on four of eight field goal tries and 13 of 14 conversions.

Last year he kicked a 48-yard FG against Auburn.

There are not a lot of teams left that can look at a 5-1 or even a 4-1-1 record. Yet neither of the teams today is ranked among the country's top twenty. This can probably be explained by the fact that UNC's opponents have won only 12 games, collectively, this year, and Georgia's have been even more incompetent (11 wins).

The winner today, however, should make the jump to the twenty, and rain—an equalizer of many and a definite probability—could determine who that is. Carolina should pray for rain.

UNC Ace Defensive Back Dave Braine

Carolina corner back is key to Tar Heels' nationally top-ranked pass defense. Braine also is UNC's top place-kicker and leads the Atlantic Coast Conference in conversions with a perfect 10 for 10.

—Heels Seek No. 6—

The interior of the Tar Heel defensive set-up looks like this—Richy Zarro holds down the other linebacker spot, Jerry Cabe is at middle guard and Vic Esposito and Cole Kortner are the tackles.

Of course the Tar Heels will have more to think about than containing Rakestraw and whatever running attack the Bulldogs come up with. No matter how good the defense, you won't win unless you score.

The UNC offensive attack is centered around the off-tackle bursts of Ken Willard and Kesler, and the Edge-to-Lacey pass plays. Hickey uses one to set up the other.

In addition to being the top pass receiver, Lacey is also the team's main decoy. When not flairing out for a 15-20 yard sideline pass, Lacey will take two defenders out of the play as far as possible. When this happens Edge will either toss up the middle to his tight end (Hammett), throw deep to his wingback (Jackson) or a swing to his halfback or fullback. If he decides not to pass at all, Edge will simply tuck the ball under arm and sweep his end.

The second unit, headed by quarterback Black uses the same strategy, though Black is more apt to run than Edge. Tuthill is the running back, Frank Bowman the fullback and Ward or Tom Brooks the wingback. Joe Robinson replaces Hammett at tight end, with either Gallagher or Jimmy Harrington at the split end.

Students To Vote On 3 Amendments

Three constitutional amendments will be presented in the election on Tuesday to the Student Body for its ratification. All three amendments were passed by the Student Legislature but must receive the approval of a majority of those voting to become student law.

The first amendment would, if passed, change the name of the Men's Interdormitory Council to the "Men's Residence Council." The IDC Court would become the Men's Residence Council Court. The supporters of the name change claim that it is only the first step in a new concept of dormitory living.

A second amendment dealing with the IDC seeks to clarify the IDC Court's jurisdiction over violators of dormitory rules of conduct by non-dormitory residents. The amendments would delete the words "by male dormitory residents" in the provision of the Constitution which states: "The Men's nIterdormitory Court shall have original jurisdiction in cases involving infractions by male dormitory residents of dormitory rules of conduct as established by the Men's Interdormitory Council and approved by the Student Legislature."

The third amendment seeks to place the Interfraternity Council Court under the Constitution. While the Interfraternity Council is mentioned in the Constitution, no mention is made of and Interfraternity Council Court although the Court has been in existence for some time. The amendment would add the Interfraternity Council Court to the list of already constitutionally established Men's Council, Women's Council, Constitution al Council, Men's Interdormitory Court (possibly to become Men's Residence Council Court), the Women's House Councils, the Law School Court, the Dental School Court, the Medical School Court, and the Student (?)—Faculty Review Board.

The amendment states that "The Interfraternity Council shall have original jurisdiction in cases involving infractions by fraternities, fraternity members or agents thereof of rules of conduct as established by the Interfraternity Council and approved by the Student Legislature. The Interfraternity Council shall have the power to determine the composition of the Court and the procedures under which it shall operate within the limitations imposed by this constitution and subject to the approval of the Student Legislature."

In subsection I., section 7, Article II of the Student Constitution, the amendment would insert the words "Interfraternity Council Court" in the provision which states: "In cases before the Men's Interdormitory Court and the Women's House Councils, the (defendant shall have) the right to a public trial, which shall be defined as meaning the presence of no more than two representatives of the student newspaper within the chambers of the judicial body during a particular case. Only people signing a written release may be mentioned in resulting publicity.

Unless a defendant requests a public trial, the proceedings shall be kept secret, except for such information as the defendant may disclose at his discretion;"

oody To Meet ith Professors

lph Moody, state deputy atey general, will speak on the aker Ban law at the fall ting of the UNC chapter of American Association of Uniersity Professors Monday at 8 m. in Howell Hall auditorium. Moody has gone on record in blic assertions in favor of the w.

A panel of UNC professors—enry Brandis Jr., Dean of the chool of Law; Carl W. Gottsnalk, prof. of medicine; Arnold S. Nash, prof. of religion; and Corydon P. Spruill, prof. of economics — will discuss the topic.

A question and answer period will follow the presentations.

Copies of "Campus Censorship: The North Carolina 'Visiting Speakers' Law," written by Daniel H. Pollitt, professor of law, will be distibuted to AAUP members.

Daniel A. Okun, professor of sanitary engineering, will preside over the meeting. Prof. Nash is president-elect of the UNC chapter. Assoc. Prof. of statistics W. J. Hall is treasurer and Asst. Prof. of physiology Richard L. Glasser, secretary.

The meeting is open only to members of the UNC faculty.

TRIAL POSTPONED

The trial of Ford Rowan, a UNC student charged with failure to yield the right of way when the automobile he was driving struck another student Saturday Oct. 19, has been continued until Nov. 8.

A Carrboro man has appealed a 30-day jail sentence for assault on a university student who was picketing the College Cafe last April.

Roy Lee Merritt, 27, was convicted this week in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court on a charge of assaulting Paul Hutzler, a UNC sophomore, on April 11.

Interviews For Canadian Swap Are Next Week

Interviews for the Toronto Exchange will continue next Monday and Tuesday.

Jaene Yeager and Kellis Parker, co-chairmen of the annual student swap with the University of Toronto, announced yesterday that interviews will be held in Roland Parker I from 3-5 p.m.

The program, now in its fifth year, was set up to promote international good will and understanding. Toronto students will visit here over the Duke weekend, and UNC will make a return trip during semester break.

The Canadian students will attend the Germans Club concert, tour the state government facilities in Raleigh, see the Duke game and a Playmaker production and participate in discussions. Each student will be assigned a "co-Tar Heel" during the weekend.

The interviewers will decide the 24 students who will represent UNC. 12 male students and 12 coeds will be chosen.

Petrov Won't Get Gagged

A professor from the Soviet Union will speak here Monday, but his appearance will not violate the Speaker Ban Law, a University official said yesterday.

Dr. V. V. Petrov, professor of statistics at Leningrad State University who will address a Statistics Colloquium is not according to Dr. G. E. Nicholson, head of the Statistics Department, a member of the Communist Party and his appearance will therefore not violate the law.

"He has been thoroughly investigated by the FBI and State Department," said Dr. Nicholson, "and there is no reason to think that he is politically affiliated or a member of the Party.

"He is a visiting scholar here on a purely scientific mission. We feel the state law is unfortunate but we didn't want to violate it in any way. Therefore we followed the necessary procedure in clearing the talk."

Dr. Petrov, who is an internationally known figure in probability theory, arrived in Chapel Hill last weekend and was asked on Tuesday, according to Dr. Nicholson, to address the colloquium.

"We knew far in advance that he was coming here," he said, "but we had to wait and see if he would be willing to speak."

Prof. Petrov is on a three-month scientific exchange tour which will take him to universities all over the United States. He is expected to remain in Chapel Hill until the end of the week.

Bulldogs Muzzled; 'Straw Pitchforked

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC defensive backfield coach Bud Carson may not be a genius, but don't ask Larry Rakestraw about it.

The Tar Heels put their own sharp-Edged rake on Georgia's Strawboss here yesterday, jammed the muzzle on the Bulldogs' vaunted passing gun and completely obiterated the visitors, 28-7.

You wouldn't think Carolina could have possibly looked better than it did two weeks ago against NC State, but 34,000 chilled fans thought so as UNC assurred itself of the first winning season since 1958.

The Tar Heels are now 6-1, and they got that way yesterday with a pass defense that continued to wallow in magnificence and an offense that must have made Rakestraw blush all the way to his press clippings.

Rakestraw came here as the tnird-leading total-offense man in the country. He left last night just a withered peach. For Dave Braine, Ronnie Jackson, Eddie Kesler, Junior Edge and the rest of UNC's defensive company just laughed at his totals of eight of 17 passes for 58 yards.

The points Georgia did get came as a gift from this guy wearing stripes who saw early what would happen and decided against a shutout. The Bulldogs scored late in the first quarter on a drive of 65 yards, 55 of which were marked off in penalties against the Tar Heels.

The only penalty UNC fans could see was against Georgia — too many men on the field (11 Bulldogs and the referee).

Junior Edge, the Carolina quarterback who has had trouble getting started this year, had the greatest day of his career in leading his teammates to the impressive win.

He completed 15 of 20 passes for 189 yards, ran for 37 more along the ground, scored two touchdowns on short runs and passed for another while leading the Heels to all four scores.

The gift TD to the Bulldogs came after UNC drove 57 yards in 10 plays the second time it got the ball.

Runs of six and nine yards by Ken Willard featured the move as Carolina drove from its 43 to the Georgia 28. Here, Edge hit John Hammett with a 21-yard pitch to the seven, and two bursts by Willard and a third by Eddie Kesler got the 7-0 with 4:44 left in the first quarter.

Georgia took the opportunity then to show what a ballclub can do with 12 men.

On a fourth-and-12 from their 33, the Bulldogs kicked. A roughing the kicker penalty got them the first down.

On a third-and-18 from their 41, Rakestraw was smothered by Frank Gallagher for another six-yard loss. A personal foul against UNC gave Georgia another 15-yard break to go for another first down.

And, on a second-and-twelve from the UNC 35, The Bulldogs smiled again. Rakestraw faded a pass to end Pat Hodgson on the Carolina 12. UNC's Braine and Hodgson both went for it, both tripped over each other, and the little red flag came flying out of the striped pocket once again.

It gave Georgia the ball on the 10, and three running plays (the final two yards by Marv Hurst) and a conversion later, the score was tied 7-all. It came on the first play of the second period.

But the UNC pride was hurt. Its defense had gone seven quarters without allowing a score and this one shouldn't have happened.

The Tar Heels exchanged punts and got the ball on their 48. It took them six plays to go ahead for good. Bob Lacey, the magician, carried them most of the way.

He caught a look-in from Edge and eluded three men the professional way to get 18 yards and a first down on the first play, caught two other passes for six and seven-yard gains, and provided a decoy as Edge rolled out for a big gainer to the Georgia six.

Kesler carried for five before Edge sneaked for the second TD. It was 14-7 with 5:55 left in the half, and still Rakestraw had not completed a pass.

Larry did throw four strikes in the next series to get the Dogs to the UNC 25. But it was more bark than bite, for Clint Eudy intercepted a pass thrown by Rakestraw from a falling position to end the advancement.

The Georgia QB was obviously planning to ground the ball when he threw it, but foresight would have shown him that the mistake

Phones?

J. S. Bennett, superintendent of ground and buildings, told several student leaders that there is a definite possiblity of installing private telephones in each suite of Craige dormitory if enough interest is shown.

Bennett said that because several people have taken the initiative and have shown enough interest, the chances are very much in favor of the phone installation.

The approximate cost of the phones would be only 50 cents a month.

Telephones in rooms has been the objects of campus discussion for some time, and several individual students have had them installed. The approximate price for an individual telephone is $6.70 per month.

FOOTBALL HIGHLIHGTS

Football highlights of the game between UNC and Georgia will be shown on WUNC-TV tomorrow evening at 9:30 p.m.

Crash Kills 3 Georgians

Three University of Georgia students were killed and three others critically hurt late Friday when their car skidded into a trailer truck on U. S. 29 near Piedmont, S. C.

The students were reported to have been on their way here for the UNC-Ga. game.

Killed were Linda Kay Blaylock and Charles Kelly, both of Charlotte, N. C. and Robert Allen, Coral Gables, Fla.

STINNETT TO SPEAK

The spotlight will be on the schools during American Edution Week, being observed at UNC Nov. 10-16.

God?

What happens to students when they come to UNC and are confronted by questions such as "What is God?" and "What is the meaning of life?"

The answers to those and other similar questions will be discussed on "Encounter" Monday night at 8:30 p.m. on WUNC-TV, channel 4.

Guests will be Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of UNC's Religion Department; Rev. Harry Smith, Presbyterian campus chaplain; and Father Robert Wilken, Catholic campus chaplain.

Host for the weekly show is Dr. John Clayton, professor of Radio-TV and Motion Pictures at UNC.

General theme of the series of shows is "Minds, Manners and Morals."

Probation Given For Book Theft

A sophomore was sentenced to definite probation for two semesters Thursday night in a Men's Council trial.

The student was charged with stealing books and trying to sell them. He said he needed the money at the time.

The defendant was unable to sell the books when the book store salesman suspected that the books were not his. He then returned the books to the owner saying he had found them.

The owner accidentally found out from the salesman a few days later that someone had tried to sell his books. He called the defendant who admitted the theft and turned himself in to a member of the Men's Council.

The council felt that although the defendant had committed a "serious Honor Code violation" he had been honest enough to give his correct name to the salesman and to return the books before he was caught.

Suspension is the sentence usually given for an offense this serious, the Council said.

UNC-Duke Begin New Program

An Educational Supermarket

By GARY BLANCHARD

Imagine that you had a pocketful of money, a list of things you had long wanted to buy, and that you woke up one day and found yourself within ten miles of two of the best supermarts in the country.

Imagine that, and you have a pretty good idea of how dozens of faculty members for miles around Chapel Hill must feel as a result of the recently-announced $800,000 Cooperative Program in the Humanities from the Ford Foundation.

The Foundation is supplying the money, the faculty members are supplying the shopping list of ideas they wish to know more about, and UNC and Duke are providing the supermarts of knowledge in the form of excellent libraries.

The idea behind the program is to allow selected faculty members from liberal arts colleges in North and South Carolina, plus Virginia, to spend a semester or two at UNC and Duke, studying most anything their hearts desire.

The emphasis will not be upon bagging further degrees, but upon tilling the soil of the faculty members' minds, allowing them to probe for deeper levels of understanding, while at the same time allowing them to polish up the knowledge and teaching techniques they already have and go after more of the same.

The hope is that this cooperative venture will be sort of an educational Marshall Plan for the Humanities, which encompasses the fields of History, Philosophy, English, Classical Languages, Modern Foreign Languages, Music, Art and Theater, in an attempt to improve and strengthen man's knowledge and expertise in this area, as it is being improved and strengthened already in the Natural and Physical Sciences due to the technological revolution which the space age has usherd in.

The project also is aimed at doing something about the relative neglect of faculty members at Negro colleges and universities. The thinking here is that unless Negro professors and instructors are allowed to develop their talwents further, they can't stretch the minds and intellectual horizons of their students as modern needs dictate they must be stretched.

Profs Coming Back

What makes this program all the more striking is that it represents a departure from the Ford Foundation's usual practice of backing projects that are national in scope. This will be the first time the Foundation has agreed to underwrite a program aimed at capitalizing upon the regional strength of colleges and universities in the Humanities.

The program has three features and works this way:

First, promising faculty members from the cooperating colleges—such as Davidson, North Carolina College, Furman, and Washington & Lee — will be sought out under the direction of a joint UNC-Duke professors committee, and invited to come to UNC and Duke for a semester or a year of research and study as Humanities Fellows.

Their home-school teaching positions will be filled as much as possible by advanced graduate students from UNC and Duke, therby easing the burden of the faculty members' temporary absence and offering the graduate students valuable xperience as colleg teachers.

Second, the program will include a 6-week Institute during the summers of 1964 and 1965, emphasizing research into the Medieval - Renaissance Period, with participants — known as Institute Fellows — coming from a somewhat bigger land area than the academic-year Fellows.

Third, the program will bring in outstanding scholars from around the world as Visiting Humanities Professors to serve as visiting lecturers and advisers to the Humanities Fellows for varying periods of time.

The whole thing is scheduled to get off the ground in time for an Institute next summer, followed by the first Academic-Year Fellows that fall. The first Visiting Professors hopefully will be lined up by next summer to coincide with the Institute, and will continue on into the regular academic year.

Thus the stage has been set for the educational heart of the Research Triangle to become even more of an academic mecca than it already is.

In addition, the program demonstrates anew that although UNC and Duke — one a private, the other a public institution — vie ferociously on the athletic fields, when it comes to education a high level of competition becomes a high level of cooperation.

Sports Courier

FRIED CROW IS much more appetizing with sugar sprinkled unsparingly over it. And NC State's 21-7 upset of Duke was a sweet ingredient to go with my meal of crow last week. The 7-0 zip for UNC over South Carolina added to the taste, and so Happiness turned out to be a 15-10 record, anyway.

A digression from last week's results is in order for today UNC faces a bigger game than most people think. The Tar Heels are concerned about their remaining ACC opponents (Clemson next week and Duke) sure, but it is this Georgia ballgame that will go the furthest in determining what has become utmost in the minds of most football followers around here—a post-season bowl game.

The feeling here is that a 9-1 record, even an 8-2, should get the Tar Heels an extra game this year. The bowl people aren't expected to be watching today, But, if UNC wins, they'll be here next week. And an early guess, premature but pleasant, is North Carolina—a distinct possibility for the Gator Bowl (against Syracuse, Pittsburgh or Penn State).

The 15-10 shot last week made the year a 101-38-11 for a .727 record. More laughs follow.

DUKE AT GEORGIA TECH. The Blue Devils are down but not out. Losers to State last week, they face a better team today. Billy Lothridge, Tech's answer to Jack Armstrong, is too much. Georgia Tech, by 10.

NC STATE AT VIRGINIA. The Wolfpack's schedule the rest of the year is just so much easy meat. This may be the ACC team at 9-1. But we know how good they really are, don't we? NC State, by 16.

WAKE FOREST AT CLEMSON. They're starting to yell for Hildebrand's scalp. Come on guys, he hasn't missed a block all year. And the rumor that Wake is going to play the Emerson Cardplayers at the half of the UNC-Duke game is absolutely untrue. The Deacs are playing Lincoln High School then. Clemson, by 42.

PENN STATE AT MARYLAND. It was a blinding snowstorm the last time these two played. It shouldn't snow today, but Dick Shiner and Darryl Hill, two of the league's best, will not be able to change last year's outcome. Penn State, by 13.

MISSISSIPPI STATE AT ALABAMA. The Maroon bubble burst last week in a loss to Memphis State. Alabama at home with Joe Namath coming on strong this second half is so very, very tough. Alabama, by 14.

FLORIDA AT AUBURN. The Tigers have to be the SEC surprise of the year. Unbeaten and untied, Jimmy Sidle is the name of the guy who got them that way. Up and down Florida is mostly down. Auburn, by 6.

Ole Miss-LSU: A Crucifixion?

MIAMI AT KENTUCKY. When Miami loses these days, it is no longer an upset. Hurricane coaches counted 15 dropped passes in their game with Georgia alone. The Kentucky sophs are growing up fast. I don't know. Miami, by 3.

MISSISSIPPI AT LSU. The yearly southern classic usually stirs up more excitement than sit-ins. Neither team is really up to its usual par, but fans in Baton Rogue will cruci y the referees before they'll let the Bayou Bengals lose. LSU, by 7.

COLUMBIA AT CORNELL. As Archie Roberts goes, so goes Columbia. Ditto with Gary Wood and the Big Red. Who will have the better day? Roberts, in a tossup. Columbia, by 5.

SYRACUSE AT PITTSBURGH. They're probably fighting today for the title of second-best in the East. The Orange discovered a passer last week on the bench. And Richie King slaughtered Oregon State. No slaughter, but. Syracuse, by 10.

BUFFALO AT DELAWARE. UB, playing the tough schedule this year, takes on the best small-college team in the country. The Bulls beat Boston U. and Ohio U. already this year. But the Hens have too many blue eggs. Delaware, by 12.

AIR FORCE-ARMY (CHICAGO). Soldier Field will have more soldiers than it thought existed for this—the first meeting between the service institutions. Terry Isaacson is the NCAA's sixth man in total offense, but Army is steadiest. Army, by 8.

PURDUE AT ILLINOIS. Dick Butkus, the splendid Illini center, anchors one of the fiercest lines in a league of fierce lines. Boilermaker QB Ron DiGravio will find out what Ohio State did. 23 tackles by Butkus. Illinois, by 10.

Staubach Sets The Sail For ND

NAVY AT NOTRE DAME. I didn't know it, but juniors cannot win the Heisman Trophy. Therefore, Roger Staubach will not win it. He also will not win any hearts in Irish country. Just games. Navy, by 14.

WISCONSIN AT MICHIGAN STATE. The winner of this one looks to play Illinois for the Big Ten championship. Wisconsin is not going to be suprised (like last week) by anything the rest of the year. MSU, though, is the sleeper. Michigan State, by 5.

NORTHWESTERN AT MICHIGAN. Tommy Myers must be getting tired of being upset. The Wildcats have two real tough ones after this. Michigan will be sorry for it. Northwestern, by 17.

NEBRASKA AT MISSOURI. Both unbeaten in the Big Eight, the Cornhuskers and the Tigers may stage the best game of the day. The dogfight in this league will go down to the very last game. Missouri, by 2.

TCU AT BAYLOR. These guys Don Trull and Larry Elkins have professional eyes focused on Texas. Waco, to be exact, and both are leading the country in their specialties—passing and catching the ball. TCU is tough, but not tough enough. Baylor, by 7.

TEXAS AT SMU. Arkansas fell by four. Rice fell by four. Everybody shoots for that number one team. Texas, so far, has been equal to it. With guys like Duke Carlisle, Tommy Ford and Scott Appleton around, the Longhorns may get that big 10-Zip. Texas, by 5.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA AT WASHINGTON. OK, so I missed the Oregon-Washington game. I didn't know the Huskies had Junior Coffey back from his injury. So he scores the winning TD at the end of the game. Southern Cal, though, is starting to smell the roses. Beathard, Bedsole, etc. may not lose again this year. Southern California, by 11.

OTHERS:

Dartmouth over Yale.
Ohio State over Iowa.
Minnesota over Indiana.
Arkansas over Texas A&M.
UCLA over California.

Georgia's Babb, Knowles And Hauss

End Mickey Babb (left), halfback Billy Knowles and center Len Hauss are three vital cogs in Georgia 'Bulldogs' vaunted passing attack which UNC must contain today. Babb is said to be top professional timber.

T-Babies Splashed By Turtles, 22-9

By BILL LEE

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Maryland's hard running frosh sloshed through the goo in a pouring rain to send UNC's Tar Babies to their second defeat, 22-9, here yesterday. It was the final game of the year for UNC, which finished with a 3-2 record.

The Baby Terps were in command from the opening kickoff when Tom Lalli took Danny Talbott's boot on his own four and ran 96 yards to paydirt. Lalli made an 89-yard kickoff return in Maryland's 21-14 victory over the Virginia freshmen.

Park downpour, the Tar Babies were able to complete only one drive, that in the second quarter.

Bud Phillips returned the kickoff following a Maryland field goal to his own 36. With the aid

Unable to launch a successful passing attack in the College of two passes from Talbott to Bo Wood and four carries by fullback Spencer Barrow plus a fifteen-yard penalty, the Tar Babies reached the Maryland 16.

From there Talbott faded back to pass, found nothing but Baby Terp jerseys in his backfield but eluded them with some fancy running and tossed a touchdown strike to Wood.

The Tar Babies failed to take advantage of a golden scoring opportunity in the first quarter when Jim Fortune ran the football 61 yards to the Maryland 19.

Barrow went to the 14 and Fortune then carried three times to the four but was stopped twice inside the two and Maryland took over on downs.

On the first play from scrimmage, quarterback Phil Petry fumbled and fell on the ball in his own end zone for a two-point safety and UNC's last score of the day.

A standout for Maryland was their big fullback, Whitney Marchiniak, who pile-drived through the mush and the outmanned Tar Baby line all afternoon for key yardage. John Gibson also contributed several key runs, including a 19-yard touchdown scamper for the Baby Terps' second touchdown in the opening quarter.

Georgia QB Threat May Be Whole Show

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Larry Rakestraw, the greatest thing to hit Georgia since peaches, hits Chapel Hill today. But the appearance is not expected to make too indelible an impression on UNC's own claimants to national fame.

The NCAA statistics scientists earlier this week labeled Carolina NUMBER ONE in pass defense among major college teams across the country. The numbers read: Games, 6. Attempts, 112. Completions 38. Interceptions, 11. Percentage, .399. Yards, 271, Per-Game Yards, 45.2. TDs 1.

That's quite impressive — 271 yards in six games.

To make some sort of a comparison, Rakestraw, in one game this year, gained 407 yards by passing.

Against Miami two weeks ago, the Georgia QB was 25 for 38 through the air and seven more yards by running. The performance broke the 401-yard single game passing mark established by Stanford's Dick Norman in 1959.

Currently, Rakestraw is the third-ranking NCAA passer (behind Roger Staubach of Navy and Don Trull of Baylor) and the third-ranking total offense leader (also behind Trull and Staubach). He is 72 of 128 for 984 yards and six touchdowns. His total offense mark is 1,150 yards.

Statements from the Tar Heel coaching staff to the effect that "He is the best signal-caller we've faced;" "One of the finest performers in years to have stepped on Kenan turf;" "As good a passer as there is in the country," are doubtlessly true.

But, not so incidentally, Rakestraw also leads his team in rushing (a feeble 166 yards), and this points out a definite weakness along the ground that UNC is looking to take advantage of.

When your high-yardage runner is averaging around 27 yards a game, you know where your only strength is coming from. And, however far Georgia has come this year (or however far the Bulldogs go), they do so only on the arm of Larry Rakestraw. This is not enough security to pit against the nation's seventh-ranked (in total defense) team.

Though Rakestraw has shown he is a dangerous rollout runner, Georgia appears to have no one else capable of threatening along the ground. UNC, thus, does not seem too worried about this phase of the game. It is their (up-to-now) sensational pass defense which must hold up to the challenge of Rakestraw. If it does, Carolina should win handily.

Georgia's ends are, after the quarterback, the most impressive of the Bulldog arsenal.

Mickey Babb (6-4, 227) was the big cheese in the pre-season analysis. But he is just now starting to make some noise. Babb led Georgia in receiving last season (20 catches) and is tied for the team lead at this point with 16 for 195 yards. The pros are after him for a tight end.

Alternating with Babb, a sophomore has moved in somewhat spectocularly. He is Pat Hodgson (6-1, 190), who missed last week's win over Kentucky but has still caught 16 for 285 yards. He captured nine of them against Miami (192 yards).

Barry Wilson, Georgia's split flanker, is a third Rakestraw target. Wilson has caught 12 for 123 yards so far this year.

Rakestraw's overshadowed companions in the backfield are halfbacks Billy Knowles and Fred Barber and fullbacks Leon Armbrester and Marv Hurst.

Knowles (5-10, 173) is the team captain and, average-wise, its leading rusher. He has picked up a 4.6 average with 55 yards total. Barber (5-11, 195) is probably Georgia's quickest back. He has run for 96 yards offensively and is a good linebacker on defense.

Armbrester (6-0, 186) was the Bulldogs' leading rusher last year on a four yards plus average and has gained 113 this year. But last week the other fullback, Hurst, started against Kentucky, and he may get the call again today.

Up front in the interior, Georgia has two sophomores at the guards, two seniors at a tackle and the center position and a potential All-American at the other tackle.

Wayne Brantley (5-11, 200) and Marv Smith (6-0, 187), a converted center, are the two soph guards while Len Hauss (6-2, 220) is a veteran three-year letterman at center.

The tackles are Benny Boyd (6-3, 225), a senior, and Ray Rissmiller (6-4, 230), the Bulldogs' finest lineman, who last year made the All-Southeastern Conference team as a sophomore. He is the big gun Georgia looks to on defense.

Another defensive gem is halfback Brigham Woodward, rated one of the SEC's best, who replaces Rakestraw when the ball changes hands. The Bulldogs' placekicking specialist is Bill McCullogh. He leads the team in scoring with 25 points on four of eight field goal tries and 13 of 14 conversions.

Last year he kicked a 48-yard FG against Auburn.

There are not a lot of teams left that can look at a 5-1 or even a 4-1-1 record. Yet neither of the teams today is ranked among the country's top twenty. This can probably be explained by the fact that UNC's opponents have won only 12 games, collectively, this year, and Georgia's have been even more incompetent (11 wins).

The winner today, however, should make the jump to the twenty, and rain—an equalizer of many and a definite probability—could determine who that is. Carolina should pray for rain.

UNC Ace Defensive Back Dave Braine

Carolina corner back is key to Tar Heels' nationally top-ranked pass defense. Braine also is UNC's top place-kicker and leads the Atlantic Coast Conference in conversions with a perfect 10 for 10.

—Heels Seek No. 6—

The interior of the Tar Heel defensive set-up looks like this—Richy Zarro holds down the other linebacker spot, Jerry Cabe is at middle guard and Vic Esposito and Cole Kortner are the tackles.

Of course the Tar Heels will have more to think about than containing Rakestraw and whatever running attack the Bulldogs come up with. No matter how good the defense, you won't win unless you score.

The UNC offensive attack is centered around the off-tackle bursts of Ken Willard and Kesler, and the Edge-to-Lacey pass plays. Hickey uses one to set up the other.

In addition to being the top pass receiver, Lacey is also the team's main decoy. When not flairing out for a 15-20 yard sideline pass, Lacey will take two defenders out of the play as far as possible. When this happens Edge will either toss up the middle to his tight end (Hammett), throw deep to his wingback (Jackson) or a swing to his halfback or fullback. If he decides not to pass at all, Edge will simply tuck the ball under arm and sweep his end.

The second unit, headed by quarterback Black uses the same strategy, though Black is more apt to run than Edge. Tuthill is the running back, Frank Bowman the fullback and Ward or Tom Brooks the wingback. Joe Robinson replaces Hammett at tight end, with either Gallagher or Jimmy Harrington at the split end.

Students To Vote On 3 Amendments

Three constitutional amendments will be presented in the election on Tuesday to the Student Body for its ratification. All three amendments were passed by the Student Legislature but must receive the approval of a majority of those voting to be become student law.

The first amendment would, if passed, change the name of the "Men's Interdormitory Council" to the "Men's Residence Council." The IDC Court would become the Men's Residence Council Court. The supporters of the name change claim that it is only the first step in a new concept of dormitory living.

A second amendment dealing with the IDC seeks to clarify the IDC Court's jurisdiction over violators of dormitory rules of conduct by non-dormitory residents. The amendments would delete the words "by male dormitory residents" in the provision of the Constitution which states: "The Men's nIterdormitory Court shall have original jurisdiction in cases involving infractions by male dormitory residents of dormitory rules of conduct as established by the Men's Interdormitory Council and approved by the Student Legislature."

The third amendment seeks to place the Interfraternity Council Court under the Constitution. While the Interfraternity Council is mentioned in the Constitution, no mention is made of and Interfraternity Council Court although the Court has been in existence for some time. The amendment would add the Interfraternity Council Court to the list of already constitutionally established Men's Council, Women's Council, Constitution al Council, Men's Interdormitory Court (possibly to become Men's Residence Council Court), the Women's House Councils, the Law School Court, the Dental School Court, the Medical School Court, and the Student (?)—Faculty Review Board.

The amendment states that "The Interfraternity Council shall have original jurisdiction in cases involving infractions by fraternities, fraternity members or agents thereof of rules of conduct as established by the Interfraternity Council and approved by the Student Legislature. The Interfraternity Council shall have the power to determine the composition of the Court and the procedures under which it shall operate within the limitations imposed by this constitution and subject to the approval of the Student Legislature."

In subsection I., section 7, Article II of the Student Constitution, the amendment would insert the words "Interfraternity Council Court" in the provision which states: "In cases before the Men's Interdormitory Court and the Women's House Councils, the (defendant shall have) the right to a public trial, which shall be defined as meaning the presence of no more than two representatives of the student newspaper within the chambers of the judicial body during a particular case. Only people signing a written release may be mentioned in resulting publicity.

Unless a defendant requests a public trial, the proceedings shall be kept secret, except for such information as the defendant may disclose at his discretion;"

Moody To Meet With Professors

Ralph Moody, state deputy attorney general, will speak on the Speaker Ban law at the fall meeting of the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors Monday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall auditorium.

Moody has gone on record in public assertions in favor of the law.

A panel of UNC professors—Henry Brandis Jr., Dean of the School of Law; Carl W. Gottschalk, prof. of medicine; Arnold S. Nash, prof. of religion; and Corydon P. Spruill, prof. of economics — will discuss the topic.

A question and answer period will follow the presentations.

Copies of "Campus Censorship: The North Carolina 'Visiting Speakers' Law," written by Daniel H. Pollitt, professor of law, will be distibuted to AAUP members.

Daniel A. Okun, professor of sanitary engineering, will preside over the meeting. Prof. Nash is president-elect of the UNC chapter. Assoc. Prof. of statistics W. J. Hall is treasurer and Asst. Prof. of physiology Richard L. Glasser, secretary.

The meeting is open only to members of the UNC faculty.

TRIAL POSTPONED

The trial of Ford Rowan, a UNC student charged with failure to yield the right of way when the automobile he was driving struck another student Saturday Oct. 19, has been continued until Nov. 8.

A Carrboro man has appealed a 30-day jail sentence for assault on a university student who was picketing the College Cafe last April.

Roy Lee Merritt, 27, was convicted this week in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court on a charge of assaulting Paul Hutzler, a UNC sophomore, on April 11.

Interviews For Canadian Swap Are Next Week

Interviews for the Toronto Exchange will continue next Monday and Tuesday.

Jaene Yeager and Kellis Parker, co-chairmen of the annual student swap with the University of Toronto, announced yesterday that interviews will be held in Roland Parker I from 3-5 p.m.

The program, now in its fifth year, was set up to promote international good will and understanding. Toronto students will visit here over the Duke weekend, and UNC will make a return trip during semester break.

The Canadian students will attend the Germans Club concert, tour the state government facilities in Raleigh, see the Duke game and a Playmaker production and participate in discussions. Each student will be assigned a "co-Tar Heel" during the weekend.

The interviewers will decide the 24 students who will represent UNC. 12 male students and 12 coeds will be chosen.

Petrov Won't Get Gagged

A professor from the Soviet Union will speak here Monday, but his appearance will not violate the Speaker Ban Law, a University official said yesterday.

Dr. V. V. Petrov, professor of statistics at Leningrad State University who will address a Statistics Colloquium is not according to Dr. G. E. Nicholson, head of the Statistics Department, a member of the Communist Party and his appearance will therefore not violate the law.

"He has been thoroughly investigated by the FBI and State Department," said Dr. Nicholson, "and there is no reason to think that he is politically affiliated or a member of the Party.

"He is a visiting scholar here on a purely scientific mission. We feel the state law is unfortunate but we didn't want to violate it in any way. Therefore we followed the necessary procedure in clearing the talk."

Dr. Petrov, who is an internationally known figure in probability theory, arrived in Chapel Hill last weekend and was asked on Tuesday, according to Dr. Nicholson, to address the colloquium.

"We knew far in advance that he was coming here," he said, "but we had to wait and see if he would be willing to speak."

Prof. Petrov is on a three-month scientific exchange tour which will take him to universities all over the United States. He is expected to remain in Chapel Hill until the end of the week.

Phones?

J. S. Bennett, superintendent of ground and buildings, told several student leaders that there is a definite possiblity of installing private telephones in each suite of Craige dormitory if enough interest is shown.

Bennett said that because several people have taken the initiative and have shown enough interest, the chances are very much in favor of the phone installation.

The approximate cost of the phones would be only 50 cents a month.

Telephones in rooms has been the objects of campus discussion for some time, and several individual students have had them installed. The approximate price for an individual telephone is $6.70 per month.

FOOTBALL HIGHLIHGTS

Football highlights of the game between UNC and Georgia will be shown on WUNC-TV tomorrow evening at 9:30 p.m.

Crash Kills 3 Georgians

Three University of Georgia students were killed and three others critically hurt late Friday when their car skidded into a trailer truck on U. S. 29 near Piedmont, S. C.

The students were reported to have been on their way here for the UNC-Ga. game.

Killed were Linda Kay Blaylock and Charles Kelly, both of Charlotte, N. C. and Robert Allen, Coral Gables, Fla.

STINNETT TO SPEAK

The spotlight will be on the schools during American Edution Week, being observed at UNC Nov. 10-16.

God?

What happens to students when they come to UNC and are confronted by questions such as "What is God?" and "What is the meaning of life?"

The answers to those and other similar questions will be discussed on "Encounter" Monday night at 8:30 p.m. on WUNC-TV, channel 4.

Guests will be Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of UNC's Religion Department; Rev. Harry Smith, Presbyterian campus chaplain; and Father Robert Wilken, Catholic campus chaplain.

Host for the weekly show is Dr. John Clayton, professor of Radio-TV and Motion Pictures at UNC.

General theme of the series of shows is "Minds, Manners and Morals."

Bulldogs Muzzled; 'Straw Pitchforked

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

UNC defensive backfield coach Bud Carson may not be a genius, but don't ask Larry Rakestraw about it.

The Tar Heels put their own sharp-Edged rake on Georgia's Strawboss here yesterday, jammed the muzzle on the Bulldogs' vaunted passing gun and completely obiterated the visitors, 28-7.

You wouldn't think Carolina could have possibly looked better than it did two weeks ago against NC State, but 34,000 chilled fans thought so as UNC assurred itself of the first winning season since 1958.

The Tar Heels are now 6-1, and they got that way yesterday with a pass defense that continued to wallow in magnificence and an offense that must have made Rakestraw blush all the way to his press clippings.

Rakestraw came here as the third-leading total-offense man in the country. He left last night just a withered peach. For Dave Braine, Ronnie Jackson, Eddie Kesler, Junior Edge and the rest of UNC's defensive company just laughed at his totals of eight of 17 passes for 58 yards.

The points Georgia did get came as a gift from this guy wearing stripes who saw early what would happen and decided against a shutout. The Bulldogs scored late in the first quarter on a drive of 65 yards, 55 of which were marked off in penalties against the Tar Heels.

The only penalty UNC fans could see was against Georgia — too many men on the field (11 Bulldogs and the referee).

Junior Edge, the Carolina quarterback who has had trouble getting started this year, had the greatest day of his career in leading his teammates to the impressive win.

He completed 15 of 20 passes for 189 yards, ran for 37 more along the ground, scored two touchdowns on short runs and passed for another while leading the Heels to all four scores.

The gift TD to the Bulldogs came after UNC drove 57 yards in 10 plays the second time it got the ball.

Runs of six and nine yards by Ken Willard featured the move as Carolina drove from its 43 to the Georgia 23. Here, Edge hit John Hammett with a 21-yard pitch to the seven, and two bursts by Willard and a third by Eddie Kesler got the 7-0 with 4:44 left in the first quarter.

Georgia took the opportunity then to show what a ballclub can do with 12 men.

On a fourth-and-12 from their 33, the Bulldogs kicked. A roughing the kicker penalty got them the first down.

On a third-and-18 from their 41, Rakestraw was smothered by Frank Gallagher for another six-yard loss. A personal foul against UNC gave Georgia another 15-yard break to go for another first down.

And, on a second-and-twelve from the UNC 35, The Bulldogs smiled again. Rakestraw faded a pass to end Pat Hodgson on the Carolina 12. UNC's Braine and Hodgson both went for it, both tripped over each other, and the little red flag came flying out of the striped pocket once again.

It gave Georgia the ball on the 10, and three running plays (the final two yards by Marv Hurst) and a conversion later, the score was tied 7-all. It came on the first play of the second period.

But the UNC pride was hurt. Its defense had gone seven quarters without allowing a score and this one shouldn't have happened.

The Tar Heels exchanged punts and got the ball on their 48. It took them six plays to go ahead for good. Bob Lacey, the magician, carried them most of the way.

He caught a look-in from Edge and eluded three men the professional way to get 18 yards and a first down on the first play, caught two other passes for six and seven-yard gains, and provided a decoy as Edge rolled out for a big gainer to the Georgia six.

Kesler carried for five before Edge sneaked for the second TD. It was 14-7 with 5:55 left in the half, and still Rakestraw had not completed a pass.

Larry did throw four strikes in the next series to get the Dogs to the UNC 25. But it was more bark than bite, for Clint Eudy intercepted a pass thrown by Rakestraw from a falling position to end the advancement.

The Georgia QB was obviously planning to ground the ball when he threw it, but foresight would have shown him that the mistake

Probation Given For Book Theft

A sophomore was sentenced to definite probation for two semesters Thursday night in a Men's Council trial.

The student was charged with stealing books and trying to sell them. He said he needed the money at the time.

The defendant was unable to sell the books when the book store salesman suspected that the books were not his. He then returned the books to the owner saying he had found them.

The owner accidentally found out from the salesman a few days later that someone had tried to sell his books. He called the defendant who admitted the theft and turned himself in to a member of the Men's Council.

The council felt that although the defendant had committed a "serious Honor Code violation" he had been honest enough to give his correct name to the salesman and to return the books before he was caught.

Suspension is the sentence usually given for an offense this serious, the Council said.

UNC-Duke Begin New Program

An Educational Supermarket

By GARY BLANCHARD

Imagine that you had a pocketful of money, a list of things you had long wanted to buy, and that you woke up one day and found yourself within ten miles of two of the best supermarts in the country.

Imagine that, and you have a pretty good idea of how dozens of faculty members for miles around Chapel Hill must feel as a result of the recently-announced $800,000 Cooperative Program in the Humanities from the Ford Foundation.

The Foundation is supplying the money, the faculty members are supplying the shopping list of ideas they wish to know more about, and UNC and Duke are providing the supermarts of knowledge in the form of excellent libraries.

The idea behind the program is to allow selected faculty members from liberal arts colleges in North and South Carolina, plus Virginia, to spend a semester or two at UNC and Duke, studying most anything their hearts desire.

The emphasis will not be upon bagging further degrees, but upon tilling the soil of the faculty members' minds, allowing them to probe for deeper levels of understanding, while at the same time allowing them to polish up the knowledge and teaching techniques they already have and go after more of the same.

The hope is that this cooperative venture will be sort of an educational Marshall Plan for the Humanities, which encompasses the fields of History, Philosophy, English, Classical Languages, Modern Foreign Languages, Music, Art and Theater, in an attempt to improve and strengthen man's knowledge and expertise in this area, as it is being improved and strengthened already in the Natural and Physical Sciences due to the technological revolution which the space age has usherd in.

The project also is aimed at doing something about the relative neglect of faculty members at Negro colleges and universities. The thinking here is that unless Negro professors and instructors are allowed to develop their talwents further, they can't stretch the minds and intellectual horizons of their students as modern needs dictate they must be stretched.

Profs Coming Back

What makes this program all the more striking is that it represents a departure from the Ford Foundation's usual practice of backing projects that are national in scope. This will be the first time the Foundation has agreed to underwrite a program aimed at capitalizing upon the regional strength of colleges and universities in the Humanities.

The program has three features and works this way:

First, promising faculty members from the cooperating colleges—such as Davidson, North Carolina College, Furman, and Washington & Lee — will be sought out under the direction of a joint UNC-Duke professors committee, and invited to come to UNC and Duke for a semester or a year of research and study as Humanities Fellows.

Their home-school teaching positions will be filled as much as possible by advanced graduate students from UNC and Duke, therby easing the burden of the faculty members' temporary absence and offering the graduate students valuable experience as colleg teachers.

Second, the program will include a 6-week Institute during the summers of 1964 and 1965, emphasizing research into the Medieval - Renaissance Period, with participants — known as Institute Fellows — coming from a somewhat bigger land area than the academic-year Fellows.

Third, the program will bring in outstanding scholars from around the world as Visiting Humanities Professors to serve as visiting lecturers and advisers to the Humanities Fellows for varying periods of time.

The whole thing is scheduled to get off the ground in time for an Institute next summer, followed by the first Academic-Year Fellows that fall. The first Visiting Professors hopefully will be lined up by next summer to coincide with the Institute, and will continue on into the regular academic year.

Thus the stage has been set for the educational heart of the Research Triangle to become even more of an academic mecca than it already is.

In addition, the program demonstrates anew that although UNC and Duke — one a private, the other a public institution — vie ferociously on the athletic fields, when it comes to education a high level of competition becomes a high level of cooperation.

What's White Is Right?

Last Thursday night's Student Legislature meeting produced some of the most interesting happenings in that body in quite a while. One of the tasks before the body was the approval of a number of Presidential Appointments to Student Government committees. In most cases approval is a routine matter, but Thursday night a little something extra got into the act and added some color to the usually dull debates.

That something extra was Kellis Parker. He had been appointed co-chairman of the Toronto Exchange Commission by Student Body President Mike Lawler. Parker's credentials were all in order; everyone said that he had a great deal of experience with exchange students, and that he also had a knack for organization, which the job requires. There was only one hitch. Parker is a Negro.

The debate took the classic form of practicality versus idealism. Sam Himes, representing practicality, pointed out that Parker might have trouble dealing with some of the members of the community, which the job requires, and that this might throw an undue burden on the other co-chairman, Jeane Yeager. Himes was quick to point up that he didn't condone the reactions of those people who might refuse to work with Parker, but nevertheless the Exchange might suffer.

Munny Yates, also on the side of practicality, said he felt the appointment would be a good one if it was for any other committee.

We are not quite sure what a change in committees would do for the problem, but it would appear to us that Parker is by far the most qualified man available for the Toronto Exchange.

In the first place, the student body of the University saw fit to elect him to represent our campus at the National Student Association Convention this past summer. Eight men ran in that campus-wide election and four were elected. Of the eight, Parker was second, just barely behind ex-Student Body President Inman Allen. This was an overwhelming vote of confidence in his ability to meet people from other schools all over the country and project the good image of Carolina. He was the first Negro to win a campus-wide election at UNC.

On top of that, Parker is chairman of the International Students Board, and has proved himself one of its most competent leaders.

Bob Spearman, SG vice-president, speaking on the side of practicality and idealism, summed up the question quite well. Spearman said, "while it is true that there are some people who might not want to work with Mr. Parker, . . . we should not cater to the private prejudices of some students in making public appointments such as this one."

"In fact," Spearman said, "it is really our position to show other students that this appointment should be non-discriminatory."

We whole heartedly subscribe to this position, and it is especially valid in light of the fact that the student body stated essentially the same sentiments in last Spring's elections.

The legislature eventually came to this same conclusion, and the appointment was approved. Himes, in a gracious gesture, moved for unanimity on the approval, but one or two of the 50 legislators deferred.

Howell Hall: "The Man Behind It All"

In his ten years at UNC, many persons have disagreed with Norval Neil Luxon, dean of UNC's School of Journalism, over policies and procedures in administration and over what to emphasize in the way of journalism education. No one, however, can gainsay his contribution to making UNC's Journalism School one of the foremost in the country.

We invite you to visit Howell Hall and get a glimpse of the physical results of this man's dedicated work. You will find it a bright, well-equipped building staffed by competent instructors with practical experience in journalism, and full of aspiring journalists whose names should be familiar to you from reading The Daily Tar Heel.

This is the physical plant Dean Luxon dreamed of building and administering when he came to UNC in 1953. That he achieved his goal was publicly acknowledged by UNC President William C. Friday, who referred to the Dean as, "the man behind it all."

Luxon's fight for the new quarters was long and hard, beginning with his requests to the General Assembly in 1955 and ending in success when the 1957 General Assembly appropriated the necessary funds.

Rarely has so much time, effort and money been so well-invested. Because Dean Luxon fought for his dream, and because of the far-sighted men who helped him to achieve it, the State has been greatly enriched. Rarely does a day go by when some newspaper or radio or TV station does not call, asking if any graduates are available for a job.

Indeed, a growing number of capable journalists, their roots in Howell Hall, are manning communication assignments around not only the state, but the nation and the world, at a time when those assignments take on ever-increasing importance in the lives of us all.

Because they have had a unique opportunity to study journalism firsthand, neither of the present editors of The Daily Tar Heel have majored in the subject here at the University, although each has taken several courses in it. This is perhaps fortunate, as they can therefore render a representative judgment on Dean Luxon without even a suggestion of fear or favor. And their judgment is that he is a graduate of the old school, the old ways of journalism, who has been able to adapt superbly to the new school, the new ways of journalism.

In doing so he has created a monument to his own dedication, in the highest traditions of a University where nobody stands in awe of anybody else. That he will be staying on for another five years as a teacher and adviser is welcome news indeed.

A Not-So-Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum...

A Reflection On The Past

Note — The regime of Ngo Dinh Diem was overthrown Friday by the Vietnamese army, marine and air force units.

Diem was arrested and jailed and his brother, Ngo Dinh Nhu, powerful head of the secret police, was asassinated by rebel forces.

By United Press International

President of South Viet Nam Ngo Dinh Diem has been South Viet Nam's first and only president.

A 5-foot, 4-inch dark-haired bachelor, he has ruled since 1955 after a referendum turned out Emperor Bao Dai. A Catholic who had taken a religious vow of celibacy, he was in sharp contrast to the fun-loving emperor who spent most of his time traveling.

Diem rid the nation of unduly military warlords, smashed corruption and set up the constitutional foundations for democracy. But a nation at war cannot afford the luxuries of liberal democracy, Diem believed, and South Viet Nam has been at war with the Communists since he took office.

Diem has cracked down on political opposition and opponents of his regime-including leaders of the predominantly Buddhist population-have been jailed The press is strictly controlled and his closest advisers have been members of his family, a powerful group descended from a line that defended Viet Nam against the Chinese 1,800 years ago.

Diem was born on his family's rich estate near Hue but nevertheless learned early how to till a rice paddy because his father believed his son should know something about life.

He had a religious upbringing — an elder brother is the archbishop of Hue—but rejected the priesthood and then the chance to study in France because of his opposition to French colonial rule.

At 28, Diem became a provincial governor. Three years later, in 1932, he had risen to the post of minister of interior in the French puppet regime. But three months after taking the post, he resigned because the French would not give him the independence he wanted in running the ministry.

Until the outbreak of World War II, Diem practiced passive resistance against the French, leading a secluded religious life of study. In 1947, he again tried a passive resistance program but the French banned his National Union Front,, and he went into exile.

Diem weathered two previous attempts to drive him out of office by force. In November 1960, dissident troops attempted a coup. They rallied the support of all tank units in the capital and shelled the palace. But Diem called in loyalist troops from the provinces and smashed the revolt in 30 hours.

Again in Feburary, 1962, South Vietnamese air force planes bombed and strafed the palace, tanks manned by forces loyal to Diem set up a protective ring around the palace, and army and navy units declared their loyalty to Diem. The "revolt" by what the government said were "discontented pilots" lasted about one hour.

In 1945, the Communist forces of Ho Chi Minh—now president of Communist North Viet Nam—seized Diem and his elder brother. His brother was buried alive as a "lesson" and Diem was imprisoned for four months. Ho then tried to persuade Diem to cooperate with the Communists, but Diem refused.

When the war between the French and the Communists began over the fate of Indochina, Diem went into exile.

He spent two years of his self-imposed exile at the Catholic Maryknoll Junior seminary in Lakewood, N.J., and went often to Washington to lobby against American aid for the French colonial administration in Indochina.

He returned after the Geneva conference divided Indochina into four parts — North and South Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos.

A Year Abroad

By JANE ANDERSON

Young Americans Abroad, edited by Roger H. Klein, 270 pages, $4.95, Harper and Row.

A new American generation is coming into its own, a generation which has come to maturity in the presence of hot and cold war, a generation which is vitally interested in the rest of the world. Travel has increased in popularity among young adults and study abroad is no longer unusual. Our book stores are well supplied with "how to" travel aids which describe costs, benefits, ways and means.

The latest book on the market, Young Americans Abroad, turns to a different aspect of this topic. Editor Klein has asked some important questions of ten college graduates who have spent one or more years abroad in this decade. Why does a young adult uproot himself? Why does he go where he goes? What does he find? Is the trip worthwhile?"

These questions are answered in nine essays. The analyses are well worth reading for the college student who anticipates travel or study abroad. The thought provoking reports are written with vitality and insights which will make them interesting reading for anyone who wants to know more about the reactions of the young American abroad.

Abroad is a term no longer restricted to the well worn European resorts. The reader of this book will quickly discover only one traditional country, England, included in the list of nine countries discussed. The articulate travelers lived and studied in Burma, Iran, Russia, Poland, Ghana, Kenya, Brazil and Argentina.

The surprise in the collection is the selection on England by Jane O'Reilly Jenks and Christopher Jenks, who lived in London for two years while Mr. Jenks attended the London School of Economics on a Harvard grant. This selection, "The Lonely Queue," begins with a sarcastic commentary on "a new way of life, Grantsmanship".

Writing after a disappointing two years, the Jenkses blast the growing trend of study abroad by aid of grants. "The majority of those cultivating the gentle art of Grantsmanship are wanderers. Usually unmarried and freed from financial worries for a year, these academic gypsies treat a fellowship as a year abroad rather than a year at the University of—."

It is amusing to note the one and only reference to Mr. Jenks' school: "Theoretically, as students, we should have known some people from the London School of Economics. However, the building, which is tall and gray and drear in a tiny narrow street off Aldwych, depressed us so that we hardly ever went near it . . ."

The Jenks' theory is refuted by the authors of the other selections who were all aided by grants.

These informative and interesting reports are evidence of the effort of the new generation to understand foreign cultures and their contemporary problems.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Restore Ideals

Editors, The Tar Heel,

The Honor System here at Carolina originated under the ideals of personal integrity and social responsibility to self, the system, and the parts of that system. In the development of the codes and the councils, however, the system has become more and more a punitive idea, based upon a punishment-fear reaction rather than education toward those ideals important to our formative years. The average student's adherence to the system is based upon the fear which finds its basis in the present penalty system used by our councils.

Suspension should be a punitive measure, punishment where punishment is necessary; and definitely should be invoked when punishment is required to show the violator that the system is a serious matter. Probation, however, is presently very weak when applied to the majority of our student body. This sentence prohibits etra-curricular activities as a punishment, however, only a minority of students would be seriously hindered in their activities by this sentence.

A student on probation, then, as a general rule, is not really punished, and a much more worthy purpose could be evolved if the probationary sentence were developed on a positive, educational basis rather that a questionably effective punishment. Educating the student on probation to the ideals of the system, rather than leaving him to his own devices, would tend to stimulate the respect worthy of our system, and put the entire system on firmer ground than that basis which is now founded on apathy or fear.

The idea, then, is to use punishment as it was originally designed, to add force to a system that requires it when personal integrity is dissipated; however, the corrective element found in education to the ideals, has, in the past, been overlooked. This corrective statement is, in many cases, just as important as punishment; and often would serve just as effectively. In restorng the ideals to the working processes of our Honor System, we will gain adherents by respect, as well as punishing those that need it. It will definitely increase the percentage participation in our system, without losing the sting necessary to any form of disciplinary action. Respect is much more secure than fear, and we can lose nothing by striving for more of that respect, and we will gain a great deal.

Commendation

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Of all those young ladies and gentlemen in the University who profess to be the representatives of the student body in what is known as "student government," two especially have impressed me as being competent and thoughtful, indeed exceptional . . . .

Hugo Spechar and Arthur Hays are worthy of far more than any tribute that I could express here; their contribution and value to the Student Legislature are inestimable, indeed vital . . . .

When two such outstanding students threaten to withdraw themselves from that body of student representatives on the grounds that the University administration is rendering their own work an ineffectual pretense of student self-government by its autocratic methods, then I am greatly impressed.

These gentlemen are protesting the administration's failure to maintain contact with the student body as it makes decisions influencing the students; while verbally affirming that "student government is a fact of life at Chapel Hill," the administration has repeatedly taken action that bypasses or supersedes any epression of student views. Student leaders have said that the recent decision to remove students from the appeals board is an example of a trend away from the consideration of student views; they have further protested especially the manner in which the change came about—that is, suddenly and without consultation with any student.

My own doubts as to the effectiveness of that multiplex organization known as the student government have been made known to the campus; I am not here discussing the value of having such structure of student government as we now have. But I do believe that any educational administration is unrealistic if it thinks to act as its paid members please without being attentive to the feelings and insights of the students it serves.

My own ideal runs something like this: A student is ideally a scholar no less than a faculty member is; a faculty member is ideally a student no less than an undergraduate is; we are all here for a common purpose. This ideal must be approached for the sake of the effectiveness and meaningfulness of the University; only through communication can it be advanced. To deny communication, to identify oneself as a Student (vs. the faculty, or the administration) is both immature and useless; to identify oneself as an Administrator (exempt from all the immaturity and deficiencies of student insight) is not the way to administrate, it seems to me, in the interests of all.

I commend Mr. Spechar and Mr. Hays for their courage and understanding. They have legitimately spoken out for their interest as students, realizing that no organization here is valid unless it is able to further the interests of those it serves, of those who come here to study.

I look forward to the time when the forces of the old will not be pitted against forces of the young, but both may sit at the same table and plan for common ends.

Grylx!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I had my first contact with the Student Health Service yesterday.

It was my ear. It was sore and swollen on the inside.

Because of this, I was in imminent danger of flunking everything. All my professors thought I was daydreaming when actually I just couldn't hear them. So I decided to hie myself to the infirmary and get cured.

Well, now I know why it is called the infirmary. By the time I got in to see the doctor, I was positively infirm.

There were dozens of people sitting in those hideous green chairs in that hideous green hall. All of them looked like they were dying. I felt like I was dying. From inside those offices which line the hall, I could hear occasional fragments of doctor-patient dialogues.

"I thought I told you not to remove those bandages!"

"It doesn't hurt quite as bad now, but . . ."

"Hmmm."

"Ouch, you $%&"

When the doctor finally called me in, I decided to meet my fate like a man. I had reviewed my symptoms (weight loss, falling hair and sore ear) into a full-fledged case of cancer.

The healer, a jovial and hearty fellow, greeted me by sticking a thermometer in my mouth and asking me a lot of questions. My stock replies were "grybl," "nuchsah," and "wlax." (Try talking with a thermometer in your mouth sometime.)

I was disappointed but philosophical when he diagnosed my ailment as a mere external ear infection. I figured I'd get to see the miracle of modern medicine at work, especially when he prescribed a little number called di-methorphohyperactivated frab.

"Oh boy," I thought. "He's gonna give me a lot of new antibiotics and cure this thing in about 30 seconds."

Do you know what that prescription was?

Eardrops .

Good, old-fashioned eardrops that you put in with a glass dropper.

The doctor told me it would take a long time to cure the infection and that I should come back Thursday.

I'm looking forward . . .

Wild Beast

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Perhaps all will agree that the DTH serves a useful purpose and carries many worthwhile articles (e.g. Pogo, Peanuts, Calendar, etc.); however, even a casual glance at the editorial page will reveal many unnecessary attacks on almost anyone on campus. If the DTH does not oppose some issue, it must radically advocate it.

The policy of the The Tar Heel seems to be that of a wild beast —If it moves, either kill it or eat it.

Around The Campus

By PETE WALES

Graham is remodeling its basement for a social room that will be a "cross betwen a German tavern and an English pub," according to president Harry Muir.

Muir, who took over as dorm president last Monday when Bob Shoffner resigned, said the University plans to have the job done in time for Homecoming next weekend.

The walls will be painted beige and the concrete pillars brown. New covers will be put on the tables and candles and wine bottles will decorate each one.

Muir hopes to rent a juke box on special weekends. All dorm residents will be invited to use the new room when Graham is not having a closed party or mixer.

Other plans include a railing to be built by members of the dorm around the stage for the combo.

"This will be the only real social room separate from the television room in any of the old dorms on campus," Muir said.

Will you be able to give me all the things I crave—like pizza pie and chow mein?

2. I've lined up a terrific job. There's a choice of training programs, good starting salary, challenging work, and the chance to move up. That's Equitable.

I agree—but what's the company's name?

3. Equitable—it's Equitable.

It certainly is. It's also fair, square, and just. But I would still like to know the name of the company.

4. We're not communicating. I keep telling you it's Equitable—and you keep asking what's the name.

I keep agreeing your job sounds good. But you stubbornly refuse to tell me who you're going to work for.

5. Can it be you never listen to my words? Is it possible that what I thought was a real relationship was but a romantic fantasy?

Is it conceivable that what I took to be a solid foundation was just a house of cards? That what I thought was a bright flame was merely an emotional flicker?

6. I'd hate to lose you, but at least I'll still have my job with Equitable—The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

Bubble Hasn't Burst For Win-Happy Heels

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The bubble hasn't burst yet. As a matter of fact, it was blown up a bit Saturday — as the Georgia Bulldogs deflated to the happy tune of 28-7. And you bowl people had better take note of this —Jim Hickey's Tar Heels have every intention of puncturing Clemson, Miami and Duke in just the same fashion.

"These boys make me happier every week," said Hickey in his usual soft-spoken post-game interview. "They wanted this one pretty bad and they got it."

They sure did get it. Quarterback Junior Edge threw the ball, John Hammett caught the ball, Ken Willard ran the ball and everybody had a ball. Everybody, that is, except Georgia.

"Junior has never been better," said a smiling Hammett as he unloaded his shoulder pads in the Tar Heel locker room. "Yes, this had to be my best day as a receiver. I'm really not used to being a receiver, you know," the UNC end added with a chuckle.

"Hammett really played himself a game didn't he?" exclaimed Hickey. The guy who's not used to being a receiver caught six of Edge's passes for 75 yards. And the Tar Heel coach, now assured of his first winning season, echoed the sentiments on Edge.

"This certainly was Junior's best day of the season. Maybe the best he's ever had for us."

The balding quarterback looked every bit like another pigskin-pitcher who is having trouble growing hair, but no trouble completing passes — Y. A. Tittle. Edge cashed in on 15 of 20 overheads, including a neat TD toss to Ronnie "Rabitt" Jackson.

The score came on a beautiful call by Edge. After throwing to the "short man" Joe Robinson for 12 yards on the preceding play, Edge called the same play again, only this time he threw to the "deep man" Jackson. It was the now famous "56 pass"—the same play which undid State two weeks ago.

Edge also silenced a Georgia critic who had said earlier in the week that the Fayetteville senior was a good passer, but a poor runner. Edge netted 37 yards on the ground, including two touchdown scampers of one and eight yards.

But the big ground gaining gun for the powerful Tar Heels was Ken Willard. Several banners around the campus read "Bulldoze the Bulldogs." Well, Willard was the bulldozer. The big fellow plowed over Kenan's turf for 98 yards in 25 carries.

"Willard learned his lesson last Saturday. He was trying to cut back all afternoon and they stopped him. Today he kept inside. He just put his head down and rammed right up the middle," pointed out Hickey.

"And Eddie Kesler — gee, that guy's a real football player," Hickey continued. "You know he looks like he's dying. In practice he looks like a terrible player. But on Saturday he'll kill you."

Naturally all the praise was not heaped on offense. A much-deserved share of the plaudits went to the Carolina defense, which yesterday proved it is one of the nation's best.

The Bulldog's Larry Rakestraw was completely throttled. He managed only seven completions in 18 tries, and most of these came on fairly harmless rollouts. His total aerial production was 58 yards. This is 106 yards off his pre-game average! Add to this the interceptions by guards Clint Eudy and Jay Malobicky and you begin to see just how great that pass defense is. The per-game allowance to the opponents is now a miserly 47.0 yards.

Hickey also praised the work of the forward wall. He noted that he had to depend on three ends for nearly the whole game, with two ends Robinson and John Atherton) hobbled by injuries. Frank Gallagher, Bob Lacey and Hammett all did their work to perfection. For that matter, the whole team was near perfect. And everyone is talking about it. The bubble hasn't burst.

'Dog Coach Rates Heels With 'Bama

By MAT FRIEDMAN

A man who should know thinks the UNC football team ranks with the best in the country.

"UNC is as good as any team we have played this season. I think they are close to Alabama."

Georgia Coach Johnny Griffith should know. His Bulldogs were beaten 32-7 by the fourth-ranked Crimson Tide on opening day.

"We'll just have to forget about this one," said a rather disconsolate Griffith after Georgia's 28-7 defeat here yesterday. "We just got beat and beat real bad by a good football team. I think they certainly deserve to be rated in the top twenty."

Someone asked about UNC fullback Ken Willard. "I wish you wouldn't even bring that up," said Griffith. He was just great all day."

Larry Rakestraw was even higher in his praise of Willard. "Man, that guy is something else," said the Bulldog quarterback.

"We knew UNC had a good passing attack," said Griffith, "and the pass defense did a real good job covering, but Rakestraw just wasn't throwing the ball well at all. Sometimes it looked like he was throwing it up into the stands."

Rakestraw agreed, but had a slightly different version. "I just don't think we realized how good Carolina was," he said. They had a lot better team than we expected. We knew they were good, but not this good.

"The UNC linemen were shifting and stunting all afternoon, and messing up our pass blocking. Every time we had our blocks set, someone would shift.

"Their defense is probably not as good as some teams we've played, but they controlled the ball well all afternoon. I just don't think we were up for this one."

"I think Carolina wanted to win this one more than we did," said Griffith. "I'd like to know what the boys were thinking about. They certainly were not up for it. We just didn't have any sharpness or quickness. .. ... .

"We were forced to run more in the second half because of field position," he said. "Field position hurt us all day, in fact, and kept our passing attack down.

Griffith singled out Willard, Bob Lacey, and Junior Edge as Carolina standouts. "Edge had a real great day, and that Lacey is a great football player," he said.

Cardplayers Victors Again

By AL KAPLAN

The Emerson Cardplayers continued to dominate the intramural football scene as they won again, this time a 44-0 trouncing of the Victory Village Bagel Belchers Thursday. Ted Hoehn put on a fine show for Emerson by scoring one TD, two PATs and a 30-yard field goal.

Bob Cornwell scored two touchdowns to pace the Alexander Poobahs to a 25-0 thrashing of the Town Lodgers. Jim Hardison and Charley Hanchey scored one TD each as the Poobahs moved into the quarter finals of the tag football playoffs.

The parker Panthers ended Navy's hopes of the football championship, as they defeated the Mermen, 20-14. Jerry Curry scored two touchdowns and Jeff Hollander added another for Parker. Don Boal and Bill Sessoms provided Navy's TDs.

George Adams scored two touchdowns to pace the Town Rats tot a 35-2 victory over the AFROAC. Stu Orgain, John Crudup, and Tom Broyhill also tallied TDs for the Rats. The Parker Playmakers won over the BVP Bombers, 12-6,in overtime. Ralph Hobbs two TDs, one in the overtime period, provided Parker with the win. By winning Parker now has two teams in the football quarter finals.

Stan Thompson tallied two touchdowns and Tom Peterson one to lead the Mangum Redskins to a 23-0 victory over the Lewis Lions. Mangum is now in the unenviable position of playing Emerson, which still hasn't yielded any points in six games.

In frat games, SAE remained undefeated, as they whipped Kappa Sig, 50-0. Brooks Reed, intramural's leading scorer, tallied four touchdowns. Sam Applegate scored two touchdowns and Bob Segrest, one of the leading scorers, tallied once.

End John Hammett Deals A Hand

-Peach Shortcake-

was costly. His team got past midfield only once thereafter.

That was just after intermission when the Tar Heels could not get started because Edge's screen pass to Willard was intercepted by Len Hauss at the UNC 21.

Fred Barber burst for four, Hurst got a yard. But the danger ended one play later when Rakestraw spotted some "Band Day" babe in the stands and threw a third-and-five flare pass from the 16 over Fred Barber's head to her. Barber was all alone in the flat at the time.

Bill McCullough's 34-yard field-goal attempt was wide to the left and, leading 14-7, Carolina was storming.

But the shortcake could not be baked 'till the fourth quarter. Because, even though UNC held Rakestraw without a completion again in the third period, the Tar Heels themselves were just as ineffective. Thy moved to the Georgia 43 once in the stanza but got no further, and Bill Edwards had to punt.

Man, they wrote a different script in the last period. UNC turned the peaches to pits as the Heels moved through Georgia like Sherman.

Starting from his own 13, Edge was the general as the offense tore off 14 plays of ball control for a touchdown.

Willard, who carried 25 times for 98 yards in the mid-40's degree weather, picked up 18 yards during the drive while Hammett caught two passes for 15 and 11-yard gains. Joe Robinson, ushered in when Hammett was injured on the latter catch, also took in a 12-yard aerial to get the ball to the Georgia 16. But the big play came next when Edge hit rabbit Ronnie Jackson on a beautiful pattern deep in the right corner of the end zone for the TD.

Dave Braine kicked the third of his four extra points (He is 14 for 14 on the year), and the Dogs were dead with 8:56 left.

But Edge was still not through. Forced to punt after the next series Georgia took it on the chin again.

When a pass to Lacey was intercepted in the end zone, and the Bulldogs got out to their own 41, Kesler knocked down the Strawboss' last pass, and UNC took over with 3:38 remaining.

Edge guided them in on seven plays, the big gainer, two runs by the Big E of nine and eight yards. The last one went for the touchdown, and Edge bowled over three men to reach the corner.

The score was 28-7, and the Southeastern Conference, probably just as much as Georgia and its ace peach, had been unmercifully humbled.

Duke Mauled

ATLANTA (UPI) — Georgia Tech's Billy Lothridge set a national field goal record Saturday in the dazzling triple-threat performance that led the Yellow Jackets to a 38-6 homecoming victory over Duke.

The Tech senior quarterback kicked field goals of 31, 38 and 53 yards to raise his collegiate career total to 19—two more than the previous record set by Auburn's Ed Dyas from 1958 to 1960.

But place kicking was just one of Lothridge's many talents. He threw two touchdown passes, kicked three extra points, turned in numerous long runs and punted for an average of 46 yards.

Can Booters Stop Maryland?

By RON LOGAN

At three o'clock Monday afternoon on Fetzer Field, North Carolina's soccer team has a good chance of succeeding where everyone in the ACC has failed since the conference was formed.

What is this unaccomplished feat? Defeating Maryland's powerful soccer team which has been the terror of southern soccer since coach Doyle Royal took the helm.

The Tar Heels themselves have gone 16 long years without a win over the Terps, but, with a strong, experienced team and with the home field advantage, Carolina may be able to avenge the long string of setbacks. Last year at College Park, UNC fell to the terps 7-0 after putting up a fierce struggle in the first half. A win Monday would give the Heels a big push toward the 1963 title. Only Duke would stand in the way of an undefeated record in league play.

Only UNC and Maryland are undefeated in the ACC. State, Duke, and Virginia have fallen to the Terps, while the UNC squad has whipped State and tied Virginia.

Coach Marvin Allen of UNC feels that his team has a good chance of defeating the national runnerup crew from College Park. "The home field could be of some help to us, and, if our boys are ready to play the type of game they're capable of, we should give them a real battle," he said.

All hands should be ready to go Monday. George Biem and Bill Haywood return from the injured list, and, according to Biem. "If we get an early jump on them, I think we'll take them."

The records of the two teams going into this contest are 7-1 for Maryland and 4-2-1 for Carolina. The Terps only loss was to an Army squad reputed to be the best ever at West Point.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?

All depends on why he uses it.

Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.

So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?

Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.

How intelligent!

Law School Dean May Step Down

By HUGH STEVENS

It was learned here yesterday that Henry P. Brandis, Jr., dean of the UNC Law School, plans to step down from his post at the end of this year.

Brandis, reached at his home late yesterday, refused to confirm or deny the report, confining himself to "no comment."

Reliable sources here discounted rumors that Chancellor Aycock may be leaving his current post to assume this one, since Aycock has made clear his desire to completely disassociate himself from administrative duties, at least for a few years.

Brandis assumed his post in 1949, after serving on the Law School faculty for nine years.

His services have been much in demand in regard to state and national commissions studying legal matters and on the home front he has been much respected for his outspoken views on many matters of controversial nature over which some in the academic community choose to remain silent.

In 1959, Dean Brandis resigned from the Chapel Hill because the board refused to accept the application of a Negro to an all-white school. He has also defended the members of the faculty in their position on academic freedom, saying that academic freedom is not dying of neglect. He has stated that the University faculty is not afraid to speak, with the exception of a few "nervous nellies" who hesitate to speak for what he calls "the wrong reasons."

Brandis was born in Salisbury, Feb. 8, 1909, the son of a railroad worker. He graduated from Carolina in 1928 and won his LL.D. degree in 1931 from Columbia University.

He practiced law in New York City for two and one-half years, returning to North Carolina as associate director of the Institute of Government. In 1936-37 he was Instructor in Tax Administration with the University. From 1937 to 1939 he was secretary of the State Tax Classification Commission, and in 1939-40, he was chief of the Research Division of the State Dept. of Revenue.

He joined the law faculty in 1940 as an assistant professor and rose to full professor of law in 1947.

During World War II, Brandis served in the U. S. Naval Reserve, his tour of duty including Iwo Jima and Okinawa aboard the USS Texas. He returned to inactive duty as a Lt. Colonel.

The reason for Brandis's resignation apparently is that he will have served three five-year terms by the end of next spring, and custom dictates he hold the post no longer. He is expected, however, to stay on at the Law School as a professor.

Peahead After Lacey, Kortner

By MAT FRIEDMAN

The New York Giants hope to draft two UNC players, end Bob Lacey and tackle Cole Kortner, The Daily Tar Heel learned Saturday.

Douglas C. ("Peahead") Walker, former coach at Wake Forest and Yale and now a southern area scout for the NFL Eastern Conference champions, revealed at halftime of the UNC-Georgia game Saturday that he feels the two players are definitely professional material.

"We (the Giants) will draft Lacey and Kortner if we get a chance," he said.

"Lacey has great moves and fine hands," commented Walker on the 6-3 205-pound end from Pelham, N. Y., "and he runs very well after he catches the ball. He will probably be very high on the draft list because several teams are interested in him."

Although it has been assumed for some time that Lacey would be drafted by a professional team, the mention of Kortner came as something of a surprise. The six - foot 234-pounder from Greenwich, Conn., did not even come out for football until his sophomore year and was not a regular on the first unit at the start of this season.

"Kortner is a real strong blocker," said Walker, "and he looks real good on the line. I don't know if any other teams are interested in him."

Lacey has caught 28 for 306 yards so far this season. Last year, he set an ACC record with 668 yards on 44 catches and was a unanimous all-ACC pick.

In addition to the two seniors, Walker named halfback Ken Willard, fullback Eddie Kesler, and end Frank Gallagher, all juniors, as possible future pro prospects.

"Willard is a great runner," he said. "Kesler is a very good blocker and a fine runner even though he is not too fast. Gallagher is a real fine defensive end. He rushes the passer well and is very quick."

Walker also had high praise for the Tar Heels as a unit.

"I think they definitely deserve to be rated in the top twenty," said a man who has seen practically every top team in the South.

"They have a real fine ball club. I think the pass defense is real good and deserves to be up at the top. It is a combination of a fine rushing line and a good secondary.

"If they go through the rest of the season without a defeat," he continued, "they should have a real fine chance of going to a bowl. The Duke game probably is the key one. It should give them the most trouble."

Walker also expressed interest in two Georgia players, star quarterback Larry Rakestraw and end Mickey Babb. Even though they are not throwing to him today," Walker said, "Babb is a fine end."

Meet The Candidates

UP SP

The University Party candidates for freshman class offices are: Sam Kellett, president; Mickey Gamble, vice-president; Susie Warren, secretary; Ken Traub, treasurer; and Maureen Shannon, social chairman.

Sam Kellett attended Westminister School in Atlanta, where he was captain of the football team and was chosen as "most valuable lineman". He is a member of the Young Republican Club and the Fellowship of Christian Athletes at UNC.

"Last year's freshman drop-out rate was so alarmingly high that I am giving primary emphasis to the promotion of a studious atmosphere and the inauguration of two class organized academic programs," he said. "First, we shall have sch said. "First, we shall have scheduled review sessions with selected instructors the night before important quizzes. Second, a Freshmen Stnudy Council will be organized to arrange for individual tutoring."

"My platform also plans to strengthen our class through strong extra-curricular and student government participation.

Mickey Gamble attended Lee Edwards High School in Asheville, where he was a member of the French and Latin Clubs and active in student government. He attends UNC on an academic scholarship.

"If our class is to be successful, each member must be oriented through effective leadership to use his abilities in the area where he is best suited," he said. "The scholars must have full details about "A" sections and honors programs; the athletes must know about the specific needs for them in the intramural and varsity programs; and the classmates with extra-curricular ability should know about what they can do for the various organizations."

Susie Warren was a member of the junior and senior prom committees at Needham Broughton High School in Raleigh. She was active on the student council.

"Every day freshman must know of the social, athletic and extra - curricular opportunities open to them, and it is important that they be well informed s that they can select what is best suited to them," she said. "I want to have a scheduled "Freshman Column" in the Daily Tar Heel, a regular newsletter, and pamphlets on our projects and outstanding class-

The Student Party candidates for freshman class offices are Jim Brame, president; John Hedrick, vice-president; Mary King, secretary, Jim Hubbard, treasurer; and Anne Clemmons, social chairman.

JIM BRAME was president of his class for three years at Durham high school. He is president of the State DeMolay, was vice-president of the State Student Council and a delegate to the National Student Council convention. He was also a member of the National Honor Society.

"The goal of the SP candidates for freshman offices is to unify our class," he said. "We are presenting a unified platform which we think is realistic and workable.

"We will try to achieve 'Progress through Unity' this year."

JOHN HEDRICK was vice-president of the senior class at Greensboro Senior High School, where he also served as vice-president of the Service Club and was a member of various student government committees. Captain of the senior basketball team, he is a member of UNC's freshman team.

"One of the methods of attaining class unity is through class spirit, and the SP candidates propose to sponsor pep rallies and bus trips to games played away from home," he said. "In addition, we would organize a freshman talent show."

MARY KING is immediate past Governor of Girls' State and serves as vice-president of the national organization. She was selected as "Best All-Around Student" at Greensboro Page High School, where she was also president of the Spanish Club, president of the Playmakers, a varsity cheerleader, junior and senior class president and a member of the swimming and tennis teams. She is a member of the 1963-64 Yack Court.

"One of our ideas is to have a Freshman Weekend in the spring," she said. "We would start off on Thursday night with a speaker, such as Dave Gardner, have a hootenanny on Friday night featuring a nationally-known folksinging group and end the weekend with a dance with W.C. girls on Saturday night."

JIM HUBBARD was an honor graduate of Rocky Mount High School. He was sports editor of the yearbook, lettered in tennis for three years, served as treasurer of the junior class and president of the sophomore class and was runner-up in the election of governor of Boys' State.

"Of course, to have a successful year we must have finances, and the SP candidates feel that

UNC Student Roughed Up Sat. Night

By JOEL BULKLEY

Doug Tilden, a 20 year-old University student, was roughed up by several unidentified persons, apparently students, attending a joint DKE-Zete fraternity party at the DKE house Saturday night.

Tilden received a black eye and a bloody nose from the encounter.

The incident apparently stemmed from the fact that Tilden went to the party with Kellis Parker, a Negro UNC student. Neither campus nor Chapel Hill Police, however, had any record of the incident.

Tilden, who was reluctant to discuss the fracas, said he was struck several times then dragged to a back room where he was thrown onto a couch before being hustled out the door.

DKE officials, Bill Davis, house president and Merrimen Gregory, social chairman, said they knew nothing of the incident but indicated they would check into it.

House Manager Bill King said, "If it happened, we regret it. We don't know that it did but we're going to check into it."

Tilden related the incident saying he and Parker arrived at the party around midnight when Parker joined in with the band playing his trombone.

"A few minutes later," Tilden said, "a group of boys walked into the party room and asked me to leave by way of the back room. Then another fellow walked up beside me, asked me if I was a student and other personal questions like was I a friend of Kellis' and was I his manager?

"Another fellow walked up and made some derrogatory comment about Negroes in general. One fellow, who claimed he had hired the band, said something about me having a lot of gall to show up uninvited. I didn't understand what he was talking about since it was supposed to be an open house.

A DKE spokesman Monday confirmed that the party had been an open house.

Tilden continued, "The warning lights for coeds to leave flashed at 12:45 p.m. and I received a a few blows, a bloody nose, a black eye and a few blows to the stomach—before being dragged to the back room. Someone threw me down onto a couch and said, 'when I say for you to leave, I expect you to do so.'

"I left the room, stood in the hall for a minute and then some people grabbed my arm. I shook them off and then said to Kellis, who had stopped playing in the band by that time, let's leave. As we left two fellows followed us out to the porch and watched us leave." He added that he had lost his raincoat at the party.

Tilden, said he had no plans to file a complaint with the Inter-Fraternity Council.

CUSC Backs Trustees On Ban Decision

By HUGH STEVENS

RALEIGH — The Consolidated University Student Council, meeting here Sunday night, unanimously backed the Board of Trustees by passing a strongly-worded resolution urging repeal of the Speaker Ban Law.

The resolution says that the law is "inconsistent with the democratic principle of the free exchange of ideas in conjunction with critical inquiry in pursuit of truth."

The law, it states, "reflects adversely on the administrative officials of state-supported colleges and universities and may do irreparable harm to the academic excellence" of those institutions.

In other business, Bob Spearman of Chapel Hill was appointed chairman of a committee to study arrangements for next year's CU Day at Chapel Hill.

Other committees were set up to study constitutional revisions for the council, to work on a film of the Consolidated University and to set up a calendar of events among the three branches. It was also suggested that a revolving newspaper column be started to exchange news among the schools.

The council's next meeting will be in Greensboro on Dec. 8.

Record Turnout Is Expected At Polls

Fifteen class offices and 19 honor council posts will be filled today in the annual fall elections.

Arthur Hays, chairman of the Elections Board, predicted yesterday that a record number of students would vote today. "There seems to be much more interest this year than in the past, and this can be attributed to the number of outstanding candidates," he said.

Polls will be open today from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., and the actual counting of ballots will begin at 8:30 p.m. tonight. Election results will be posted in the Rendevous Room of GM tonight. Due to the lateness of the ballot-counting, the Daily Tar Heel will not carry the results until the Thursday edition.

"We will need help in counting the ballots," said Hays. "Anyone who is interested should be at GM by 8:30."

In the freshman, sophomore, and senior class elections, a student may only vote for candidates of his own class. All students except those coming under the original jurisdiction of the Law, Dental, and Medical School Courts are eligible to vote for the constitutional amendments submitted to the Student Body for its ratification.

Each voter will be required to show his ID card and have it stamped before he will be given a ballot. He will also be required to sign a pledge stating that he has not voted previously in this election and is voting at the proper polling station. Violations of this pledge will be considered Honor Code violations.

All men and women dormitory residents will find ballot boxes in their dorms with the following exceptions: Connor wen will vote in Winston, residents of Emerson Stadium Fieldhouse will in Ruffin, and Kenan women will vote in McIver. Craige residents will be able to vote in their dorm or at the Men's Dormitory District I box in Y-Court. The residents of Ehringhaus will also be able to vote either in their dorm or at the Men's Dormitory District VII box in Y-Court.

The residents of Town Men's District I (all town men students residing in the area bounded by Columbia St. on the east, Cameron Ave. on the north, and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the west and south) will vote at the Carolina Inn or the Naval Armory.

Residents of Town Men's District II (all town men students residing in the area bounded by Cameron Ave. on the south, Columbia St. on the east, and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the north and west and the city of Carrboro) will vote at the Scuttlebutt and their box in in Y-Court.

The residents of Town Men's District III (all men students residing in the area bounded by Columbia Street on the west and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the north, south, and east) will vote at GM and their box in Y-Court.

Residents of Town Men's District IV (all men students residing in the area outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro) will vote at their box in Y-Court.

Residents of the Town Women's District (all women students living in Victory Village and in buildings not owned by the University) will vote at the Victory Village Housing Office or at their boxes at GM or in Y-Court.

19 Council Seats Draw 31 Hopefuls

Thirty-one candidates for the Men's and Women's Council will be seeking the votes of the Student Body as it goes to the polls today.

The district races for the Men's Council are characterized by competition for every seat. Several Women's Council candidates have no competition and one district, Women's Judicial III composed of the Nurses Dorm, has no official candidate seeking either it full-year or six-month council seats.

The official candidates are as follows:

Men's Judicial District I-(2 seats)-Franklin Adkinson, Jr., Rick Crowder and Tom McAuley.

Men's Judicial District II-(2 seats)-Paul Dickson, Bill Robinson, Gene Snuggs and John Ward.

Men's Judicial District III-(1 seat)-John G. Dunn, III, Bayard Harris and Armistead Maupin. Fred Amend has declared as a Write-in candidate.

Men's Judicial District IV-(1 seat)-Jim Little, Bob Payton and Kent Peterson.

Men's Judicial District V-(3 seats)-Mac Boxley, George Butler, Stephen Hoyle, Bryan Simpson, Bill Taylor, and Pete Wales.

Women's Judicial District II (1 seat for one year)—Sara Anne "Cissy" Trott. (1 seat for six months)—Mary Susan Kirk.

Women's Judicial District III—(1 seat for one year)—No official candidate. (1 seat for six months)—No official candidate.

Women's Judicial District IV—(1 seat for one year)—Jean L. Anderson. (1 seat for six months)—Audrey Bunce and Dee Jarman.

Women's Judical District V—(2 seats for six months)—Susan Erickson, Rita Sandman, and Betty Ward.

Sprechen Sie Deutsch!

"Lernt Deutsch," or "Let's Learn German" is a new program series premiering Tuesday, on WUNC Radio.

The weekly program, featuring announcers from the German Broadcasting Company, will be presented every Tuesday night at 7:45 p.m.

The series will begin with Lesson One of the First Course for Beginners. The listener will hear some 22 vocabulary words in the first lesson, spoken in an everyday conversation. Each lesson will contain about the same number of words; and each third lesson, the words will be repeated.

The program series is planned for both semesters.

SENIOR CLASS CABINET

There will be a meeting of the Senior Class Cabinet at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday night at Howell Hall.

'Pretty Awful' Says Morgan

By PETER HARKNESS

Present radio and television programming "is pretty awful," noted ABC network news commentator, Edward P. Morgan, said Saturday.

In an informal talk with a class in Radio, Television, Motion Pictures 45, Morgan praised Newton Minow, past chairman of the Federal Communications Commission for his criticism of radio and television.

Regarding the government's intervention into the mass media, Morgan said there was a legitimate reason for the government's "sticking their nose in." He explained that stations must be licensed and therefore must set some sort of standards.

He continued that a certain amount of government control "is a danger that we have to face."

"We must realize how much we of the industry have been short-changing the public," he said.

"I would like to see radio and television stimulate more controversy. Instead of taking Minow's criticism at face value, we became hostile."

Morgan mentioned the ABC station in Raleigh, WRAL, as evidently being somewhat biased. He said he wondered why the public, especially the University, hadn't made their discontent known.

"We must exert our individual responsibilities. It would be a very healthy situation if the public would tackle this problem. I am discouraged that since Minow's statements we have done so little to improve this situation."

The newsman explained that sponsors will frequently change scripts.

He said, "I have always felt it was ridiculous to let the manufacturer of some ladies' product become the drama critic of radio and television.

"Improvement will be a triangular sort of thing with a rising responsibility on the part of the broadcasters, a reaction from the public and an increase of interest from the government, which must be handled rather delicately."

In a short question and answer period following the talk, Morgan praised the televised debates in the 1960 Presidential campaign as "one of the best things that has happened to political democracy in a long time."

When asked if he thought the people didn't approve of poor programming, Morgan said that broadcasters were still wrong. He said that they must lead a little bit rather than cater to public taste.

He told another questioner that ABC could not tell Jesse Helms, WRAL-TV editorialist, what he should or should not say. He said that a network had no claim to what an affiliate did, only to those few stations that are owned and operated by the network.

Will Discuss Review Board

By PETE WALES

Three faculty and administration officials will appear before Student Legislature tonight concerning the faculty decision two weeks ago to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

Dr. Gordon Cleveland, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, Dean of Men William Long and Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey will speak to the body and answer questions.

"The only discussion will be about the decision of the faculty committee," said Bob Spearman, speaker of Legislature. "We will not concern ourselves with the Honor Council proposals or any bills."

Dean Cathey said yesterday that he would present some of the history of the Board, but would leave discussion of the faculty decision to Dr. Cleveland.

"Until the decision, I wasn't sure of the problem," he added.

Dean Long said he would have no formal presentation but would make himself available for questions.

"Whether our positions are accepted or not, at least there will be better communication.

"The inherent problem of the University has always been extremely poor communications."

Both men mentioned that the students would be allowed to present their case at the next meeting of the Faculty Council, the first Friday in December.

Dr. Cleveland was not available for comment.

Two past presidents of the Student Body were contacted for their reactions to the faculty's decision.

Eli "Sonny" Evans, president for the 1956-57 school year and now an attorney in Durham, expressed surprise at the change.

"I haven't followed the progress of the Review Board since I left, but I've heard that it has been successful.

"So if this decision represents any philosophical change toward Student Government at Chapel Hill, I'm rather shocked."

Evans was under the impression that when the Board was created in 1956, it was done permanently and not as an experiment.

"That was Chancellor Aycock's first year in office," Evans recalled. "We were rather excited about the creation of the Board at the time because we felt that a new and progressive era had arrived in faculty-student relations.

"The feeling at the time was that students, faculty and Administration were to work together in a cooperative effort for the good of the University community.

"Apart from that, the theory was that the Board was a step in the appeals process for the student who wanted to appeal an Honor Council decision. The Chancellor, of course, was the last resort."

David Grigg, president for the 1960-61 school year and now in Duke Law School, questioned "the wisdom of taking this out of the students' hands.

"During my administration, there was strong faculty disappointment with the Honor Council. We were on excellent terms with the Administration, however.

"We held consultations with both groups all during the year and made several changes. We did away with the Student Council and with the jury system.

"These changes were partly due to faculty disappointment in the Honor System, but mostly

Your Chance To Speak Today, So Speak

The campus goes to the polls today to elect class officers and honor council representatives, and we hope the prediction of a record turnout actually comes true.

With very few exceptions, the candidates are well qualified, and much interest seems to have been generated so far. The platforms which have been advanced seem to be realistic, possibly indicating a new approach to campus politics by the two parties, and there would seem to be the probability that these class elections will produce some worthwhile leaders this year.

But names won't be the only things on the ballot today. Three constitutional amendments will be presented for ratification.

The first would, if passed, change the name of the "Men's Interdormitory Council" to the "Men's Residence Council." The IDC Court would become the Men's Residence Council Court along with the first change. This is supposed to be one of the first steps in a new concept of dorm . . . er, Residence Hall living, and there really isn't any reason why it shouldn't pass.

The second amendment dealing with the IDC seeks to clarify the IDC Court's jurisdiction over violators of dormitory rules by non-dormitory residents. It would give the Men's IDC original jurisdiction in cases involving infractions of dorm rules, regardless of who committed the infraction. It is an effort to streamline the IDC, and should also pass.

The third amendment up for ratification seeks to place the Interfraternity Court under the Constitution. The IF Council is mentioned, but not the Council Court. This is merely for clerical purposes since it has been working this way for some time now. This is about as controversial as the other two being presented, and as such it should be passed with no problems.

The fact that these three amendments are not of earth-shaking import does not indicate that the whole election is without meaning or that they should be ignored. The people you elect today will be your spokesmen for the year, and class officers play an important part in the success or failure of the class as a whole.

All three of the amendments should be passed, and your vote today can make student Government a bit stronger in the coming year.

Let's Heed Civil Rights Storm Warnings

A mid-West member of the House Rules Committee hoisted storm wornings over the civil rights bill Sunday, saying that "failure to pass an effective civil rights act might actually wreck the United States."

Without such an act, said Missouri's Democratic Rep. Richard Bolling, "the Negro and the other civil rights people in this country would feel that their government had let them down.

"They would almost inevitably rely on civil disobedience. Almost inevitably, also, as they did this, irresponsible elements, not the responsible elements in the civil rights movement, would move in.

"Then there would be riots and there would be bloodshed, and if this were to happen, I fear that the white majority of the country would harden against the Negro and it might be a very long tim before we could get effective legislation.

"The result of this would be to really destroy American society and make it absolutely impossible for the United States to fulfill its role as the leader of the free world."

This is essentially what President Kennedy was saying last summer in his address to the nation on civil rights. He was not saying the Negro should take to the streets to secure his rights, as many have interpreted his remarks, but rather that this bill is needed to give the Negro some recourse other than the streets.

Bollings' echo of Kennedy's sentiments show how much more serious the civil rights situation has become. It is a minor miracle that the Negro has been as patient, as forbearing, as he has been, and it is long past time for the rest of us to continue to draw on the Negro's willingness to see his grievances redressed.

It is clearly time for all of us to stop mouthing bromides about not being able to legislate equality and get to work to legislate against inequality—which is the essential purpose of the civil rights bill now before the Congress.

The bill must be passed, and passed in this session of Congress. The land of the free and the home of the brave has dawdled too long already on this matter.

It is undoubtedly too much to ask of our North Carolina delegation that they reconsider their anti-civil rights stance and vote for this bill. But at least let us inform them by letter and telegram that we cannot abide their shortsighted catering to irrational fears.

Good Thing Maestro Showed Restraint

That speaker ban leaves us fidgety sometimes . . .

. . . Like Friday night when we sat through a barely-legal performance of the Moscow Chamber Orchestra.

The concert was exceptional. The capacity crowd was receptive even to the point of applauding each movement of a Mozart symphony.

We were entranced by the conductor's feeling for the masters' works. His hands grew tense and gnarled on one harsh piece by Bartok, then seemed relaxed and spritely at a cheerful point in Mozart.

And after this splendid program, we stood and shouted bravo with several hundred others as this alien group—unlike our own National Symphony—responded with five separate encores.

But through it all, we were nervous. As the distinguished Communist, Rudolf Barshai, came out to acknowledge each ovation, we shuddered that he might say "thank you."

It's illegal, you know.

Hoodlumism

The apparent instance of hoodlumism that occurred at the DKE House Saturday night is bad all the way around. Not only did it result in one student being roughed up by a team of drunk punks, it also calls into question the character of the members of the DKE and Zeta Psi, which co-hosted the party, when they quite possibly had nothing to do with the incident.

We are glad to see that the house leaders plan to look into the incident and determine who was responsible for it.

Marches Are Self-Defeating

By CLYDE WILSON

Offhand, can anyone think of anything more self-defeating than these silly performances known as "freedom marches?"

I confess that I do not want to live next door to anyone of any race above the age of 12 who runs around in a public street singing, shouting, swinging, swaying, clapping and jumping up and down for any reason.

All the "freedom marches" accomplish is to confirm in any wavering minds the image of the Negro as an emotional, empty-headed, shiftless, singing, fool.

I respectfully submit, this is not the sort of behavior that is considered becoming to responsible men and women who are demonstrating their capacity for first class citizenship.

If integration of the kind the "freedom marchers" are demanding can be achieved in America, it will be achieved when individual Negroes in large numbers demonstrate to their fellow citizens that given the chance they can be as competent and dependable doctors, lawyers, bricklayers and secretaries, as decent and conscientious citizens as anyone else.

Thousands have done so. Most have not.

What are they going to do when they get every court order and law they could possibly desire, when they have every policeman working over-time to coerce their every demand, and they run up against the solid wall of the fact that the majority of Negroes are still not equipped for first class citizenship?

Last summer I watched several teeen-age Negro CORE "commandoes" insolently berate the mayor of Winston-Salem because this and that place in the city was not integrated.

Not only were they badgering a man who had been working night and day and staking his reputation to get them everything they wanted, they were also unable to grasp, after repeated explanations, the elementary intellectual distinction between public and private property.

When I see a swaying mob in front of a restuarant shouting "We want freedom" it occurs to me that they must think freedom is inside of a hamburger bun.

There is of course no "freedom" which deprives one man of his positive rights to enforce the vague longings of another man for equality.

The things that extremists are now demanding, like forced access to private property and favored job treatment, have nothing to do with freedom.

They are not things that are demanded by men who want to be free to make their own way in the world. They are things that are demanded by men who want to be the special wards and favorites of the state.

The Negro leaders are not asking for the kind of freedom that self-reliant Americans honor. They are asking for even more of the governmental paternalism of which Negroes already have the lion's share.

In short, they want the Federal Government to replace Ol' Massa who's in the cold, cold ground.

A VIEW FROM THE HILL

By ARMISTEAD MAUPIN, JR.

There it lay in the mailbox. It looked innocent enough. But—somehow—we sensed that this little red, white and blue card bore a message so ominous, so insidious that its impact would be devastating. The words leaped out in bold, red type: "YOUR ZIP CODE IS HERE!"

My WHAT is here?

"YOUR ZIP CODE IS HERE!" What is it? It's a new nationwide zone system to improve your mail delivery. How does it work? It's an extension of the old familiar zone system, insuring faster, more efficient . . . ."

This made us feel better. We have a warm spot in our heart for the old familiar zone system. Then, in one horrible moment, we caught sight of five little numbers glaring at us from the lower lefhand corner—27515.

Now, for someone who had difficulty comprehending the 6 in Math 6, figures like these play havoc. Our mind darted back to a long distance phone call several weeks ago . . . .

"Operator, I'd like to place a call to Raleigh to the residence of . . . ."

"For your added convience, sir, we now have D.D.D."

"Ma'am?"

"Direct Distance Dialing. It is not necessary to contact the operator."

"But . . ."

"Whom are you trying to call, sir?"

We told her.

"That number is nyan, one, nyan, eight, three, eight, six, two, seven nyan."

"Excuse me, could you repeat . . . ."

"NYAN, ONE, NYAN, EIGHT, THREE, EIGHT, SIX, TWO, SEVEN, NYAN!"

"I'm sorry . . . ."

It took us three times. We wrote the number down, hung up, paused a moment, and dialed O again.

"Hello, operator, please give me nine billion, one hundred and ninety-eight million, three hundred and eighty-six thousand, two hundred and seventy-nine."

And now the Zip Code has made its contribution to creeping digitism. And if efficiency is stepped up, perhaps someday we'll receive another little card in the mail. For instance: "YOUR ZAP CODE IS HERE! What is it? It's a new nationwide addressing system to improve your mail delivery. How does it work? It's an etension of your old familiar name, insuring faster, more efficient. . ."

But the really insidious thing about creeping digitism is that it crops up where you least 35294 expect it. Perhaps 867 is because 97265 so that it 964223 takes over 9032183 8760 76 231-568 0542744 . . . .

A Year Abroad

By PETER RANGE

It is widely recognized that every American student would benefit greatly from a one-year stay at a foreign university. He has the chance to live with a foreign family, speak a foreign language constantly, and absorb the culture of that country. He benefits from the rich academic offerings of the university, the diversity of thought which he encounters for perhaps the first time.

By September, 1964, the University of North Carolina may have a year abroad program in operation in Lyons, France. Although UNC is far behind over fifty other U.S. colleges and universities already maintaining one or more very successful junior-year abroad programs, she will be the first state university in the Southeast to initiate such a program.

According to the proposal under consideration, a number of UNC students would be chosen to spend the year at Lyons. They would travel to Lyons together, beginning an intensive, six-week language-orientation program about mid-September.

The students would be housed with French families, with whom they would take two or three meals daily, in order to enhance their understanding of French life and intensify the foreign language experience. Ideally no two Americans would live with the same family.

The academic program would be made up entirely of courses offered by the Universite de Lyons. The selection would include special courses arranged for foreigners plus regular University courses in French. History, literature and language, philsophy, art, and the social sciences would predominate. All instruction will be in French. Theoretically all credits will be transferable so that the UNC student will receive a full year's credit towards his degree if he fulfills the requirements.

The actual academic year runs from November 1 to June 30.

Administration of the program abroad would be in the hands of a faculty member sent with the group to Lyons each year as director. The position would rotate annually. The director would care for the arrangement of special seminars in certain areas, counsel the students when any problems arose, guide the students in selecting their academic programs, administer any examinations, and serve as the all-important liaison with Chapel Hill for the proper transfer of credits.

To be eligible for the Lyons Program, a student of the Consolidated University must 1) have completed at least fifteen hours of French (language or literature) or its equivalent by June 1, 1964, 2) have a minimum 3.0 average in his French courses, and 3) have a minimum 2.5 over-all academic record. The year in Lyons is not for tourists, but for students. High language comprehension and serious academic performance will be expected. The program is by no means restricted to language majors alone. Final selection will be made by a committee—maturity, seriousness of purpose, and environmental adaptability will be considered.

In the first year, a group of thirty students will be chosen for the program. It is hoped that it may someday be possible to admit as many as 100 to the group.

Although no final figure is available as yet, it is expected that the year abroad will cost several hundred dollars more than an average year at UNC, including transportation. Standing scholarship programs would probably apply to participants in the Lyons Program. Otherwise he bears all expenses just as he does in a normal year at UNC.

The proposal has met with very enthusiastic response from those confronted with it so far. A survey conducted on a limited basis by the Romance Languages Department last year showed over two hundred students expressing serious interest in a year abroad in France.

Further, it will have an edifying effect on the entire university when so many students on campus each year have the background of a year abroad. More students will be affected more significantly than ever before.

As a beneficial by-product, the University's reputation will be further enhanced by the announcement of the Lyons Program. Our attempt to draw the best students to this institution will be strengthened.

Credit for the work behind the present proposal goes to Drs. Daniel, Frautschi, Wiley and others in the Romance Languages Department.

Their proposal is now awaiting full approval by the faculty and the Chancellor's office, where copies of it are presently being considered. Disappointment will be heavily felt in many quarters if the program is somehow sidelined.

In order to discuss and finalize the specific courses which would be offered on the Program next year by the Universite de Lyons, and to charge a specific agency with the task of finding families for our thirty students, a UNC representative must be sent to Lyons within the coming weeks. Under current consideration by Student Legislature is a bill for the appropriation of funds to the University Abroad Committee for such a trip. Its approval is expected Thursday.

As soon as the official green light flashes, the Romance Languages Department and the University Abroad Committee will open the field for applications and offer further publicity. Student response through the DTH is encouraged.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Satire?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I do hope all the children heard Judge Phipps' excellent lecture on the merits of Bill 1395. I regret that my friend, Mrs. Watson-whupple, was not on hand to see the beautiful fruit of her long and and intense devotion to right causes. Some of the children were ugly though, and ill-mannered in their questions. They took advantage of his princely gesture of letting them submit written questions to hide their anonymous faces in a lonely crowd of pink cheeks, so to speak. One young man signed his name, and, well, he is a nice fellow even if he is a modern poet and therefore a bit radical for polite folks. Some of the questions were loaded, as the Jude said, and were obviously meant to embarrass him and to trip him up like a boar dof inquistion might do. Committees in Washington sometimes act like that, I've been told—oh, not the solid patriotic ones, but the ones that have been designed to humiliate companies that make the medicne that sick ladies who are with child sometimes take.

But one of the questions was nice even if it was phrased in such a way as to confuse dear Judge Phipps. This was the question why books by known Communists aren't outlawed too. Judge Phipps spoke the truth, as he always does, when he said that a speaker, like himself, could answer questions directly from students if he so chooses and furthermore, that a sermon in church is better than a sermon in a book. But you know, one time I was deathly sick and couldn't go to church and the parson let me read the sermon that he had given. And it was a wonderful sermon even if it wasn't exactly like going to church. That sermon did me so much good. It made me feel like going on and living for the glory of the Lord even though there was so much badness in the world and to do my part to make things different so that when Jesus came again to exalt the valleys and make low the mountains, as the Good Book says, he would be proud of one who had been daily a worker for His cause.

Now you see why we ought to keep Communist books out of the hands of the college children—if a bad speaker can do a lot of damage, a bad book can do at least a little. The Lord inspired His servant Calvin, whom we have as our father, to put the infidel Servetus in the flames. We should do our little part toward the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah lest we, like Lot's wife, turn into the salt of the earth.

Grigg recalled the Doug Moe case which came up shortly after he was succeeded by Bill Harriss. Present student leaders feel this case started a trend in unilateral decisions by Administration and faculty leading up to the Review Board decision.

"I can't recall anything of similar import in which there was unilateral action that year," Grigg said.

Maryland, UNC Knock Heads Over Ball

Oh So Close... UNC Falls, 2-1

North Carolina's soccer team fought its way to the brink of victory yesterday afternoon on Fetzer Field, but fell short as migthy Maryland hung on to take a 2-1 decision.

The game Tar Heels played their best game of the season, but the Terps remained the kingpin of ACC soccer for the tenth consecutive undefeated year.

This was perhaps the closest shave yet for Maryland, and certainly the finest game the Heels have played against the squad which is virtually the same as the one which was runnerup in last season's NCAA championships.

Stalemated in the first half, Maryland broke the ice with two goals in the third period. Frank Marasco booted in the first goal when the ball slipped off UNC goalie Tom Roberts' hand, and Ekerhard Klein rammed in the second on a penalty kick.

The Heels suffered a momentary letdown at that point, but they caught fire as the fourth period started and gave Maryland a scare for the next 22 minutes.

Frank Lankford started the ball rolling when he booted in a goal on an indirect kick after a dangerous play by the Terps. The Heels swept back numerous threats after that, but fate denied them a tie or victory.

Maryland's All-America inside left Oyton Terteniz was blanket by fullback George Beim throughout the game. Beim sparked the team to second and third efforts on many occasions, and generally played his best game of the season.

Many others could be singled out as having outstanding games such as Park McGinty, Marty Kruming, Charlie Battle, Pete Blake, Tom Roberts, but actually it was just a superb team effort which fell a wee bit short.

"I thought we played a real fine game," said Coach Marvin Allen of UNC. "It's hard to say who played the best for us, so I would have to give credit to every man on the team."

Maryland wound up its season with a 7-1 mark overall and had a perfect 4-0 conference record.

The Tar Heels have two tilts remaining on their schedule one with Emory University here this Friday and the other with Duke the following Friday (Nov. 15). At present the UNC booters stand at 4-3-1.

By ARMANDO ARIBA

RALEIGH—North Carolina ran away from the rest of the field, placed four men in the top ten finishers and easily captured its third straight state cross-country championship here yesterday.

Coach Joe Hilton's Harriers, unbeaten in seven dual meets this season, had a low point total of 33 while coasting to the easy win. Duke, UNC's closest challenger, finished a distant second at 65 while NC State scored 84, Wake Forest 97 and Davidson 130. Pembroke State finished last at 165.

The one-two punch Carolina has used all year again provided the impetus yesterday when Art Maillet and Jimmy Meade, the M&M boys, battled each other for the first place. Maillet won it in 21:09, some 17 seconds off the meet record set by Duke's Jerry Nourse in 1961.

Meade was timed in 21:18 while State's Mel Woodcock edged Pembroke State's George Brown for third in 21:28.

The 33 points accumulated by UNC in the win, though far outdistancing the opposition, did not come close to a scoring record.

NC State scored a low of 17 when the Wolfpack swept the first four places and the seventh spot in 1952.

UNC's other top ten men yesterday were Mike Folk (seventh in 21:44) and Jerry Smith (ninth in 21:57). However, the last of the Tar Heels' Big Five, captain Bob Bennett, finished a disappointing 34th.

The slack was taken up by four other runners of the Carolina "taxi squad" who placed in the top twenty. Worth Helms finished 14th, Bob Fawcett 16th, Charlie Lefler 17th and Bill Janowitz 19th.

Dave Radford and Bill Graham also contributed with places in the 21st and 27th positions, respectively.

After Maillet, Meade, Woodcock and Brown in the top ten, Silas Davis of State and John Weiseger of Duke came in ahead of UNC's Folk. Wake Forest's Tom Rushing finished 8th and Duke's Randy Respass 10th.

Frosh Win Also

Carolina's fine freshman cross country team also won a championship yesterday. The UNC thin-clads, beaten only by Wake Forest (25-30) in dual competition during the year, upset the Deaclets and came away with the state title.

The frosh just did get by Wake 38-40 and dropped the individual title to Al Vieham of the Deacs. Vieham ran the two and one-tenth course in 10:23 (the varsity course is four miles).

Eddie Daw and Trip MacPherson, the two freshmen who have duplicated the Maillet and Meade feats this year, placed second and third to Vieham, finishing four and five seconds behind him, respectively.

Wake Forest won the fourth and fifth positions. But they were not enough to offset Carolina's depth. UNC took 8th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 16th in the close win.

Art Reese (8th), Stu Matthew (12th), Drummond Bell (13th), Daris Hinnant (14th) and Rod Lasher (16th) were the big guns for Carolina.

Behind UNC and Wake in the team competition were Duke (86), Davidson (102), NC State (103) and Atlantic Christian College (230).

FOOTBALL RATINGS

The Associated Press (AP) yesterday named the North Carolina Tar Heels as one of approximately 12 teams listed in alphabetical order after the top ten clubs in the country. United Press International (UPI) alternates its ratings each week for release in morning and afternoon papers. It's list will be out this afternoon.

Bills Ask Abolition Of System

By PETE WALES

Two similar bills asking for the abolition of the student judiciary were presented before the Judicial Committee of Student Legislature yesterday.

In other business, the committee considered the recommended penalties of the Men's and Women's ouncils submitted to legislature last week which included expulsion. They voted to report the penalties out favorably to legislature.

Hank Patterson and John Randell, former student legislators and now law students, represented the Student Committee for Constitutional Integrity in the presenting of the two bills.

They asked the committee to hold extensive hearings for the next two or three weeks to test the truth of several charges made in the whereas clauses of the two bills.

They further requested that the two bills be combined to make consideration easier.

"The bill doesn't have to come to a vote this week," Patterson said.

"It's a bill that has to be considered over a period of time."

Patterson explained that the bill came primarily as a reaction to the faculty decision to drop students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

"The faculty's action has put the student judiciary in the position of a sandbox affair. It leaves very little validity to the student judiciary."

The bill that Patterson is proposing would strike Article II from the Student Constitution. This article sets up the Honor System and student judicial procedure.

He would have three things retained from the article:

1) the Honor Code and Campus Code

2) the Constitutional Council

3) A provision by Student Legislature providing for defense and counsel for students appearing before Administration and Faculty tribunals for violations of the various codes of conduct.

In the whereas clauses, the bill charges administrators with three violations of due process to students other than the recent faculty committee decision:

1) The alleged administrative expulsions of students in the past year in morals cases. Students are not made aware of the judicial procedures in these circumstances.

2) The alleged use of Administrative Probation places students in double jeopardy.

3) The alleged Administrative instructions to resident advisors which condone the urging of students to vacate their dorm as a threat of being reported to the IDC for action prevent the IDC from carrying out its judicial responsibilities.

"We are asking for deliberate hearings that will bring out the facts," Patterson said.

He suggested the committee hear testimony from Administrative and faculty committee representatives and from student leaders concerned with the student judiciaries over the past three years.

No Forum For Destroyers Of State, Moody Asserts

Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

N. C. Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody upheld the speaker-ban here Monday night saying "the state does not have to provide a forum for those who would destroy the state."

Moody, speaking in Howell Hall to some 100 members of the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors, said the law was constitutional because the state had jurisdiction over the university and that freedom of speech "is not applicable to those who advocate Communism, no matter how skillfully the doctrines may be cloaked and disguised."

"Any person who is a communist," he said, "is dedicated to the overthrow of the government of the Unite dStates by any means possible."

"The theory of the competition of concepts in the market place of ideas in which communism must be afforded its hearing is silly on its face, for communism would destroy the market place itself," he said.

Moody added:

"The doctrine of academic freedom has no application in this situation. Academic freedom has no statutory or constitutional basis except possibly the situation where it may merge into the freedom of speech clause and the first amendment."

Moody did say, however, that he had "no idea of the extent" the so-called gag-law restricts the flow of purely scientific information.

He said that many of the legislators were probably unaware of the law's adverse affect, particularly in nonpolitical fields.

Moody said he wanted to correct any misunderstanding that had arisetn over his part in the drafting of the bill.

"I did not draft this act nor was I at any time consulted about it," Moody said. "I did not support the Act in any form or fashion and the truth is that I knew nothing about the act until I read in the newspaper that it had been enacted into law."

Following Moody's address, he joined a panel of UNC professors who discussed the law and answered questions from the audience.

Some of the typical comments from panel members other than Moody were:

Corydon P. Spruill—"The law is truely a symbol of mortal danger. If the vagueness and lack of a penality is later corrected by the legislature, it will be drastic for the University."

Arnold Nash—"The legislature shouldn't interfere with the running of the University unless they have to. Genuine democracy interferes (with the elements of society) as little as possible, until there is a reason. When they make their mistake it comes down on them like a ton of bricks but not until then."

Dan Pollitt—"No one had an opportunity to present their views opposing the bill. We should always be able to expose the different viewpoints on this campus."

Robert Rupen—"If redistricting is a cause for a special session of Legislature, then this is a cause for a special session."

Miami U. Editor Fired From Post

MIAMI (CPS) — The University of Miami Student Publications Board recently dismissed the editor of its student newspaper, The Hurricane but denied that this was due to a controversial editorial urging greater participation of Negro students in campus activities, which had appeared the week before.

University of Miami Vice-President and Chairman of the Publications Board, H. Franklin Williams, said Monday night that there is a requirement that student editors carry a full class load and that editor Elayne Gilbert fell below that standard.

"It is not true that Miss Gilbert was taken to task for the editorial she wrote. The University extends a great deal of freedom to its students," Williams said.

Williams said that she had been dropped from the courses because of excessive absences. He noted that she had been specially registered for these courses two weeks late, because she had not the proper course load at the beginning of the semester.

Miss Gilbert said that two of her teachers dropped her from their courses without any warning and that "it occurred immediately after my editorial."

She said that both of them were journalism courses and one is taught by the paper's advisor. She noted that her teachers had informally allowed her to miss class in order to work on the paper and that she had not been warned about excessive cutting.

The new editor is Linda Reisman, senior in journalism who has "never worked on the paper before," according to Miss Gilbert.

Williams said that the paper's supervisor picked the best editor he could find. She was not on the staff, but is well qualified, and was confrimed by the Board after a complete hearing of Miss Gilbert's case."

The editorial charged that there are no Negroes in any of the athletic departments except intramurals and that there is only one graduate assistant. It also urged an end to possible fraternity discrimination.

Williams noted that "the editorial gave an improper impression that there are some reservations on integration at Miami. The impression of her editorial is incorrect, since the University of Miami has achieved complete integration."

Miss Gilbert said that she had been told that there were certain areas she was not to write editorials on and they included integration, temporary buildings, student freedom of the press and morals. She added that she had no opportunity for a retraction.

Williams said that "editorial restrictions are negligible and that only certain restrictions within good journalistic taste such as morals are clearly taboo subjects."

LUXON JUDGES

Norval Neil Luxon, Dean of the School of Journalism at The University of North Carolina, will spend Saturday in Washington, D.C. judging science articles in newspapers and magazines for which two $1,000 prizes are awarded by the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the Westinghouse Company.

Cleveland Says Faculty Had Responsibility To Uphold

Say Race Not Cause Of Attack

DKE's Apologize To Tilden

Bill Davis, DKE fraternity president, yesterday issued a statement terming Saturday night's incident at the joint DKE-Zete party "unfortunate" and apologizing to Doug Tilden for the treatment he received at the party.

Tilden, a UNC junior from Orlando, Fla., was roughed up while attending the open house party and received a bloody nose and black eye in the incident. Meanwhile a member of the DKE fraternity, Tom Crudup, admitted being one of those who hit Tilden. Crudup indicated, however, he was not solely responsible for the incident.

Tilden disagreed with Davis' statement as to why and exactly how the incident occurred. Davis maintained that the trouble was simply a misunderstanding between Tilden and Crudup, and was not related to the fact that Tilden came to the party with Kellis Parker, a Negro UNC student.

Tilden, however, contended that the remarks made at the time of the incident left no doubt in his mind that his association with Parker had motivated the assault.

Otherwise, Tilden said he appreciated Davis' "attitude of concern over the incident," and felt that "the sooner this thing settles down the better." He indicated he had no intentions of filing either civil or Honor Council charges.

Davis' statement:

"The DKE house would like to make a public statement concerning the incident which occurred in our house Saturday night.

"The incident is sincerely regretted, but we feel it is important to stress the fact that racial issue was not the basis for the unfortunate treatment of Doug Tilden.

"We also regret that The Daily Tar Heel did not give those of us who might have been able to supply additional information time to investigate the matter.

"The DKE house must be responsible for the maltreatment of Doug Tilden, but motivations for this affair has regrettably become the issue, not the affair itself.

"The incident was a misunderstanding between personalities. Tilden was "hustled out the door," but by a different individual and only to avoid further trouble.

"Kellis Parker was not personally insulted, nor was he mistreated or embarrassed in any way. Parker has attended functions at this house before, such as the mock U.N. Convention party, at which the DKE house served as host for the entire delegation.

"This incident has also been publicized on the radio, but no member of the DKE house has been formally approached for comment by this news media.

"Joel Bulkley, author of the article in the Daily Tar Heel, did contact the house officers Monday afternoon, but as this was the first we had heard of the incident, we could shed no light on the situation. If the story had been held out only one day, the incident could have been reported more accurately.

"The DKE house is taking steps to assure that these incidents do not continue, and once more publicly apoligizes to Doug Tilden for the treatment he received Saturday night."

Calls Earlier Agreement 'A Mistake'

By HUGH STEVENS

Dr. Gordon Cleveland, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, told a special session of Student Legislature last night that students were not consulted about the recent dropping of students from the Student-Faculty Review Board because "the faculty felt that this was a responsibility that was theirs and theirs alone—one that could not be shared."

He said the question of abrogation of the student constitution was not considered "too seriously" because the committee "did not feel that the student constitution was the proper place for this to be written up."

He continued that the committee felt the Student Legilsature, in approving the Constitution, had "unilaterally created a constitutional restriction on the faculty in its own area of jurisdiction."

Cleveland admitted that the Faculty Committee had, in 1956, encouraged the incorporation of the Student--Faculty Review Board in Student Constitution.

"However," he said, "I feel that this action was a mistake, in that the faculty allowed another group to legislate away its jurisdiction without having a means of withdrawal."

He indicated that the recent action of the committee was simply an attempt to rectify what they considered an improper decision of the committee.

Cleveland denied that the committee's action represented a lack of faith in the students, saying that students were not consulted because the committee's decision was "a final one."

"I don't know how consultation could have been provided for which would have satisfactory," he said. Cleveland also noted that the students were thus relieved of any responsibility for a decision which they could not have prevented.

He said that if the decision represented a "breach of agreement," it was an agreement into which "the faculty had no right to enter."

Cleveland appeared before the Legislature with Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey and Dean of Men William G. Long, who also supported the decision.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Berlin Convoy Still Held

BERLIN (UPI) — Soviet troops and armored vehicles blocked a U. S. Army convoy in East Germany for the second day Tuesday but permitted a French and a British convoy to rush to the support of the Americans in what could be the start of a Soviet backdown.

British and French officials sent convoys of their own from Berlin along the 110-mile highway through East Germany to link up with 44 American Soldiers guarded by 100 Red army soldiers in armored cars armed with machine guns at Marienborn, 110 miles west of Berlin.

Both the British and French convoys defied a Soviet demand that soldiers dismount to be counted at the Soviet Berlin checkpoint. The French convoy was held up for 65 minutes and the British convoy for 55 minutes.

U.S. Refuses Asylum

SAIGON, South Vietnam (UPI) — The United States Tuesday delivered slain president Ngo Dinh Diem's younger brother, Ngo Dinh Can, to the new revolutionary government for probable trial and execution.

Can, feared and hated master of central Viet Nam, escaped house arrest Tuesday in Hue, 400 miles to the north, and sought asylum in the U.S. consulate. He had been under heavy guard to prevent mob violence by angry Buddhists in Hue.

Lodge Hailed In Saigon

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI) — U.S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge received a hero's welcome from 300 Buddhists yesterday when he visited the Xa Loi Pagoda, Saigon's Main Buddhist cathedral.

The ambassador and his wife made an informal visit to the pagoda shortly after noon.

They entered unannounced, with Lodge wearing a short-sleeved sport shirt. It was several minutes before they were noticed.

Poland Signs Wheat Pact

OTTAWA (UPI) — Canada and Poland Tuesday signed a long-term wheat agreement providing for the sale of some 44 million bushels to the Communist nation during the next three years.

The deal, fifth major grain sale negotiated with the Communist bloc during recent months, will net Canada about $90 million.

Ike Falls Into Old Habit

HARRISBURG, Pa. (UPI) — Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower lost his chance to vote Tuesday because he did not apply for an absentee ballot in time.

A spokesman said that Eisenhower had planned to vote in person, but that a "trip came up at the last minute" and he left Monday for Augusta, Ga.

The Adams County Board of Elections told the former President that it was too late to apply for an absentee ballot. State laws require that applications for absentee ballots be submitted a week prior to the election.

RTI EXEC TO SPEAK

James R. Pearson Jr., assistant to the president of the Research Triangle Institute, George Herbert, will describe the institute and its general operation today at 2 p.m. on UNC-TV, Channel 4.

The program is intended to provide general background for future appearances of RTI scientists who will describe the specific research they direct in their laboratory or division.

Pearson, who received his BS degree in Electrical Engineering from North Carolina State, has been witht RTI since 1961.

Prior to joining the Institute, he was with the research division of Radiation, Inc., in Melborne, Fla.

PLAYMAKERS

The Carolina Playmakers second production of the season, Eugene O'Neill's Pulitzer Prize-winning "Long Day's Journey Into Night," is set for Nov. 20-24, Director Thomas Patterson announced this week.

The play, which depicts one shattering day in the life of an alcoholic, dope addicted family, will be presented by a cast which includes Earl Wynn of the UNC faculty. Marion Fitz-Simons a Chapel Hill actress, and three UNC students: Frank McDonald of Charlotte, Richard Parks of Jacksonville, Fla., and Neal Chaffin of Richmond Va.

BALLOT COUNTERS

Ballot counters are desperately needed this afternoon. Interested students should stop by the SG offices, second floor GM, anytime after 12 o'clock.

Pre-Dental, Med Society To Hold Meet

Alpha Epsilon Delta, the Pre-Med, Pre-Dent Honor Society, will hold its first annual Pre-Med Orientation on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of Howell Hall.

Ronald Joyner, President of the AED campus chapter, urges all freshman and sophomore students to attend. He said, "Since the University has no special pre-med or pre-dent set-up like other schools, it is our duty to inform those persons on the campus interested in going on to medical or dental school." Joyner feels the meeting will help clarify medical school requirements and application procedures.

Talks will be given by Dr. W. R. Straughn, pre-medical faculty advisor; Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth of the medical school; Floyd Bryan, 3rd year medical student, and Joyner. Following the meeting there will be a question and answer session.

According to AED, the United States needs many more trained physicians and dentists that it has, but during the four undergraduate years the number of medical and dental school candidates dwindles rapidly. AED feels that if questions are answered while the prelmed student is a freshman or sophomore, there will be more junior-senior premeds.

Orgies At Havahd?! Well, Maybe Little Bitty Ones

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (UPI) — Harvard students admit that sex relations occasionally occur when an undergrad entertains a coed in his room, but they denied Friday that there had been orgiastic parties in the dormitories.

Students criticized the press and their ownd eans for airing the university's sex problems before a national audience. Faculty masters of Harvard residence halls tended to support the student's contention tht dormitory behavior was not out of line.

Attention was focused onH arvard's sexual climate Thursday because of a letter to the campus newspaper from a dean who complained that allowing girls into men's dormitories tended to license "wild parties and sexual intercourse." The university admitted a few incidents but said that, in the main, the wild parties consisted of isolated heavy drinking bouts.

Harvard, like numerous other Eastern schools, allows its men to entertain women in their suites, bedrooms included, at certain specified hours. The practice is long-standing, and the duration of the hours was last changed in 1952.

There was no indication that the new public controversy would lead to any immediate revision of house rules. In fact, the November meeting of the faculty of arts and sciences, which would have to vote such changes, has been canceled.

Erik Sundquist, 21, a Harvard senior from Arlington, Va., scoffed at the idea of a general campus sex scandal.

The closest thing to a scandal at Harvard happens when the deans say one is brewing and the newspapers print it, Sundquist said.

LAW DEAN HERE

Dr. Frank K. Walwer, Assistant Dean of Columbia University Law School will be on campus Thursday to talk to any students interested in attending Columbia.

Dr. Walwer said Columbia would like to have more students from North Carolina. He will be glad to discuss admissions or the possibilities of scholarships with interested students.

Interested students should contact Dr. Frank Duffey of the College of Arts and Sciences at 942-3664 to make an appointment.

New Craze! Hot Cars!

Thieves left a trail of crime to Durham and half the way back Sunday night when they stole two automobiles and broke into a service station.

The first car was stolen from Durham and recovered at the Town and Country Service Station here at Airport Rd. and Hillsboro St.

The service station was broken into through a side window and $30 in bills, cookie machine change and $20 in nickles were stolen, according to Lt. H. Pendergraft of the Chapel Hill Police.

The Town and Country car was also stolen, but later ran out of gas in front of the Howard Johnson's Restaraunt on U.S. 15-501, between Chapel Hill and Durham. It was abandoned and no trace of the thieves was left.

Pendergraft said that a rash of thefts had been occurring lately and urged that students take their personal belongings with them when they leave their cars.

Wigner Takes ½ Of Nobel Prize

A noted physicist who spoke at the Eastern Theoretical Physics Conference here recently was awarded the Nobel Prize in physics yesterday.

Dr. Eugene P. Wigner of Princeton University received half of the $51,158 Nobel Prize money awarded to him, Dr. Maria Goeppard Mayer of the University of California and Professor Hans D. Jenson of the University of Heidelburg, West Germany.

The three were honored for research contributing to mankind's knowledge on how nuclear energy might be best operated and applied.

Wigner, 61, was one of the scientists who witnessed the birth of the atomic age at the University of Chicago in 1942. He was co-author with the late Enrico Fermi of a 1939 letter to President Roosevelt suggesting that uranium could be turned into "a new and important source of energy."

The letter led to the first atomic bomb.

Mistake Accepted, Responsibility Assumed

On today's front page there is a statement by Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity President Bill Davis concerning the incident at the DKE house Saturday night. The incident involved Doug Tilden and DKE member Tom Crudup along with several other unidentified persons.

Tilden was asked to leave the party and subsequently was hit several times, suffering a black eye and a bloody nose before being ushered out of the house. The problem comes from what started the trouble. Tilden says it started because he had come to the party with Kellis Parker, a Negro student, and the DKE's and Crudup say that discrimination played no part in it.

Davis substantiates this position by saying that Parker was neither asked to leave nor insulted, and that his presence was not resented by the house. Parker confirmed that he was in no way mistreated while at the party.

While we are sure that DKE President Bill Davis sincerely believes that the question of race was not involved, as he says in his statement, we must take exception to his analysis. Tilden reluctantly told the DTH some of the things said to him before he was hit and it seems obvious that at least one person not necessarily Crudup and not necessarily even a DKE member, objected to his association with Parker, since the major part of the exchange was on this point.

The statement also says that the DTH did not give the house time to investigate what had happened so that the report could have been more accurate.

We also regret that we could not have given them more time, but the fact is that the story was held for four hours, one hour past the paper's final deadline, waiting for a statement from them. If the story were to be written today, a day late, as they suggest, it would be essentially the same story. The facts have not changed.

These points are a matter of disagreement in fact which will probably never be resolved. But it is important that the DKE house has taken the responsibility for Tilden's maltreatment and has apologized to him. It was possible for them to duck out, saying it was someone from Georgia or another guest at the party not connected with the fraternity, but they didn't. This forthrightness might be an example of why they are one of the most respected fraternities on campus..

Tilden has talked with Davis, and while maintaining his disagreement on what prompted the incident, stated that he greatly appreciated the attitude of concern shown by the DKE President.

All of this is commendable, but it will be interesting to see what steps the fraternity takes to insure that this sort of trouble does not occur again, regardless of its motivation.

The house should certainly be able to police its members.

Rx For Broadcasting: More Morgans

Oh, for more Ed Morgans. Lots and lots more.

Present radio and television programming "is pretty awful," he said during his visit here last Saturday.

"We must realize how much we of the (radio-TV) industry have been short-changing the public," he added.

"I would like to see radio and television stimulate more controversy. Instead of taking Minow's criticism at face value, we became hostile."

Minow, of course, is former FCC Chairman Newton Minow who made history with his phrase about modern television being "a vast wasteland."

Morgan also made it clear that WRAL-TV's reputation for bias is widely-known. (WRAL-TV is the Raleigh affiliate of the American Broadcasting Company, which employs Morgan as one of its crack newsman-commentators.) However he noted, the network has no control over what an affiliate says or does.

But Morgan wondered why the public, especially the University, hasn't made its discontent with WRAL-TV and its conscience, Jesse Helms, known.

Speaking of programming in general, he said, "We must exert our individual responsibilities. It would be a very healthy situation if the public would tackle this problem. I am discouraged that since Minow's statements we have done so little to improve this situation."

Morgan also hit the practice of allowing sponsors to censor script.

"I have always felt it was ridiculous to let the manufacturer of some ladies' product become the drama critic of radio and television," he said.

Morgan, in short, demonstrated that many within the radio-TV industry are concerned at the shortcomings of their own medium. This is a most healthy sign. The trouble is that most of those concerned are not in much of a position to change things in any fundamental way.

We as viewers are, however, so let us rally to the standard of this general without an army and voice our discontent to the networks, individual stations and the FCC in the form of letters and postcards.

Equally important, let us voice congradulations to the men and sponsors responsible for those rare good shows we run into.

Most of all, let's not leave the Ed Morgans dangling, heedless of their efforts to improve the content of our airwaves.

New Sense Of Discovery

By NINA KING

Pierre Leprohon, "Michelangelo Antonioni: An Introduction"; Ado Kyrou, "Luis Bunuel: An Introduction", the first two volumes of Simon and Schuster's series "The World Of Film," Essandess Paperback, $1.95 each.

"...The white eye of the screen need only reflect the light that is properly its own to blow up the universe." In these words of Luis Bunuel can be found all the passionate enthusiasm of those who see in the motion picture the potentially greatest medium of artistic communication known to modern man. At the core of the contemporary cult of the foreign film is a growing public sharing in this excitement, this sense of aesthetic discovery long felt by the pioneers of experimental cinema.

A work of art implies an artist; in the case of a motion picture the dominating and unifying creative urge is that of the director. Thus, it is only fitting that Simon and Schuster's new paperback series, "The World of Film," should approach its subject through studies of the individual directors. The first two volumes, "Michelangelo Antonioni" by Pierre Leprohon and "Luis Bunuel" by Ado Kyrou inaugurate one of the earliest attempts to seriously discuss the contemporary masters of the newest of arts.

The tone and format of the new series reflects the current transitional status of cinema itself. The directors are not yet to be subjected to the finely intellectualized hairsplitting with which scholars approach an established novelist or poet, but the books are something more than the collection of glossy stills and striking quotes which earlier works on the contemporary film have tended to be. Each consists of a lengthy biographical-critical discussion of the director by a student of his work; excerpts from scripts, speeches and articles by the director; photographs, reviews and interviews; a descriptive chronological listing of the director's films, and an international bibliography. The material of these latter sections alone is enough to make the books invaluable to anyone interested in films.

In addition to the above, the volume on Bunuel contains the complete script of his first film (made in 1928 in collaboration with Salvador Dali), the "chef d'oeuvre" of cinematic Surrealism, "Un chien andalou." Equally fascinating are excerpts from Bunuel's articles in the journal of the Surrealistic movements, "Surrealisme au service de la revolution."

The book suffers, however, from a serious problem which keeps it from being anything like a definitive study of Bunuel: this is the personality of its principal writer, Ado Kyrou. Though it cannot be denied that movies such as "L'age d'or" and "Viridiana" passionately attack institutionalized christianity and the narrowness of the bourgeois morality and mentality it supports, it is not the critic's function to use his subject's predilections as a starting point for the amplification of his own even more vehement ones.

Mr. Kyrou does not criticize, he eulogizes; he does not interpret he uses Bunuel's images as symbols of his own personal vitriol. So entranced is the author with what he feels is the kindredness of his subject's spirit that he is unable to offer a single word of technical or artistic criticism—criticism in the sense of an objective attempt to delineate artistic cause and effect as opposed to mere pointing out of "good things" with which the writer happens to agree.

Perhaps because of this consistent enthusiasm for all things Bunuelian, Mr. Kyrou fares far better as a biographer. He is at his best when he is telling with ebullient irony anecdotes such as that of the filming of the crushingly anti-clerical "Viridiana" in in that citadel of Mother Church, Franco's Spain. But Mr. Kyrou's critique is hardly a good introduction to the works of a director who is relatively unknown in the U.S. If film is to be considered an art, then it must, like all art, rise above the personal political-religious-social attitudes of the artist. Bunuel has achieved this, but Mr. Kyrou has not succeeded in indicating it.

Pierre Leprohon's discussion of Michelangelo Antonioni comes far closer to fulfilling the factual and critical functions of the series. Though Mr. Leprohon is an admirer of Antonioni, he is nonetheless able to recognize the limitations of what seems to be the director's current trend. In writing of "L'avventura" (which he wholly admires), he credits Antonioni with the "detheatricalisation" of the motion picture" and sees this as the source of his "crucial position in the history of the Seventh Art." By this, Leprohon means Antonioni's replacing of logical dialogue and a straightforward plotline with an almost entirely visual attempt to delineate his "character and their behavior in relation to themselves and to events." Thus, in "L'avventura," the original mystery of the disappearance of Anna is never solved since other facts and events have become more important to the other characters.

The complexity of this internal "logic" is likened by Leprohon to the structure of a Proustian novel, and he finds it to be entirely successful in L'avventura." In "La Notte," however, a similar technique is used, and here the critic is quick to point out its limitations and dangers. Antonioni's lengthening of certain scenes to express the totality of the character's boredom by similarly boring the audience is seen by Leprohon as "a sort of Proustian desire to make us enter the psychological world of the characters."

He carries this observation to a logical critical conclusion when he adds: "Is it not possible that this new approach, making use of all the techniques of the novel, may create a literary cinema which will soon prove as vain as the theatrical cinema it is meant to replace?"

The excerpts from Antonioni's articles and interviews are as well chosen as those in the Bunuel volume, and their quiet, considered tone contrasts interestingly with the passionate flamboyance of the Spaniard. In 1958, in answer to a questionnaire on neo-realism, Antonioni gave a statement of his goals which must move even those not impressed by the cinematic results: "I think that we men of the cinema must always find inspiration in our own ear . . . to pick up from it the echoes it produces within us so that we, men of the cinema, may be sincere and coherent within ourselves, and honest and courageous with others. This is the one and only way to be alive. Intelligence which evades its responsibilities at a given moment is a contradiction in terms."

Though the body of film criticism to which "The World of Film" plays an important role in the self-realization of a new art, perhaps of equal importance would be a collection of the directors' own writings. These sections in the new series may well prove to be its most valuable contribution.

International Affairs: Part II

Dorms In Germany

By PETER RANGE

What is an international house? For an example, let us turn to the famous Fridtjof Nansen International Haus in Goettingen, Germany, where UNC's annual Goettingen Scholars have traditionally lived.

First of all, the Nansen Haus was a dormitory. Sixty foreigners and 60 Germans lived there; every foreigner had a German roommate. There were 80 boys and 40 girls.

The building was an old, Victorian mansion with a four-story, L-shaped wing added to it. While the new wing housed most of the students and bore all the trappings of modern architecture and design, the "old house" was a maze of stairwells and balconies, towers and turrets.

The central ballroom and the many day rooms surrounding it were paneled, floor, roof, and ceiling with dark, stained wood. Furniture was luxurious and designed for afternoon tea gatherings or an evening with friends and a fine wine. A study room and magazine library were downstairs; the typing room and newspaper room—where all chess games took place—were off the mezzanine which swept around the ballroom from 20 feet up. And there were rooms to spare.

Often a student might take over one of the rooms for an evening and invite his friends to see slides and hear a report on a trip he had recently taken. On other nights we all went down to the auditorium for a movie or a play presented by the Haus members.

Other activities ranged from discussion groups of every sort imaginable to basketball and volleyball games.

The most important function of the International Haus, however, was to draw natives and foreigners closer together. By eating and living every day with our roommates and the other Germans in the Haus, we gained a deeper, closer, more accurate understanding of our hosts. They came to understand us better. And mutual exchange among the many groups in the Haus was continually in motion.

The foreigners there represented 25 different countries and at least 60 different points of view! An atmosphere of friendly argument prevailed. Discussions often carried on late into the night.

The dormitory rooms were larger than those at UNC and intended not only for sleeping, but for entertaining as well. The beds became sofas in the daytime, each room had a rug (of sorts), a coffee-table, a sink, and a pleasant atmosphere. Girls and boys could visit in one another's rooms until 11 p.m. A small kitchen for the preparation of coffee and tea was maintained on each floor. The halls were decorated with art works and planters. Private parties were permissible until they disturbed anyone else trying to study.

Capping social activities each semester was a formal gala ball involving about 300 guests and lasting until 3 a.m.

And what about an international house in Chapel Hill? Many schools in the North and West already have them. In the Southeast, however, this could be the first institution giving serious thought to the project.

It is hoped that within the forseeable future such an institution can be secured for Chapel Hill. We have 200 foreign students here this year. It is clearly recognized that contacts among Americans and foreign students are at best weak. Very few students know these foreigners. Very few programs can be made appealing to a large number of Carolina students. The ten international organizations on campus are without a headquarters or reasonable coordination in their activities. We are in poor position to hold profitable international symposia for lack of a central meeting ground.

The present plan calls for a building to house 100-200 students.. Hopefully, it would be a new structure, designed specifically as an international house. Funds for such a building will be sought shortly, probably from such sources as Ford, Rockefeller, Kellogg, or even North Carolina benefactors.

The living plan would be similar to that of Goettingen, i.e., one foreigner and one American in a room. About an equal number of boys and girls is freseen. It would include both undergraduate and graduate students.

Ideally, the I.H. would have its own cafeteria and snack bar. Very important are the rooms which would serve as offices for the International Student Board, international clubs, etc. Meeting rooms for any gathering of international import would be available. An auditorium with movie-stage facilities is also hoped for. A library-study room, including especially periodicals from abroad is desired.

At present, the plan is still in the discussion stage among students involved in campus international organizations. Many problems are yet to be faced: who will administer the House, the University, or students, or the YMCA, or who? What about a mixed living unit? Will its maintainence be state-subsidized? Will land be made available?

It is hoped that the plan will meet with campus-wide enthusiasm. The benefits of an International House to our campus will be manifold, its addition to UNC's reputation will be felt, and yet the road to establishment will be a rugged one.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

A Defense

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Appropriately, Mr. Henry McInnis chose Halloween to haunt the GMAB Committee with his article, "Free Flicks Poor." In reply, the Films Committee finds it impossible to select a movie that will suit each student's cinematic taste. Mr. McInnis mentions 10 films scheduled for showing this year—eight of which he likes. Yet he is disappointed and asks that the committee "cull from the gross garbage." In selecting the approximately 50 movies to be shown, the committee would be indeed happy to find that each Carolina student felt that 40 of the selections were noteworthy.

The main criterion for selecting the Friday and Saturday movies ist he number of students they will attract to Carroll Hall. We assume that the films which interest the most students utilize student money best. However, through the Sunday Cinema we also attempt to please those students who are interested in films of more exceptional cinematic and artistic quality.

In his article, Mr. McInnis' main gripe seems to be the selection of "Imitation of Life" and "Midnight Lace." I will not argue that this dislike for "Imitation of Life" is unfounded. Instead, I'll inform him that Carroll Hall's 467 seats were filled for the movie. In contrast, Ingmar Bergman's "Sawdust and Tinsel" (which I presume falls into Mr. McInnis' "Let's have more strange, unorthodox movies" catergory) drew the smallest turnout of the year despite its having front-page TAR HEEL coverage. As for "Midnight Lace", McInnis must remember that Doris Day would never have become America's number one box-office attraction unless someone had liked her.

Further, the article, which was first written for a journalism class in editorial writing, lauds Marilyn Monroe and in the same paragraph asks that we "have more strange, unorthodox movies in place of insipid, sniggling (sniggering, Mr. Editor?) sex comedies." I ask you, when did "Seven Year Itch" and "How to Marry a Millionaire" become strange, unorthodox movies rather than "sex comedies?"

Mr. McInnis, when you are editor of a daily newspaper, I suggest you consider that there are other movie-goers, besides yourself, before you write an editorial asking the local theatre to show only MM and other "strange, unorthodox movies."

Few Students Attend Church

By SUZY STERLING

What happens to the religious concerns of students when they come to Chapel Hill?

Dr. John Clayton, professor of Radio-Television and Motion Pictures, posed this question to a panel of three ministers on his weekly WUNC-TV (Channel 4) program, "Encounter," Monday night.

The guests were Dr. Sam Hill, chairman of Religion Department; Rev. Harry Smith, Presbyterian campus minister; and Father Robert Wilken, Catholic campus chaplain.

Each week the program deals with new questions along the general theme of "Mind, Manners, and Morals."

According to Rev. Smith, "the increased church attendance is not because of new interests, but because of a larger number of students."

However, he said, this it not an indication that the students are not interested in questions of religion. He noted that there is a "genuine concern in these questions, but not an institutional expression."

Several reasons were mentioned as explanations for the low attendance percentage here.

"One of the main reasons is to make a break with home." "Students wish to declare their independence, and for this reason the most active church goers "at home" are likely to be the ones who do not attend services here.

Another reason is that would-be attenders find the atmosphere of the churches here quite different from the atmosphere of the churches at home.

"Because this is an intellectual community, the church services are more intellectual than emotional." As a result, the churches are criticized as being "too cold" and "not speaking to my needs."

Father Wilken noted that one of the reasoins for the lack of participation in the Catholic church here is "students are reticent about identifying with a campus minority group."

It was mentioned that students bring "Sunday school experience to campus with them, and are confronted with the graduate level question." For this reason, students not satisified with the questions posed in churches are turning to other sources for questions and answers.

Some of these outside sources are films such as "Tea and Sympathy," books, and religion courses here at the University.

Next week's show will be concerned with the relationship beteween UNC students and the law. Guests will be Arthur J. Beaumont, campus safety officer; Chapel Hill Police Chief William D. Blake; and Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge William Stewart.

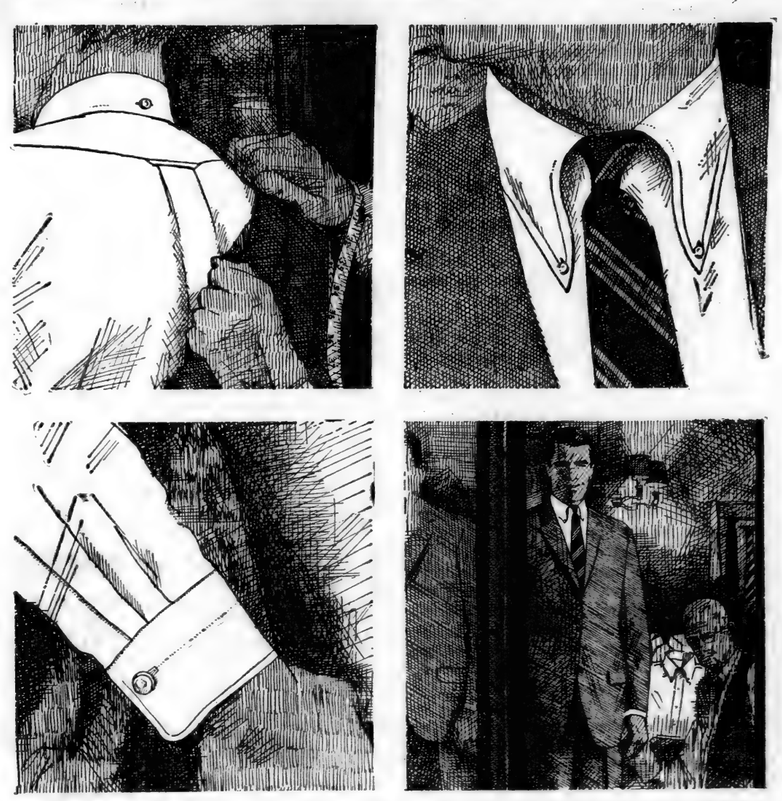
what's a Shirt?



To Gant, it's more than fabric; it's flair, fit, show—3 vital "inherents," visible only when a shirt is worn. Gant is finicky about shirts—fit and roll of collar; proper amount of "show" when jacket is worn. Gant is finicky about drape, fold, trim; all must "homogenize" to achieve flair—that viable ingredient which gives the wearer comfort and aplomb.

Been taking your shirts for granted? Many men do. Try Gant; we think they'll be a tradition with you. At discerning stores.

Amidst Roast Beef... Uproar From Tigers

JOHN MONTAGUE

Amidst the roast beef came the elevation of the Clemson Tigers to football greatness. The scene was the Carolina Inn where Jim Hickey once again went through the formalities of his weekly press conference.

Each week the atmosphere of prosperity intensifies on the local football scene. And each week the up-coming opponent becomes more menacing than ever. This could be attributed to the way UNC's schedule is arranged, but more than likely it is designed as a psychological guard against over-confidence.

Clemson is next in line for the Tar Heels and already Frank Howard is talking. The Tiger mentor doesn't mind mentioning the fact that his club has never been beaten by a Hickey-coached team.

"We are well aware of this," said Hickey when confronted with Howard's statement. "We are well aware of everything Howard says." Thus Hickey indicated he is more than willing for his Tar Heel team (6-1) to assume the role of the challenger when it takes on "champion" Clemson (2-4-1) this Saturday in Kenan Stadium.

The year was 1957 when Carolina last bested Clemson in a football match, and UNC scout Emmett Cheek indicated it would take a good performance on the part of the Heels to end the five-year dearth.

"They are the strongest losing team in the nation," said Cheek as he ran through his scouting report. "They have two big tackles, as every Howard team always has, and their fullback (Pat) Crain is a real bull."

Further details on the latter revealed that the big 216-pound back is the type who'll run right over two or three men and pick up five or six yards with the greatest of ease. It was implied that Carolina must stop him, as well as quarterback Jim Parker, who returns to action after missing the Wake Forest game because of a knee injury.

"Parker is the same type as Rakestraw," noted Cheek. "Not as good a passer, but probably a better runner. Clemson likes to run the 'belly series' and Parker makes it go."

Cheek said it has been the Tigers' own mistakes which have kept Clemson from a winning record. Howard's boys have fumbled the ball 40 times and 21 times the opponent has recovered.

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

NORTH CAROLINA HAD just instructed Georgia's Bulldog to go find some other tree Saturday when the glistening Bell Tower chimed out "Gimme that old time religion; Gimme that old time religion; It's good enough for me."

The "religion" with a capital "R" the Bell Tower had to be speaking of was the road back to glory UNC's football Tar Heels have taken this year. And it's been a long one since the 31-0 humiliation at Michigan State.

That defeat is being pushed further and further into obscurity, however, as UNC continues to play sound, steady ball and gets better every week.

Characteristic of bowl - bound teams every year is the ability to win consistently, even after losing one or more games early in the campaign. A good example of this is the Miami team of the past two years.

In '61, Mira and the Hurricanes were 2-3 at the halfway mark, then won their last five games for a Liberty Bowl bid. Last year, Miami lost two of its final three after going 6-1 earlier—and look where it wound up. The Gotham Bowl, which is a worse fate than even Billy Hildebrand has.

It is usually the rule of thumb that clubs going on losing strings the latter half of the season seldom end up in post-season action. And UNC will have to stay away from that kind of nonsense to get the precious come-on.

The mark now is 6-1, and UNC is a winner for the first time since 1957 and '58 when Jim Tatum put two 6-4 logs together. Carolina figures though to do better than that—and make Jim Hickey's first successful year even better.

UNC Strength From Many Sources

THERE ARE MANY things you can point to in an analysis of the UNC strength. In showing Georgia just where it could stick its nationally number three passer, the Tar Heels also told United Press International where it might shove last week's ratings.

Junior Edge's splendid performance of 15 for 20 passes (189 yards) and 13 rushes for 37 more made for one of the Fayetteville QB's greatest days. Alternating with Gary Black much of the year, Edge had not been very effective up to the South Carolina game. But in that 7-0 win and Saturday's 28-7 slaughter, he has started to show the credentials of last season's eighth-best passer in the country.

Bob Lacey, as "Peahead Walker confirmed on Saturday, is a professional prospect if there ever was one. And considerable pressure has been taken off him by the development of Joe Robinson and the impressive return of John Hammett at the tight end position.

Hammett could very well be Carolina's best all-round football player, but three weeks ago, he, himself, wouldn't give two cents for his chances of helping the team the rest of the year.

Hickey, too, was concerned and puzzled by the ankle sprain that would not come around for the Concord senior, and just about wrote him off as dead stock in a press conference after the NC State game.

But Hammett has come on strong and become a key man in the drive for the ACC Championship. Against South Carolina, he caught two big passes, one an important reception in the lone TD drive. And Georgia saw him catch six for 75 yards when the Dogs doubled up on Lacey.

The rushing has been a pleasant complement to the throwing, and together they give UNC that tough balanced mark of a power. Ken Willard and Eddie Kesler are the big gainers, but you've got Edge and Black, too, to run on those dangerous rollouts.

And these are just a few of the impressive UNC advantages. No matter how much you point to the offense, it is defense that wins ball games, and Carolina, defensively, has been magnificent.

On the ground, the Heels have given up 120.1 yards a game—almost 200 yards less than the opponents got last year. And that pass defense bit! As one local writer put it, "UNC defends against the pass with the finesse of a virtuous coed."

Larry Rakestraw found out what it's like. He got seven for 18 (58 yards). That soared UNC's average to 47 yards given up through the air. The number one position the defensive backfield held in the NCAA last week should remain that way. For Ohio University (the Heels' closest challenger) lost to Xavier Saturday, 20-0.

Clemson, Miami, and Duke remain. And there aren't too many people betting against a 9-1. It can't be too much trouble getting some guys "up" for a team that has beaten them five years straight and allowed them only one touchdown the last three.

There will be no problem in getting prepared for Duke, either, I imagine. But the Miami game that comes in between may be the tough one to keep momentum for. George Mira, and the demolishing thereof, though, should be enough.

Frosh Cage Raves No Baloney

IT'S NO SECRET the freshman basketball team defeated the varsity Friday night in their weekly scrimmage. The reports were nearly 1,000 people turned out to watch it, and the unconfirmed rumors about Bobby Lewis and Ian Morrison turned to confirmed raves.

Of course, Coach Dean Smith's upperclassmen played without Charlie Shaffer and Bob Bennett, while Billy Galantai limped out of the game early. And Billy Cunningham has been known to take it easy in these pre-season deals.

Smith also had planned five-man combinations shuttling into the game for certain periods of time. He calls it "substitution by the clock" and he used it all during the first half.

But the varsity pulled out all the stops to win it in the second period. That they failed should mean an even bigger turnout this Friday. Smith will plan the time of the scrimmage around the football pep rally—probably about 8:00.

The first "official" game for the varsity and frosh (with scoring, rebounds, etc. released) will be played after the Miami football game on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 16. Most of the wooden stands are expected to be up by then.

Cardplayers Stack Deck In 53-26 Win

By AL KAPLAN

Played even for the first 36 minutes of play, the Emerson Cardplayers exploded for three touchdowns to whip the Mangum Redskins 53-26, Monday, in a dorm quarterfinal game.

Emerson took a 20-13 lead into the second half and with only four minutes to go the score was knotted at 20. Then the dam burst. The Cardplayers scored a TD on a Redskin punt. On the following kickoff, the Emerson team intercepted a pass and went the other way for the second TD. The same script was followed on the next kickoff, and Emerson now had a safe 40-20 lead.

Bobby Cox, Ted Hoehn, George Lockhart and Larry Craven all had big days for Emerson. Each tallied two touchdowns. Ted Hoehn kicked three extra points.

For Mangum, Andy Holland, Bill Lambert, John Critcher and Bud Griffin scored one touchdown each.

In other quarterfinal games, the Aycock Aardvarks trounced the Parker Panthers 26-0. Leading the Aycock attack were Tim Carr, Bub Blount, Norm Hoffman and Sonny Pepper. Each tallied one touchdown.

It was a bad day for Parker, as the other Parker team in the quarterfinals also lost. This time it was the Town Rats winning over the Playmakers by 27-13. Pacing the Town attack were Stu Orgain and Al Hamilton, who scored two touchdowns each. Frank McKee tallied both Parke.'s TDs.

Number of participants has increased in Volleyball, Wrestling and Co-Rec Carnival. This year there are 132 Volleyball entries as compared with 97 for 1962.

UNC Finally Gets It: 19

Grid Deaths Down To 11

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Football fatalities for the first half of the 1963 season have decreased 26 per cent from last year with 11 deaths directly attributed to injuries in the sport, a coaches' survey disclosed Thursday.

The compilation was released by Dr. Floyd R. Eastwood of Los Angeles State College, chairman of the injury and fatality committee of the American Football Coaches Association.

Charlie Shaffer, Chapel Hill, and Mike Cooke, Mt. Airy, have been elected to co-captain the North Carolina basketball team this winter.

Shaffer (6-3, 187) is president of the senior class and a Rhodes scholarship nominee. Cooke (6-2, 180) was the ACC's best sixth man last year and has been named UNC's "quarterback" this season by Coach Dean Smith.

Shaffer, as a hard-rebounding forward, averaged 9.9 points per-game while Cooke totaled an even 100 for a five per-game average.

"I think we will receive outstanding leadership from Charlie and Mike," said Coach Smith. "Both are well liked and respected. Both are highly capable performers."

Loud Noise Coming From Frosh Soccer

By STEVE HAWTHORNE

Carolina's freshman soccer team extended its record to 5-1 yesterday as scoring star John Loud kicked the lone goal to defeat Campbell College, 1-0. It was Loud's 11th score of the season.

The ball flew from one half of the field to the other for four periods as neither team was able to penetrate the other's defense. Carolina was up against a rather interesting and rather effective 11 man defensive system which Campbell set up each time their goal was threatened.

The orange forward line actually spent more time defending their goal than they did assaulting Carolina's.

With five seconds remaining in the game, Loud appeared out of nowhere to pound in the only goal of the day from about 12 yards out. Particularly outstanding defensively for Carolina were Jim Hammer, Terry Henry, and Pete Plotz.

Lawler Condemns Minataurs' Actions

The actions of the Minataurs at last Saturday's football game have been strongly attacked by student leaders.

Student Body President Mike Lawler yesterday issued a strongly worded statement condemning the group's behavior before and during the football game. The group was in Y-Court in the morning ". . . singing all sorts of gross songs" and then abused several campus policemen at the football game.

Members of the group were running up and down the aisles attempting to get onto the field during the game. They had apparently been drinking since early morning, and were wearing hats with red streamers.

The Minataurs are composed of between 40 and 60 students, all fraternity men, whose sole function, according to one of the members, ". . . is to do exactly what was done Saturday once a year." Some 20 sophomores are initiated each year, and it was their actions which brought about Lawler's complaint.

"This type of conduct can only put a bad image on the University and its fraternity system," Lawler said. "I have contacted Buzzy Stubbs, the Attorney-General, and Charlie Battle, IFC President, and have urged them to investigate the matter thoroughly and take whatever action they deem necessary.

"The students of this University have exhibited excellent conduct and standards in the past, but the actions of the Minataurs can only be a detriment."

It was reported that Chancellor William B. Aycock had instructed campus policemen to arrest any of the group's members who were disorderly, but no arrests were made. Dean of Men William G. Long contacted Lawler late Saturday morning concerning the demonstration in Y-Court, and Lawler then attempted to contact presidents of several fraternities in an effort to keep the initiates away from the game. None of the people he called could be contacted.

Lawler left his seat four times during the game to aid policemen in controlling the Minataurs, and was repeatedly abused. He said that two of the members were particularly obnoxious, but several of the initiates made an effort to calm down their companions.

What?

Carolina gentlemen accepting dates from good ol' WC (UNCG) may find them tough to deal with in the near future. A cute little freshman may well have turned into another Cassius Clay.

An advertisement in the current issue of the Carolinian, the student newspaper of the Greensboro campus, urges readers to "Learn to box—be a master in the art of self-defense."

The ad, placed by a Long Island, N. Y., advertiser, further suggests that the readers "form a campus boxing club among your friends for fun."

One explanation: perhaps the advertisers, misled by the new official name of the college, didn't realize that 99 per cent of the student body are still very much girls.

Army Convoy Deliberately Blockaded

MOSCOW (UPI) — Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev told a group of Americans Wednesday the Soviet Union deliberately blocked a Berlin-bound U.S. convoy for two days to "test your nerves" and said war could have broken out if the Americans had tried to break through.

Khrushchev said that if the U.S. Army had tried to force its military convoy through the Soviet armored blockade on the Autobahn, it would have had to roll "over our dead bodies."

"When you decided to test our nerves, we decided in response to put our armored cars across the Autobahn to test your nerves and see if you would start shooting or not," he said. "And we are very glad you didn't."

The United States, Britain and France Wednesday night delivered identical notes to the Soviet foreign ministry in Moscow, protesting the Soviet blockade of the American convoy.

The U.S. note said "the government of the United States most emphatically protests the continued interference by Soviet military authorities with the movement of allied convoys."

It demanded the Kremlin instruct Russian military authorities "to bring to an end, once and for all, these hindrances," and added that the United States would hold the Soviet government responsible "for all consequences of the failure to comply with this request."

The Soviet premier also said Russia has not given up on its moon launch program and warned that the "time had passed" when the United States could feel secure against war on the other side of the ocean.

In the first high level Soviet pronouncement on the blockade incident. Khrushchev said the Soviets agreed to lift the Autobahn blockade Wednesday morning only after the Americans obeyed Soviet control procedures.

Khrushchev's version contradicted that of the U.S. Army which said its 12-truck, 44-man convoy had been allowed to pass by Soviet armored personnel carriers after a 41-hour holdup without obeying Russian instructions to lower the truck tail gates and have the soldiers dismount.

Integration Highlights WUNC-Radio

"Desegregation in a Small Southern Town" will be discussed on WUNC, 91.5 on the FM dial tonight at 7 p.m. by three authorities on desegregation as part of "Carolina Roundtable," which invites listeners to phone in questions while the program is on the air.

Joe Augustine, executive director of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Assn., Hilliard Caldwell, chairman of CURED (Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity) and James Shumaker, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, will talk about business and desegregation on the first of this three-part series.

Panel moderator will be Dr. Earle Wallace, associate dean of the Graduate School and associate professor of political science at the University of North Carolina.

Subsequent programs in the series will deal with law and government, and ethical and moral considerations in the desegregation issue.

WUNC radio will also present a special program at 10 p.m. on N. C. Deputy Attorney General Ralph Moody's appearance here Tuesday.

Moody addressed the campus chapter of the AAUP on the controversial Speaker Ban law.

The International Students Board will meet at the YMCA building at 4 p.m. Committee reports will be expected and the Goettingen and Columbia scholarships will be discussed.

Amendments Pass By Big Margin

By HUGH STEVENS

Three amendments to the Student Constitution were passed by large margins in Tuesday's campus election.

The first amendment changes the name of the Men's Interdormitory Council to the "Men's Residence Council." The name change will allow for the complete reorganization of the Council, and is necessary before other structural changes can be made.

The second change provides for an Interfraternity Court to have jurisdiction in cases involving infractions by "fraternities, fraternity members, or agents thereof." The present Interfraternity Court has operated under authority granted by the Dean of Men, and the new amendment officially establishes the court and its jurisdiction.

The last amendment is intended to clarify what action may be taken by the Interdormitory Court against violators of dorm rules who are not dormitory residents. It deletes the words "by male dormitory residents" from Article II, Section 3 of the constitution, thus allowing the court to take action against any student who violates dormitory regulations, whether or not he is a resident.

Arthur Hays, elections board chairman, said that more than 3,000 students voted in Tuesday's election. "This is not a bad turnout for a fall election," he said, "although we might have expected more due to the increase in enrollment."

Hays expressed his appreciation to the members of the elections board and the volunteers who counted ballots. He said that ballot counters will be needed again this afternoon for recounts.

"I would like to especially thank the DKE fraternity for their help," Hays continued. "They took over four polls for us, one of them at the last minute when another fraternity failed to show up."

Hays called the campaign and election "average" in most respects, noting that the dorm meetings this year were largely unsuccessful.

He also called attention to the margins of victory in two elections, including the narrow six-vote win by Harrison Merrill over Gene Barrier for the presidency of the junior class.

"Of course we are recounting that one," Hays said. "On the other hand, Jim Brame won the freshman president's race by more than 600 votes, which is the largest margin for a class office that I have ever heard of."

Brame, Ehrhart And Merrill Are Class Presidents

The Student Party won 10 of the 15 class offices in elections held Tuesday, but the University Party saved face by taking two of the three class presidencies.

Four of the elections have been called to recount. The closest race found Harrison Merrill (UP) narrowly defeating Gene Barrier (SP) by a 454-448 margin for the junior class presidency. Other elections which could be reversed are the freshman vice-presidency, where John Hedrick (SP) edged Mickey Gamble (UP) by a 636-604 count, the election of Dick Baddour (SP) who took a 355-305 decision from Bernard Baldwin (UP) in the race for sophomore vice-president and Jeff Davis' (SP) win over Jerry Teele (UP) by 351-302 for treasurer of the sophomore class.

The largest margin of victory came in the race for the freshman presidency, where Jim Brame (SP) clobbered Sammy Kellett (UP) by a 925-324 count. Other freshman results included Hedrick's apparent victory in the vice-president contest, Mary King (SP) over Susie Warren (UP) by 653-593 for secretary, Jim Hubbard (SP) won over Ken Traub (UP) by 691-547 for treasurer and Maureen Shannon (UP) over Anne Clemmons (SP), 736-503, for social chairman.

Larry Ehrhart (UP) took the sophomore presidency with a convincing 421-239 margin over Bill Diehl (SP), Priscilla Patterson (SP) defeated Faryl Sims (UP) by 409-256 for the sophomore secretary post and Camilla Walters (UP) deefated Ruthie Parrott (SP) by a 395-263 count for the social chairman position.

The upset of the day came in the contest for junior vice-president, when Paul Chused (SP) took a convincing 533-368 victory over Johnsye Massenburg (UP). Kay Hoyle (SP) defeated Cydne Wright (UP), 504-387, for junior secretary, Susan Powell (SP) won over Pat Wilson (UP), 503-378, for treasurer and Judy Allen (UP) edged Matilda Gholson (SP), 490-415, for social chairman.

TRUSTEE INSTALLED

Roy Rowe of Burgraw, a UNC trustee has just been installed as president of the Association of Governing Boards of State Universities and Allied Institutions, the group which brings together trustees and regents of universities and colleges throughout the nation to discuss mutual problems.

Burgaw has been a trustee for the past 20 years.

Queen To Be Chosen Today

Carolina's Homecoming Queen will be chosen today at a tea in Morehead Planetarium at 4 p.m.

Bill King, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, yesterday announced that the approximately 40 candidates should dress in cocktail dresses and that ". . . it is important that all girls be on time." The tea will last until 6 p.m.

Judges for the contest are Mrs. Douglas Fambrough, Mrs. Kay Kyser, Dr. George Daniel and Dr. Doug Sessoms. The names of the seven finalists will be announced at the end of the tea, but the name of the queen will be kept secret until half time at the Clemson game. Candidates should not bring escorts.

CLEAVELAND TO PRESIDE

Frederic N. Cleaveland, professor and chairman of the Department of Political Science at UNC, was recently elected to serve as president-elect of the Southern Political Science Association.

Prof. Cleaveland will succeed to the presidency of the association next year.

James W. Prothro, UNC professor of political science, was elected to the association's Executive Council. Prof. Prothro will occupy this post for one year.

BSU May Send Racial Letter

A letter expressing concern over racial conflict in Alabama, rejected last weekend by a N. C. Baptist student convention in Greensboro, may be sent directly to Alabama Baptist students by the UNC Baptist Student Union.

The Chapel Hill student group will consider whether or not to send the letter, which is directed to the Ala. Baptist Student Convention this weeknd, at a meeting here Friday night.

The North Carolina convention approved a shorter letter, proposed by Mars Hill students, to replace the Chapel Hill proposal presented Saturday.

The convention acted to remove references to the state of Alabama and sent the shorter version, urging "concern for human dignity and equality" and promotion of "understanding between men of different races," to state B.S.U. conventions throughout the South.

The UNC letter described the bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church in Birmingham and other instances of racial violence in Alabama as causing particular concern.

Fay Coker, president of the UNC Baptist Student Union, said, "We view the letter adopted by the state convention as a great disappointment. The UNC proposal was a more detailed, personal presentation directed to the Alabama problem itself."

Herald Pair Talks To Press Club

Ed and Betty Hodges of the Durham Herald spoke on free lance writing and book reviewing to the Press Club Monday night.

"Don't make a copy boy out of an editor," said Ed, the Feature Editor of the Herald. "A free lance writer should learn the paper's style and conform to it."

He said that the Herald has great problems with free lance writers. "They send in their pictures with no captions, they always want the story on the first page and they won't go along with the paper's style. They want us to do the work while they get paid for it."

He explained that a good story is one that can be placed anywhere in the paper and still get read.

"Anybody with ability can get a story printed if it's an interesting one," he said. "A good feature can be about ordinary people—a waitress, a shoeshine boy or a babysitter."

Betty, Review Editor of the Herald, said the purpose of her book review is to help potential readers discover whether or not they want to read the book.

She outlined four functions of a book review: (1) to tell what the book is about, (2) to summarize, (3) to interst the reader and 4) to pass judgment.

A book review with too complete a summary can kill the desire to read a book. A good review can be done without robbing the book's impact," she said.

AED Convention Will Meet Here

UNC Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Delta, international pre-medical honor society, has been selected to host the AED Southeastern Regional Convention this spring.

Plans were drawn up for the convention last week when President Ron Joyner, Vice-President Jim Drake, Treasurer John Froneburger, Reporter Ron Michels, and Historian Bob Buchanan met with Dr. Maurice Moore, AED national secretary, and Dr. William Straughn, faculty advisor at UNC and regional director of AED.

The convention, which will be held on March 5-7, will host AED members and faculty advisors from 25 chapters in Florida, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee.

Chairman Needed For Arts Festival

The Fine Arts Festival, recently created by the Student Legislature, is in need of a chairman. Any student who is interested in serving in such a capacity may contact Bob Spearman or Mike Lawler in the Student Government offices for an interview.

The Festival will be held for the first time in the spring of 1965 and is intended to alternate with the Carolina Symposium thereafter.

The purpose of the Festival will be to present performances and exhibitions of student and faculty art in the fields of music, literature, drama, painting, sculpture, and other areas of the Fine Arts. In addition, it will include contributions and performances by outstanding critics and artists.

A similar festival was held at Carolina during the 1940's and was quite successful. It was discontinued because it was never established on a permanent basis, and many of its supporters graduated.

The Festival was revived by a number of interested students and faculty members who met last spring with Bob Spearman, vice-president of the student body. This group decided that it would be a worthwhile enterprise and would fill the gap between Symposium years.

A number of other North Carolina colleges have held similar events in recent years, and most have been quite successful. In setting up the Festival, the Legislature expressed the hope that such an event would allow the University to make better use of the "extensive resources of talent and many opportunities for participation in the field of Fine Arts" which are available here.

A Continuing Disgrace Should Be Halted

Last Saturday morning about 11 o'clock, several hundred students, parents, guests of the University in town for the football game, all of the University Administrators in South Building and at least one member of the Board of Trustees were treated to one of the most vulgar, tasteless and senseless displays of crudeness and irresponsibility that this campus has witnessed in many years.

This juvenile display of the knowledge of dirty words and songs was staged by that high honorary group, the Minataurs. The occasion was the one day during the year in which the group attempts to justify its existence by seeing how badly it can shock all those within ear-shot, how big a pitiable fool it can make of itself, how much embarrassment it can cause the University, and how much ill-will it can bring down upon the whole fraternity system.

The Minataurs were originally founded early in the century as a drinking and service organization, but in the last several years this original purpose has certainly been ignored. They have simply become a bunch of unfunny drunks whose existence is totally valueless to this campus.

Later, at the game, the Minataurs continued their display of pointless drunkenness. Several were stopped at the gate, but many got in. The Campus Police and other officials were kept busy the whole game trying to keep them off the field and the head cheerleader's platform. One Campus Cop took an enormous amount of abuse, but still refused to make an arrest. In the stands they waved their arms, fell over other people and hurled profanity at anyone who ventured to suggest they sit down and shut up.

All this occurred with 30,000 people looking on. It was again seen on WUNC-TV Monday night when the camera panned the crowd and caught several of the group harrassing an officer.

Almost all of the members of the Minataurs come from the fraternities, and now that the IFC Court has the power to try single members of the fraternities, it should move swiftly to clean out the trash in its own backyards.

What It Was, Was – Well–It Was Fun

It was about 11 o'clock Tuesday night.

Above the noise of the wind and the rain came the sound of lusty cheers. No words could be discerned. But it was obvious that a couple of hundred people in the vicinity of UNC's giant men's dormitory, Craige, were having an awfully good time.

Could this be a prelude to a panty raid?

Were they burning someone in effigy perhaps?

Might it be that Dean of Men William Long was cracking jokes over a loudspeaker?

A drive over that way was certainly in order.

Exactly what was going on?

Several cars were stopped along the drive leading down to Craige dormitory. Several hundred of the dorm's inmates—many wearing pajamas and bathrobes—lined the concrete walkways that jut out from each of the dorm's six floors.

Everyone's attention seemed to be focused on a once-grassy plot of sizeable dimension, but low elevation located in front of the dormitory. On it a dozen or more mud-streaked students, roughly divided into two sides, were frolicking with a football.

So that's what it was. Mud Ball Under The Lights.

One team had just scored. Now they were kicking off to their soaked and dirty opponents.

Up came the kicker's foot—and the thwwwaaack of his foot hitting the ball was echoed a minute later by the thwwwaaack of his back hitting the mud.

Instead of helping him up, his teammates zipped and oozed down the field toward their opponents, and a moment later the air was rent with the sound of soggy bodies slamming into each other.

The only person who seemed to notice the kicker's situation was some kind fan several stories above who unceremoniously dumped a bucket of water on him.

Laughter and shouts to crucify the ball carrier filled the air. Somebody finally tackled him and both teams pulled themselves together, identified each other and regrouped.

Everyone, that is, except for one player on the team with the ball. He quietly hid behind a shrub at the far side of the field and might have managed to catch a touchdown pass if some other kind fan several stories above him hadn't drawn attention to his maneuver by dousing him with water.

As it was, someone hiked the football and there was a moment of wild, slippery confusion. Then everyone picked himself up again and started over.

Meantime the fans shouted encouragement and the players pleaded with them to throw hot water, not cold.

Several touchdowns were eventually scored, but as there was no scorekeeper or referee, it would be hard to say who won. But everyone apparently enjoyed himself.

That's Mud Ball for you.

For Those Who Want To Be Effective

Although it sometimes might seem as if the integration movement is only in the streets or at the polls, the Chapel Hill Fellowship for School Integration is sponsoring a program this year which we feel is worthy of interest.

The group is organizing a study hall for all those in junior or senior high school who wish to find a quiet place to study or who might want extra help in a variety of subjects.

This is the second year for the program and the study halls will be held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings from seven till eight-thirty p.m. in the Chapel Hill High School Building on on Franklin St.

All those who wish to help, whether they be on the faculty, graduate or undergraduate students, are asked to attend a meeting at seven-thirty Thursday night in the Junior High School Building.

Teachers are needed in Math, French, English, Science and others. For any additional information call the YWCA.

We feel this program is one where students and teachers can help not only the children involved, but the entire community.

For those who wish to be effective but would rather not lie down in the streets, picket or march, here is the chance.

Book Review

Mourning Is Expensive

By KEN SECHLER

Paranoid—this is the adjective Jessica Mitford uses to describe the funeral trust in her bombshell of a book, The American Way of Death.

She explains that our way is like no other way anywhere or at any time and that it is completely divorced from any religious tradition. The average American funeral costs $1450. But as the funeral directors, self-styled grief therapists, subtly simper to grief-stricken friends and relatives of the deceased, "Who wants to be average". The funeral should approximate the station in life, indeed embellish the status, of the dead.

"Paranoid" she calls them and for good reason. The "profession," the funeralese euphemism for a calling which a leading mortician says can be learned by a good plumber in two months, is grossly over-crowded. With the death rate declining, this adds up to a genuine cause of fear for these "ethical" milchers and purveyors of pagan festivals for the dead. Continually they speak in their journals of a "they" who is threatening them. Perhaps their ethical consciences have not been stilled by self-hypnotism.

"Eeternal preservation" is a myth. This sacreligious catchword they shout from the hearsetops. The fateful fact is that Abraham Lincoln received a more lasting embalming job than the most expensive available today. Permanency is sacrificed for life-likeness. The average embalming job lasts six days.

The funeral directors, not, for heaven's sake, the "undertakers," are interested in one thing, besides the pseudo-psychiatric rationalizing jargon they concoct without the benefit of accepted psychiatric theory, and that is profits, unconscionable profits, especially from those too poor to pay.

Last year, Americans spent more for funerals than for all the aspects of higher education combined—over $2 billion. Elaborately staged "selection rooms" are the crux of the funeral business. These display "eternal preservation" caskets, not coffins, of course, which are fantastically over-priced havens of anerobic bacteria—especially the hermetically sealed ones which ironically facilitate decomposition. The funeral directors, not, of course, "undertakers," sincerely, deftly, and avariciously guide the bereaved through the "selection room" while any "nosy" clergy are skillfully detoured into the office for "consultation."

The major threat to the funeral racket in America is coming from the recently spawned and rapidly growing memorial societies, dedicated to the simple interment of loved ones without the barbarian clap-trap of the modern funeral. It even advocates services in church (!) as opposed to the stage-plays ludicrously enacted in the plush Madison-avenue-type chapels provided by "creative" grave-diggers.

Of course, the funeral, flowers, mausolium, cemetery, and casketmaking combination with its enormous political power through lobbying is warning vehemently and patriotically of the Communistic subversion of this tradition they have initiated within the last fifty years.

All over the nation people are whispering the strident whinings of these apostles of paganism and acting on their own through memorial societies to save a little money for the living. Locally, the Chapel Hill Ministers Association is holding weekly meetings discussing this outrage and solicits the active support of all interested people in behalf of the common effort.

Sam Is Patriotic

By DON CURTIS

There is at least one red face in the Pentagon. There could well be several red faces, or indeed, many red faces; and perhaps a few red rears as well . . . . and it's all because Sam Brochler is a patriotic American.

It all started when Sam appeared on Johnny Carson's late night network TV show. It seems that some three months ago Sam purchased a missile base in his home state of Maine from the United States Army for $7,382. The base came complete with underground silos, Barracks, and various other buildings—all situated on two tracts of land, one 18 acres and the other 10 acres. The larger tract of land fronts on U. S. Highway One.

Incidentally, the total United States Government investment in these properties at the time of the sale was something less than a million and a quarter dollars.

However, being the efficient, moving organization it is, the United States Army decided silly! that it was costing more to maintain this base than it was worth. The solution was to get rid of it . . .and that they did in record time.

Some two months after making his purchase, Sam received a call from another branch of our efficient military—this time it was the United States Air Force. It seems the Air Force had planned to use this base for a Missile Tracking Station and was unaware that the base been sold until that day. At this point some high ranking General took the phone and very bluntly asked Sam if he would be interested in selling the base back to the Government for a profit . . . a sizable profit.

Some three days later, the State of Maine called Sam also. It seems they, too, had some interest in his newly purchased base. For some two years Maine had been considering the possibility of establishing a trade school on the base when the Army pulled out. They too had been unaware that the Army had sold out until that day. Their main question, however, was very similar to that of the Air Force . . . Would Sam sell, and if so, would he settle for a small profit?

Sam, fortunately for the U.S. Air Force, is a red blooded, patriotic citizen. After receiving offers far above his purchased price, Sam informed Air Force officials he would sell them the part of the base they desired for one dollar provided certain conditions were met. The Air Force quickly accepted. One of the conditions, incidentally, is that the base will carry Sam's name. This is the only military base in the world not named for a government leader or a military official.

As for the State of Maine's offer for the remainder of the base, Sam had to decline. Sam is planning to convert this part of the base into a nightclub. Perhaps he'll call it "The Blastoff". Think of the possibilities for commercial slogans. How about "Man, it's out of this world," or "wanta get in Orbit, try the Blastoff."

Sam also reported that he has received a offer from a leading Hollywood producer to turn the incident into a movie. Perhaps they'll call it "A Comedy of Errors."

Exchange Programs

By PETER RANGE

At UNC we maintain several exchange programs with foreign universities, are re-establishing one more, and are giving consideration to a significant expansion of the program.

Each year five or more Carolina students are afforded the opportunity of a year on full scholarship, studying at certain foreign universities. The programs also provide for an equal number of students from the foreign universities to spend the year in Chapel Hill.

The oldest of our exchange programs is the one maintained with Universitaet Goettingen, a famous old university in West Germany. For nine years we have sent two students there annually and received two Germans on our campus.

In Goettingen, the two Carolinians usually spend at least two months in a language school for intensive work on their German prior to the first semester in Goettingen. The Goethe-Institut, a private, extremely competent institution, operates the language schools as eighteen small units of about seventy students each in villiages throughout the country.

For two months the student spends six hours daily in class, with one or two hours homework in the evening. He lives with a German family and takes his meals together with the other students—coming from 10-25 different countries—in one of the village inns. For those two months he is part of the village and is usually reluctant to leave when he "graduates," for the most picturesque spots in Gremany were chosen for the schools.

The first semester runs from November through February. Attendance to the class (which are more like speeches and have as many as 800 students in them) is voluntary, papers and exams are unheard-of except in special seminars. Most students take one seminar per semester.

The UNC exchange students traditionally live one or both semesters in the Fridtjof Nansen International Haus described in yesterday's report.

The student may become involved in a number of activities, though not so many offerings are found there as here. The fraternities are certainly as wild and as controversial as ours, plus a sprinkling of occasional sophistication and seriousness. Student religious groups maintain variated programs with countless discussion groups. A full-time Foreign Students Office (we could use one here!) programs weekly social gatherings for foreigners and Germans, excursions, study trips to Bonn and Berlin, ski trips, and the like.

More important however, the Carolinian must adjust to an entirely new way of living, studying, and thinking. Life is far less centralized and more individual. There is no geographical campus unit. University buildings are spread all across the town of 90,000 inhabitants. Almost every student has a bicycle.

All study is independent and non-compulsory. Planning and carrying out a study program which will be sufficient preparation for the Big Final is left almost entirely to the student. As might be expected, most German students are older, more mature, and much better prepared academically than their Amermican counterparts.

Our second European exchange program, involving only one student from each university, is with France. The program began only last year and is presently experiencing a dormant year because of an unfortunate crumbling of the operation in France. It operates on the same basis as the Goettingen program. Attempts are underway at the moment to relocate the program at another French university in time to reopen the exchange for next year.

Beginning this February, when school starts south of the border, UNC will initiate an exchange in South America for the first time. Three of our students will spend the year at the University of Antioquia in Medellin, Columbia. Medellin is Columbia's second largest city and the country's industrial center.

The students will be on full scholarship except for their transportation to and from Columbia. Their life and study programs will probably be very similar to that of our students in Goettingen. Next year this exchange will become reciprocal, with students from Columbia landing on this campus in the fall.

Any UNC student is eligible to apply for these programs if he has sophomore standing and some background in the Language. The exchanges are chosen by a student-faculty selection committee on the basis of an application and interview. Scholarship, language proficiency, and personality play the largest roles.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Inanity

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Your sportswriter, Curry Kirkpatrick, sounds like a member of the neuveau riche. He apparently feels that Carolina's having a successful football season gives him license to write any inane insult which crosses his mind about teams we have played and defeated. His cracks about "N.C. State (Or whatveer they settled on) a couple of weeks ago were a little tasteless, and his continuing harrassment of Wake Forest in his weekly predictions is completely uncalled for.

In this morning's issue on the front page, we find the following:

"The points Georgia did get came as a gift from this guy wearing stripes who saw early what would happen and decided against a shutout."

Also, "Georgia took the opportunity then to show what a ballclub can do with 12 men," and

"The only penalty UNC fans could see against Georgia—too many men on the field (11 Bulldogs and the referee.)"

I had been under the impression that a front page news story is properly devoted to news. Kirkpatrick when writing this couldn't even fall back on a losing cause as partial excuse for his snide comments. He should take a lesson from Coach Hickey—his comment on his TV program was, "We hurt ourselves with penalties on that drive."

If you are going to have news stories on the front page, why not use them for news and have a reporter write them? And if Kirkpatrick needs something to do, let him write commercials for Winston or Marlboro, or whoever it is.

Partiality

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I wonder why, when a Modern Civilization professor died, there was no mention in the DTH; when a Classics professor died, there was an article on the front page; when a Journalism Dean retires, there was a front page feature story. Doesn't there seem to be partiaiity of feelings on the DTH's part?

Larry Kimel
302 Alexander

(Editors Note: Not at all. The DTH did not receive notice of Prof. John McLeod's death until several days after the event, seriously diminishing its value as news. We were about to print a story about him anyway when an excellent letter was received which we printed instead of the out-of-date story.)

Heels Drill Indoors

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Rain drove the North Carolina football team indoors Wednesday afternoon, but the cold, steady drizzle wasn't enough to quench the Tar Heels' burning desire to beat Clemson.

Jim Hickey's charges donned tennis sneakers and went through a two-hour drill in Woollen Gym. The session was devoted primarily to defensing Clemson plays and running against the Clemson defensive sets-ups.

If the Tar Heels are able to escape the "upset bug" and topple the Tigers Saturday, it will be the first time since 1957 that they have accomplished this feat. As head coach at UNC, Hickey has never won a game from the Tigers' Frank Howard. This may be the year.

Carolina enters the contest with more statistical laurels than it knows what to do with. The Tar Heels rank first in the ACC's total offense, rushing offense, total defense and pass defense departments and are no worse than second in the other two major categories—pass offense and rushing defense. No team in the 11-year history of the conference has ever dominated league statistics like the Tar Heels are doing.

Spearheading the UNC offense, which is producing at the rate of 334.9 yards a game, are quarterback Junior Edge and running back Ken Willard. Edge ranks fourth in the ACC in individual total offense (844 yards) and fourth in passing (54 for 102, 690 yards).

Willard is a scant six yards behind Duke's Jay Wilkinson in the race for the conference rushing crown. The big back has picked up 418 yards on the ground in 112 carries (3.7 average). This performance is good for ninth in the ACC in total offense.

Edge has had plenty of help from Gary Black while fullback Eddie Kesler offers dazzling ground support for Willard. Black ranks sixth in total offense (506 yards) and eighth in passing (29 for 53 and 316 yards.) Kesler holds down the No. 7 spot in rushing with his 249 yards in 51 hauls (4.9 average).

As a team the Tar Heels, in their first seven games, have outgained their opponents 1338 to 841 yards on the ground and 1006 to 329 yards in the a.ri

Guard Jerry Cabe

This senior from Brevard does a big job for the Tar Heels' forward wall. Jerry plays left guard on offense, middle guard on defense, is a quick and strong tackler, and has intercepted two passes this fall. In the winter he headlines the UNC wrestlers.

Laszlo Birinyi

Charlie Justice was his real name, but to the thousands who saw him at the height of his career, he was and always will be simply "Choo-Choo."

Today, Justice is more than a name, it is an institution, a legend, or as one writer said, "a ghost, one of two at Carolina, the other being Tom Wolfe."

He is to Carolina what Doak Walker is to SMU, what Ernie Nevers is to Stanford, or what Knute Rockne is to Notre Dame.

But just where does the story end and the legend begin?

Justice came to Carolina in the winter of 1946 after having served his hitch in the service. While in the Navy, he played for Bainbridge Prep and was offered several pro contracts but chose to return to college.

His choice of schools was by no means an easy one, for he was offered over 50 scholarships. After narrowing the field to UNC, South Carolina, and Duke, he chose UNC.

Immediately the school drew criticism. Some reporters said that UNC had offered him half the school. a $10,000 bank account, and various other incentives. The truth of the matter is that the only concession he got was that his scholarship was given to his wife, Sarah, while Justice went to college under the GI Bill.

Carolina fans looked forward to days of glory during his era, and "Choo Choo" did not disappoint them. During his stay at the Hill, UNC went to three bowls (they turned down a fourth), beat Duke four times, and had an over-all record of 32-7-2.

All-Time All-Around Performer

Even more impressive is Justice's personal record. He rushed for a total of 2,814 yards or slightly less than 5 yards per carry; he averaged 14 yards per pass; threw 14 touchdown passes; had a total offense record of 5.6 yards per carry for a new NCAAA record; caught 6 touchdown passes; punted at a 42.5 yard per kick; averaged 16.2 yards on punt returns, and 26.7 yards per kickoff return. He scored 234 points and was twice All-American. In addition, his famous 22 was retired and he made the Helms Hall of Fame.

Justice's legend is not built on his exploits, but rather on the way he played football. He was fast, an excellent faker and a very exciting runner. Often he would gain only 15 yards, but in the process run a total of 50 with his reverses, change of course, and change of field. Once, during a Duke game, Duke tackle Ted Hazlewood and a teammate missed the shifty tailback and Hazlewood yelled at his teammate, "Don't move, he'll be back again."

He was also a great passer. At his peak, a song was written about him which had the following verse: "A touchdown pass would break the tie; the end said, 'Hit me in the eye.' While thousands roared the coach looked glum: 'Choo Choo' merely said, 'which one?'"

Charlie Justice was not only the idol of Tarheelia, the entire nation loved him. Not only because he was exciting but because he was the perfect hero: a veteran, married, and an All-American Boy.

The Greatest Southerner Since Lee

Life magazine, which put him on their cover, called him the "greatest Southerner since Robert E. Lee." He got more fan mail than movie stars, poems were written about him, and on one occasion, a sermon was delivered about the great Justice.

He was also a drawing card of the highest caliber. Attendance records were set in almost every stadium in which he played. In the '48 game against Texas, the oil barons of the great State offered as high as $250 for a seat, with one offering to lease his oil wells for two good seats. But seats were not available and scores of rich Texans ended up listening to the game in their Cadillacs.

He was also the idol on the Carolina campus. After one game, some of his friends took him to the Carolina Inn. However, they were late and it was closed. One of his friends told the attendant that the dining room should be reopened because the "most important man in North Carolina wanted supper." The attendant, James Weaver, said, "You mean Governor Cherry?"

"No, Charlie Justice."

The chain came down.

'Choo Choo' Wrecks Eagles

After graduation, Justice played in the College All-Star game against the World Champion Philadelphia Eagles. He teamed with Eddie LeBaron to lead the collegians to an upset 17-7 victory. Justice set up one touchdown and a field goal, and raced 28 yards for the other. After the game, he was voted the Most Valuable Player.

Justice decided to call it quits and accepted a job working for the University. However, Preston Marshall, owner of the Washington Redskins, persuaded Justice to try pro ball. Although he weighed only 175 pounds, 'Choo Choo' accepted. In one memorable game against the Los Angeles Rams, he carried 11 times for a total of 199 yards and was well on his way to setting a new record when he broke his wrist.

In 1953, he won the league rushing title with a 5.4 average.

Now Charlie Justice is retired. However, he is far from forgotten. His reception at the Virginia game proved that.

The famous '22' which led the Tar Heels for so many years will live forever in the hearts of all those who remember his twisting, turning, courageous runs.

Justice was above all a team man. Once after getting a '68' on a Spanish quiz, a teacher asked him how he could do so well on the field and so poorly in the classroom? 'Choo Choo' looked at him and said, "Out there I have ten men helping me."

Tonite's The Nite For Co-Rec

By AL KAPLAN

The Seventeenth Annual Co-Rec Sports Carnival, with a record number of 80 teams participating, will be held tonight in Woollen Gym, starting at 6:45.

Each team is made up by one man and one woman. Fraternities are paired with the women's dorms and the sororities with the men's dorms.

There will be competition in seven events plus the relays. These events include badminton, archery, volleyball doubles, table tennis, tether ball (for women only), box hockey (for men only) and "Carnival Games."

The "Worm Relay," "Hammer the Devil," "Blow and Burst," "Funnel Volley," "Bean Bag Toss," "Wash Day," "Paper Plate Flip" and "Bean Straw" are the eight "Carnival Games." When asked to describe the rules of these games, undergraduate assistant Walt Tuthill would give only his name, rank and serial number and added that these games defied description.

The relays are scheduled for a 7 o'clock start. There are three relays, then the championship relay. Winners of the "Block Exchange," "Potato Spear" and "Paper Plate Slide" will then compete for the championship in the "Bubble Burst."

The 1962 winners of the Sports Carnival were Tri Delt-Beta and Spencer-ATO, who tied for first place.

The Alexander Poobahs got a berth in the semis of the tag football championship by edging out the Old East Primos 8-7, in overtime Tuesday. The Poobahs scored their TD on a pass from Jim Hardison to Bud Cahoon. Larry Newsom got Old East's tally. Alexander won by advancing on 3 of 4 plays in the overtime, while holding the Primos to minus yardage.

In the Frat league, it will be SAE playing Phi Delt in the finals. SAE trounced Chi Phi on the scoring of Sam Applegate, two TDs and Brooks Reed, one.

Phi Delt had little trouble with Zeta Psi, beating them 19-0. Scoring for Phi Delt were O. H. Parish, Bob Duff and Bud Thompsan.

In the other dorm semifinal game the Town Rats will play the Aycock Aardvarks.

The grad final pits Law School 2 against Med School 1.

Sinatra Open Begins Today

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UPI) Frank Sinatra put $60,000 up for a golf tournament and most of the nation's top professionals begin shooting at a share of that loot today.

This is the largest amount ever posted in PGA history for the "maiden voyage" of a golf tournament. It's also the first PGA tournament on the new Canyon Country Club course.

Some 50 pros shoot at a total of $50,000 in the 72-hole open invitational which ends Sunday. The top prize is $8,000.

Noted Poet, Writer, Share Podium With Pogo At Duke

By PETE WALES

Poet W. D. Snodgrass, Negro novelist Ralph Ellison, critic Tom Driver and cartoonist Walt Kelly will be the principal speakers in a four-day symposium at Duke University beginning Sunday evening.

"Contemporary Literature — A Post-Human Age?", is the title of the symposium.

Dr. Driver, a drama citic and professor from Union Theological Seminary, will give the keynote address at 7:30 p.m. in Page Auditorium.

He will take a historical-analytical approach, discussing the development of literature up to the present time.

A panel on "The Writer and the Age" will follow at 9 p.m. Panelists will be Driver, Ellison, Snodgrass and the Rev. Robert Mill, Episcopal chaplain at Duke.

Kelly, the creator of the comic strip "Pogo," will speak Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Page. His talk is entitled "Pogo Speaks."

Another panel will follow at 9 p.m. on "The Hero and the Tragic in Contemporary Literature." Dr. W. D. White, professor of religion at Duke will join Kelly, Driver, Ellison and Snodgrass on the panel.

Snodgrass will speak Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Page on "An Overview: 1870-1970."

Reynolds Price, novelist and a member of the Duke English department, will join Snodgrass, Kelly, Ellison and Driver in a panel at 9 p.m. on the artist himself

Ellison will speak on "The Novelist and the American Experience" on Wednesday, the last night of the Symposium. His speech will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Duke Women's College Auditorium.

Snodgrass, Kelly, Ellison and Driver will participate in the last panel at 9 p.m. There is no specified topic for this wrap-up panel.

In addition to the evening programs, there will be afternoon coffee discussions at 3:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday. The speakers will be available at these sessions for informal discussion.

Bill Nichols is the chairman of the Symposium Committee at Duke.

BULLETIN

The election of Harrison Merrill as president of the junior class has been upheld in a recount of the ballots. Merrill, the University Party candidate, defeated Gene Barrier, Student Party candidate, 554-548, in the first count, held Tuesday night. The final count was identical. Arthur Hays, chairman of the Elections Board, declared yesterday that this would be official. Other recounts will be held today.

MISSILE EXPLODES

CAPE CANAVERAL (UPI) —A Minuteman ICBM, tumbling nose over nozzle, exploded Thursday into a million-dollar shower of fire.

There were no injuries, save for a few unfortunately situated rattlesnakes and damage was confined to several of the Cape's palmetto shrubbery.

No one knew immediately what caused the failure. The Air Force said simply it planned to check into the matter.

Homecoming Court Is Selected

Seven UNC beauties have been named as members of the 1963 Homecoming Court, but the fairest of them all won't be known until Saturday at halftime.

The queen will be chosen from the seven, and the remainder will be the court. They were selected from over 40 entries during competition held yesterday in the Morehead Planetarium.

The chosen few are Susan Ausband from Albemarle, sponsored by Kappa Alpha; Mary Cherry, Newland, Spencer; Matilda Gholson, Henderson, Chi Omega; Frankie Gretchen Morgan, Mooresville, McIver; and Nancy Pruitt, Savannah, Ga., Kappa Delta.

Judges for the event were Mrs. Doug Fambrough, Mrs. Kay Kyser, Dr. George Daniel and Dr. Doug Sessoms. The contest is sponsored by the Carolina Athletic Association.

Davidson President Hits Law

Dr. D. Grier Martin, President of Davidson College, Wednesday took an indirect slap at the Speaker Ban law, saying no speaker would be turned away at his school because of membership in a controversial organization.

Martin emphasized that speakers would be chosen on the "basis of their potential contribution to the educational experience of Davidson College."

Martin, who never mentioned the speaker ban law in his prepared statement, said it was essential for students at the private Presbyterian institution to have the "opportunity to hear diverse viewpoints expressed by speakers invited to the campus by student organizations as well as by members of the faculty and administration."

"It is highly desirable that students have the opportunity to question, review, and discuss the opinions of speakers representing a wide range of viewpoints," he said in his statement of policy.

"No speaker will be rejected because of his membership in an organization."

The Speaker Ban, which has been under heavy fire since its enactment by the General Assembly earlier this year, forbids known Communists or anyone who has used the Fifth amendment to dodge questions relating to Communist activities from speaking on the campus of state-supported institutions.

The board of trustees of the CUNC recently come out in opposition to the law and authorized the formation of a committee to seek its repeal.

Martin said he would appoint a five-man committee—including two faculty members, two students and one administration official — to "assure that the schedule of speakers is sufficiently varied to provide the widest possible education experience for Davidson students."

"Whenever the committee determines that a speaker is controversial," he said, "it will be responsible for seeing that an alternative viewpoint is adequately presented."

Martin added it would be the committee's responsibility to inform the audience and public that the "appearance of a speaker at Davidson does not in any sense indicate advocacy or approval by the college of the ideas or the cause presented by the speaker."

CCUN

The campus committee of the Collegiate Council for the United Nations is accepting additional applications for students interested in participating in the U.N. Seminar in New York City, Nov. 27-Dec. 1, co-chairman Doug Tilden announced Thursday.

Interviews will be held today and Monday from 3-5 p.m. at the CCUN office, 2nd floor Y Building. Applications can be obtained in the office.

"Students with an interest in the United Nations and its purpose in world affairs will find the Seminar interesting and educational," Tilden said.

COMPULSORY MEETING

There will be a compulsory meeting of the Elections Board today at 2 p.m. in Graham Memorial. Ballot counters are also needed at that time.

Scientists Criticize Dr. George's Findings

Strong Definite Gov. Candidate

By FRED SEELY

GREENSBORO—State Senator Charles Strong of Greensboro is a definite candidate for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, the Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday.

A highly reliable source, who asked that he not be identified, said that Strong is "definitely in the race, and will make this intention known around Dec. 1." Strong, a minister of the First Christian Church here, will resign from the pulpit and enter the insurance business.

He announced earlier he probably would announce his political plans about Dec. 1. S. A. Neal, chairman of the board of deacons of the church, said it was probable no action to dismiss or replace Strong would be taken prior to Dec. 1.

An application filed by Strong Oct. 23 asks that he be granted a license to enter the insurance business. An official said Strong's application has been approved and that he can take the state insurance examination between now and late January.

Strong has received an offer to join the firm of Freeman and Co., which handles commercial and personal insurance. The firm's president, Joseph F. Freeman Jr., said Strong would serve in an executive capacity.

Strong started one of the major controversies of the 1963 General Assembly when he introduced a bill calling for the abolition of Alcohol Beverage Stores in his home county of Guilford. The bill was easily defeated.

George Returns The Favor

By SAM SAMSOT

UNC Professor Emeritus W. C. George shrugged off an attack by the American Association for the Advancement of Science yesterday as "a rather fatuous statement."

The association singled out Dr. George's racial study, which he conducted for the State of Alabama, as one of two whose findings are not supported by scientific evidence. George's study concluded that the Negro race was inferior to the white race.

The other study, "Race and Reason—A Yankee View," was written by Carleton Putnam, a former airline executive who is now a biographer. The Putnam report contains an introduction by four scientists arguing that there was "inescapable scientific validity" to the statement.

The asociation's, "Science and The Race Problem," criticized recent attempts to justify the political and social inequality of Negroes on scientific grounds. It suggested that such attempts represented an improper use of scientific knowledge.

The association said, "the available evidence on the measurable difference among racial groups cannot properly support a challenge to the principle of human equality. The use of purported 'scientific evdience' to justify non-compliance with the Constitution debases both science and the human conscience."

Dr. George said the association was attacking his theory with no scientific evidence. He noted that the authors of the report said that it was very difficult to atack his study, "The Biology of the Race Problem," on a scientific basis.

The controversial anatomy specialist said he though "it would be very proper for them (the Association) to find any flaws on the basis of scientific data, but not merely on the basis of declaration with no evidence."

Dr. George said the association's objective was "to downgrade my study. They hoped to atack it on a scientific basis, but couldn't."

He said the association has "taken up a national crusade," and should recognize "they're crusaders and not scientists in this statement."

He suggested that the association has "gone into politics rather heavily," as evidenced by statements in a great number of papers.

He said the Washington Post chose to disregard the association's difficulty in attacking the study but that the Greensboro paper had noted it, even though it was an integration-sympathetic paper, "Like the Daily Tar Heel."

Rocky First To Enter Presidential Race

NASHUA, N. H. (UPI)—New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for President Thursday with a handshaking swing in New Hampshire to win votes in the state's first-in-the-nation presidential primary.

The 55 - year - old Rockefeller, first avowed 1964 presidential contender, coupled his long-expected announcement with a challenge to Republican Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona to oppose him in state primaries.

He also unleashed an attack on President Kennedy.

Rockefeller acknowledged—and most Republican leaders agree—that he was the underdog for the GOP nomination against Goldwater, who has not yet declared himself a candidate.

State GOP Leaders Back Barry

RALEIGH (UPI)—North Carolina Republican leaders stood squarely behind Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., today despite a formal announcement by New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller that he will seek the GOP presidential nomination.

"I think Goldwater's chances nationally are very good and he certainly will carry North Carolina," predicted J. E. Broyhill of Lenoir, Republican National Committee from Lenoir.

"Rockefeller is too near in line with the Kennedy setup. They come from the same back ground," he continued. "If we give the voters Rockefeller versus Kennedy, they won't have much of a choice."

J. Herman Saxon of Charlotte, state GOP chairman, agreed that Goldwater "has the inside track" and conceded that "the Rockefeller announcement came as no great surprise."

Both Broyhill and Saxon agreed that the main issue involved in the battle for the GOP presidential nomination centered on liberalism versus conservatism.

Controls Relaxed In Saigon

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI) — South Viet Nam's ruling military junta Thursday relaxed controls imposed on Saigon during the coup that overthrew the Ngo Dinh Diem regime.

The junta sent most of its troops back to the war against the Communist Viet Cong guerrillas.

Military junta security minister Maj. Gen. Ton That Dinh told newsmen that martial law will be lifted by Friday at the latest.

The coup-imposed curfew and press censorship were ended today.

VETERANS DAY

Air Force and Navy ROTC units will participate in a Formal Retreat on Veterans Day, November 11th at 4:15 p.m. This ceremony will be held at the University Flag Pole in front of South Building on the University Campus. The public is invited to attend.

IN THE WHITE HOUSE

A UNC alumnus has three books in the recently-selected White House Library.

W. Clement Eaton, professor of history at the University of Kentucky and president of The Southern Historical Association, received B.A. and M.A. degrees at UNC in 1919 and 1920, respectively.

The books by Prof. Eaton which are in the White House Library are: "Freedom of Thought in the Old South"; "A History of the Old South"; and "A History of the Southern Confederacy."

PASS DEFENSE

North Carolina's pass defense slipped to a number two national ranking this week, NCAA Bureau statistics revealed yesterday. The Tar Heels, who led the country in the pass defense department last week with a mark of 45.2 yards a game, are now second behind Ohio University.

Coach Jim Hickey's club gave up 38 yards through the air to Georgia's Larry Rakestraw last week and are now at a 47 even average. The Bobcats of Ohio U., though losing to Xavier by 20-0, took over the top position at 43.4. Texas Western is third at 48.3.

UNC Physicist Conducts Unique School In Alps

High In The Alps An Outpost Of Learning

By MAT FRIEDMAN

High among the picturesque mountains and forests of the French Alps, a UNC husband-wife team from the Department of Physics has been conducting a unique summer science program.

Drs. Bryce and Cecile DeWitt, who are a source of endless confusion to physics department telephone operators answering calls for "Dr. DeWitt," have been gathering some of the world's top physicists and future physicists for the last 13 years at the "Les Houches Summer School," in France.

Every summer since 1951, about 30 scientists have came from all over the world to study some of the top recent developments and problems in physics. They have been taught by some of the top people in the field; in fact, nine members of the summer school faculty have been Nobel Prize winners.

"Seven of them," says Mrs. DeWitt in her French accent, "won the Prize AFTER teaching at Les Houches. In other words, we invited these scientists to speak before they became internationally known."

E. P. Wigner of Princeton University, who was named a Nobel Prize winner this week and who recently spoke in Chapel Hill at the Eastern Theoretical Physics Conference, was a professor at the school in 1956. Another Nobel Prize winner, J. H. Jensen of Germany, taught there in 1953.

"But don't get the impression," says Mr. DeWitt, who gives all credit for the program to his wife, "that they won Nobel Prizes BECAUSE they taught at Les Houches. Seriously, though, we are very proud of our selections for the School's faculty."

Mr. and Mrs. DeWitt, who have been teaching physics at UNC since coming here from France in 1956, began the program under a grant from the French government in 1951 and it has been growing in status ever since, so much so, that it is now partly sponsored by NATO.

"The program is limited to 35 students," says Mrs. DeWitt. About one-half are from France and the rest from all over the world. Edward Remler, a research associate at UNC, attended last summer. Most of our students are under 35 and are very bright young people. Many have become quite well-known after attending the school."

"I think," adds Mrs. DeWitt, "that this program was not only the first of its kind in the world, but is still unique. Most of the people come here under travel grants from their own countries.

"Our purpose in starting the School was to put some life into French Physics after the Second World War. I think it has been quite successful."

The program, which lasts eight weeks, examines a different broad physical problem each summer. Geophysics, which involves a great deal of inquiry about satellite problems is just one example. The students attend three classes a day on some phase of the problem, making it very intensive. But the stimulation of having heard some of the top scientists in the world has probably been instrumental in encouraging the students to continue in their scientific work.

"Fermi gave his last lecture there," reminisces Mrs. DeWitt. "During the summer, he complained of not feeling well. We did not think at the time that it was anything serious, but doctors soon discovered that he had cancer. Shortly after that, Fermi died."

Parade Precautions Are Reassuring

It is reassuring to see that precautions are being taken to prevent this year's Beat Dook parade from degenerating into an echo of the vulgar ones staged last year and the year before.

The event set for Nov. 22 will be sponsored as usual by the Pika's. Tom Harris, in charge of organizing the parade, has met with Student Body President Mike Lawler to get his ideas on how best to supervise the affair and is now in the process of consulting with the heads of the Pan-Hellenic Council. the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Women's Council.

The purpose of these talks is to discuss the student parade Review Board set up but not put into effect last year. The object is to get one set up and put into effect this year.

In addition to this, communications will be sent to every participating group a week before the parade noting that the IFC and Men's Council are prepared to try any individual or group who violate the Campus Code in connection with the parade.

Finally, a strong effort will be made to keep anyone who has been drinking out of the parade.

These preventive measures are heartening evidence that the people responsible for the success of the parade are giving clear advance thought to it.

All persons and groups planning to enter floats in the parade would do well to emulate this responsible approach to what has too often been a moral fiasco rather than the clever, humorous event it is capable of being.

Who Needs Smarts, Me Kill 'em With Nike

North Carolina's forward thinking delegation in the House of Representatives Wednesday displayed a little bit of non-partisan solidarity in providing 10 votes against the $1.2-billion federal-aid-to higher-education bill. This state's contingent was the only one to vote solidly against the bill.

North Carolina institutions of higher education, including the community college system approved by the 1963 state legislature, would be eligible for a minimum of $6 million under the bill, which provides for a five-year aid program. The bill passed the House by a 250-92 vote, and should be acted on in the Senate within the next several days.

What is even less understandable than our delegation's bloc vote is that our own sixth district Congressman, Horace Kornegay, voted against the bill. Kornegay represents Guilford, Alamance, Orange and Durham counties which contain at least 10 fair-sized higher education institutions including Carolina, Woman's College, Duke and Guilford.

Of course Kornegay is violently opposed to high government spending and also voted against one of the key administration school bills in the last Congress. To add further lustre to his shining voting record, Kornegay has never yet voted for one penny of foreign aid.

He hasn't stated his philosophy on foreign aid, but apparently he wants to do away with it completely. Not even Goldwater goes that far.

There is one instance in which Kornegay visibly loses his violent opposition to government spending. Over in Alamance County they have a Western Electric Company plant which is one of the prime contractors for Nike-Zeus missile electrical components. Now there have been all sorts of evidence presented pointing out that Nike-Zeus is probably an obsolete defensive missile and should go the way the Skybolts went. But Rep. Kornegay hasn't let these reports get in his way, and consistently fights tooth and nail against all attempts to pare the Nike-Zeus budget.

We can't blame a legislator for looking out for his constituents, but it does seem he could be consistent. Our sixth district has only one Western Electric plant, but as we said, it has at least ten fair-sized colleges or universities.

The one thing Kornegay does do that pleases almost everybody is visit all the post offices in the district when he is home. You can figure that one out.

While Horace Kornegay represents the sixth district of North Carolina, no one need fear that the quaint of breed of pork-barrel politicians will disappear from the national scene.

The Question Is, Can Cathey Sing?

Dr. C. O. Cathey, the new face in the Administration's upper echelon, appears to be holding up well in his job as Dean of Student Affairs. He's proving that although the position can be a man-killer, it doesn't have to be.

Cathey's soft, pleasant drawl rarely fails to inject a note of calmness into the most trying situations. His sense of humor also operates to ease the tensions with which he is surrounded.

Easy to know and attentive, Cathey radiates genuine concern for each and every student in the University. This, of course, is half the battle in his job.

It is said that his surface tranquility prompted someone to consider dubbing him, "the Perry Como of UNC," just as Chancellor William B. Aycock and President William C. Friday are known, respectively, and when they're not around, as "Wild Bill" and "Big Bill." Cathey, however, was not given that unofficial title as no one was quite sure how well he can sing or whether he has ever been an Italian barber.

Be that as it may, he has done an exemplary job of earning the confidence of all who deal with him.

UNC's new Chancellor, whoever he may be, will have to look long and hard to find anyone better suited for the position than Cathey.

"We Didn't Agree to Stop Testing You"

SPEAKER BAN

Likely Issue Next Year

By WILLIAM A. SHIRES

Issue—It now appears that the 1963 Communist speakers ban is certain to become a prime and explosive political issue on the state level in coming months.

There are many who do not care to see this happen and others who regret that it may be necessary.

The fact that it is likely to become an issue comes about by the apparent decision of opponents of the ban to force it into the arena of public opinion and scrutiny as their best chance of killing it.

The lines of sharp controversy are drawn. All that remains is for either side to seize the initiative and push it forward as a major issue.

A step toward doing this was taken when the University of North Carolina administration drew up a detailed dossier of condemnation of the so-called "gag law" and presented it to the politically influential University trustees.

Dodge—With this development and others in recent weeks, it is doubtful that the speaker ban issue can be dodged.

It is bound to be an issue in next year's legislative races in a number of districts. It was the General Assembly which enacted the controversial speakers ban in the closing days of the legislature's regular session last June.

The legislation had the element of surprise and went sailing through both houses speedily, before opposition could be organized. Opposition was voiced and votes were cast against it.

Efforts to block final passage and even to have it reconsidered and delayed failed. The measure became the single most controversial action of the 1963 General Assembly.

Report — Consolidated University president William C. Friday relates in his report to the university trustees that the ban law had passed the House before he heard about it.

Then, he said, after hearing that the measure had been passed under suspension of the rules and sent to the Senate by special messenger Friday left for Raleigh by car.

"By the time we reached Raleigh the bill had already been passed in the Senate, also under suspension of the rules and sent to the Enrolling office," Friday said. Efforts to delay ratification failed, he said.

"A bill of far-reaching significance for higher education and the future of the state, which less than 24 hours earlier was unknown to any college or university president in the state and unknown to all but a few members of the General Assembly, was now the law of North Carolina," he said.

Challenge—Supporters of the ban are confident that the mass of public opinion in North Carolina is in their favor. The law forbids any person who is a known Communist or who is known to advocate violent overthrow of the government, or who has claimed the fifth amendment in refusing to answer questions concerning communism and subversive activity, from speaking on any state-supported campus on any subject.

It is the strongest such law in effect in any state and its authors and sponsors believe it has widespread public support. Thus they welcome a challenge of it.

Both sides recognize the issue as politically dangerous and explosive. Prior to the presentation to the university trustees, the Consolidated University had adopted a policy of compliance. The administration and faculty councils of each unit of the university had expressed strong objections to it.

If there was question in the minds of the ban's opponents it was whether to make a fight of it.

In his report to the trustees, however, Friday expressed the view that the effect of the ban already has been damaging. "Yet," he said, "we have by no means felt the full impact of embarrassment and detriment that will ensue if something is done . . ."

Action—It was clear that the "something" to be done was action politically to have the speakers ban repealed or a court test to have it declared unconstitutional.

The State Attorney General's office earlier issued an opinion that the speakers ban stands the test of constitutionality. The faculty council of the University at Chapel Hill expressed doubt about this, saying there are "strong reasons for believing the statute is unconstitutional under both the North Carolina and the Federal constitutions." But, it added, "this is not the place for a legal argument." It conceded the power of the General Assembly to regulate the affairs of state supported institutions.

Then the UNC faculty council added, "we believe, however, that the Assembly should not undertake the regulation reflected in this statute. A political body is far from an ideal forum in which to regulate such matters of university policy . . ."

It called the action "disquieting" and warned that "a legislature which succumbs to this temptation may soon go further and enact statutes intended to strike at other matters which it finds distasteful."

Repeal—There was hesitancy on the part of speaker ban opponents to force it as a political issue. But barring a favorable court test of its legality there appeared no other choice.

When it goes into the political arena, its opponents want it debated rationally, not emotionally. They recognize that it is easily misunderstood.

There may be reluctance on the part of candidates for governor to express opinions on the ban too, for the same reason—it is easily misunderstood.

Morocco Vs. Algeria

In the event of a slugging match between Morocco and Algeria, French experts do not rate Algeria's chances too highly. The French, who formerly ran the affairs of both, believe the Moroccans could whip the inexperienced Algerian army in a standup fight. For this reason alone, French officials think Ben Bella will be forced to seek a face-saving negotiated settlement.

New Management

New British Prime Minister Lord Home is expected to make no changes in the policies followed by his predecessor, Harold MacMillan. In the foreign field the emphasis will be on continued close alignment with the United States. At home the aim will be to maintain the push toward greater productivity and increased exports. Above all, the new government will press to close Conservtive ranks and improve the badly shaken image of the party. The next move will be to try win over public opinion in preparation for elections now believed a long way off—possibly early fall of next year.

Seminars Abroad

By PETER RANGE

UNC has a very unique summer student tour to Europe. It cost less than others, it covers a wider range of the European scene; it involves closer contact with Europeans; and it spends the least time traveling, the most time "being there."

Seminars Abroad will take 30 Carolina students by jet from New York to Europe on June 8. On August 13 they jet back from London. In the meantime they will have visited 13 countries, met countless students and other Europeans, spent 66 days visiting and 15 hours traveling. It all costs $1395.

Seminars Abroad is the least expensive student tour of its nature around. The average cost per day, including all transportation for the trip, is $21. Compare that with $45 on commercial tours and $25 per day on other student tours.

Seminars Abroad was the result of student interest and enthusiasm. Founded in 1957, students still do much of the planning and organizing and two students are made group leaders during the stay in Europe. Mr. Claude Shotts, Director of the YMCA on campus, accompanies the group each summer and plans the itinerary.

The program in each city is a combination of group activities a nd free time. The first afternoon of the tour is spent touring Paris together in a bus. That evening is free. The next day is spent visiting UNESCO, Napoleon's Tomb, and meeting with a government official. That evening will bring the Carolinians to an informal meeting with French students with free time following. Such is the typical program for the entire summer. Emphasis is on close contacts with people in the country. Discussions and social contacts with students are arranged in almost every city.

All the most important cities of Europe are visited. In Florence the emphasis is on art. In Berlin, The Wall and the political crisis predominate. In Copenhagen everybody has a fling at Tivoli. In London you try to learn Cockney and understand the speakers ranting on soapboxes in Hyde Park.

Through his long experience of living and traveling in Europe, Mr. Shotts is able to arrange stimulating seminars with stduents and other important figures in Europe, something not offered by any other tour.

Besides all the planned programs, a great deal of free time is allowed throughout the summer. Thus the participants can visit further with students they meet at seminars, explore the unknown crannies of crowded Florence, talk with Vopos in East Berlin, and the like.

Judy Bryant, participant in Seminars Abroad of 1962, remembers impromptu bicycle trips the students made in the afternoons in Switzerland, the car they rented to run up to Sweden from Denmark, the hitchhiking they did in England. Often the students took picnics and went to some quaint village neighboring the big city they were visiting.

Further information on this summer's program, including the complete itinerary and expense account, are available now at the Y.

Mr. Shotts announces that general information about travel in Europe will be made available to all interested students this year. A general meeting, with a slide show and panel discussion will be announced later.

Students interested in applying for Seminars Abroad may see Mr. Shotts at the Y.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

An Endorsement

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Having read Pete Range's article concerning the proposed UNC abroad program, I would like to register my wholehearted endorsement of such a meritorious idea. If put into effect, it would allow large numbers of Carolina students to gain a mastery of French and some understanding of the culture of France while losing no academic credit. A number of other schools in the South and the nation with such proposals have found them to be quite successful. Here is an opportunity for Student Government, the Faculty, and the Administration to cooperate upon a very worthwhile venture.

Thank God

Editors, The Tar Heel,

When I waked (sic) up this morning and heard the steady down-fall of a wonderful rain, I wondered if we don't take too many things for granted, too many of our blessings for granted, and fail to be grateful or to give thanks for our blessings.

The threat of a nation-wide drought makes us feel how helpless we are to control our own fate. When everything goes well, we have a tendency to feel that we are sufficient unto ourselves and we leave God out of our lives.

This is a suicidal assumption, for man, left to his own devices, always brings about his own destruction.

So as this heaven-sent rain falls on our parched land, and replenishes our dried-up rivers, lets not take it for granted, but lets send up a prayer of praise and thanks. Then let us take time out and count all our blessings and give thanks for them.

"Praise, appreciation, gratitude, blessing—these are magical qualities. They can change and transform a heart, a life; they can heal the body; they can erase old hurts; they can bring joy to us and to others; they can bring meaning and beauty to every day."

And our thanksgiving is made perfect when we share our blessings, when we do something for others.

Categorized Coeds

By SUZY STERLING

Many and various are the motivations of the coed entering Carolina. However, four basic types of coeds are easily identified.

Meet Conformist Cathy. All her life she has been told that going to college is the thing to do. She has no real ambition—just "staying in." What is her major? Well she doesn't have the slightest idea—maybe in time she will become interested in something. After all, her mother and father are so proud of her; she has told them that she intends to major in medical technology. But those chemistry courses are a real headache.

And here is Partying Pam. She brought two closets full of clothes—all the accepted labels. Pam will soon know all the boys in the best fraternities. Of course, she will have a hard decision to make concerning which fraternity she will major in. But she will have such a lovely time deciding. Her mother cannot wait to see Pam's ultimate goal of marriage fulfilled by just the "proper" person.

Joining Jane is the next coed on the list. Jane loves being seen and known. She will put all her energy into all the clubs she possible can join. She thinks of the marvelous work she can do for the poor, underpriveleged people in South Sibera. Maybe she can get her name in the Daily Tar Heel. Jane will also spend a major amount of her time circulating throughout the dormitory, making new contacts. Friends are such fun.

Finally, there is Mindful Minnie. Minnie has been conditioned to believe that learning is fun. So she spends a great deal of her time studying. Minnie dates and circulates, too, but the larger part of her time is consumed by improving the knowledge and awareness of her mind. She will probably stay a long time, for she plans a double major, maybe triple. Minnie certainly is serious about her work.

Now you have met our four typical freshman coeds. It is unfortunate that a lack of individuality makes them so easy to label and watch.

BEAUTY NOTES

BY ALICE STONE

Inasmuch as physical fitness is a sound basis of charm, we are reminded of the claims of a noted health consultant (female, by the way) who maintained that scrubbing the kitchen floor isn't necessarily all drudgery.

"Some of the best exercises for women are done on the hands and knees and utilizes floor scrubbing motions," the expert advised.

We recall, too, the favorite exercise of six-day bicycle riders which might be of benefit to women who run out of gas while doing housework. At intervals, 12 times daily, the riders would take a deep breath and hold it for one minute.

Don't hold your breath, however, waiting for something magical to give your hair outstanding beauty and charm. Only sensible care on your part and an expert assist at Aesthetic Hair Styling Salon can do this. ## THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: TOM ASHWORTH

Southern Bell Telephone Accountant Tom Ashworth (B.B.A., 1958) is one of his company's most knowledgeable experts on computers.

Tom has harnessed computers to many tasks. After general assignments and five months' training in punched card data processing, Tom was put in charge of converting the existing manual billing of Long Distance calls to a mechanized operation in Memphis. His job was to decide how the work would be done and to develop new procedures for doing it more swiftly.

His reward came in the form of frequent salary increases plus more responsibility.

After following up the first Memphis conversion job, Tom skillfully handled another. As a result, he was promoted to Special Accountant in the Nashville district, where he still teaches computers new accounting feats.

Tom Ashworth, like many young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

FRANK HOWARD, the tons-of-fun canary who can warble football melodies with anyone in the country, thought he had the best team in the Atlantic Coast Conference when Clemson opened practice early this fall.

He may have been right then, but telling injuries, a murderous start for a schedule and that proof of all things—the record—have proved Howard a poor prophet.

A firm believer that his quarterbacks' passing on the field should never be subordinate to their passing off of it, Howard has instilled in his boys the spirit to mangle, crush and defeat the enemy in every possible way known to mankind.

He is big, tough and colorful, and his teams play the way he says—or else. He said earlier in the week his team would beat UNC. And it'd better—or else. Or else the Tar Heels will be assured a share of their first ACC championship since its founding.

Chief UNC scout Emmett Cheek said at Tuesday's press conference Clemson was the best losing team in the country. A look at the Tigers' season log so far (14-31 to Oklahoma, 0-27 to Georgia Tech, 3-7 to NC State, 7-7 with Georgia, 30-35 to Duke, 35-0 over Virginia, 36-0 over Wake Forest) shows they are indeed a loser. For whether they are the "best" you have to go back and ask guess who.

TUESDAY, CHEEK AND HICKEY both agreed, though, that Howard may have a point. At these weekly conferences, UNC sports publicist Bob Quincy prints a sheet of questions for Hickey like "Are you good?," "Are the referees crooks?" and "Does the team read the papers?"

Well Hickey wasn't too sure they read any clippings, but he did try to answer another question which asked how he compared this year's Clemson team to those he has seen in the past.

"It's just like all the others," the UNC coach sail. "Big, tough tackles. The good, big fullback. They run those big backs right through the tackles most of the time."

A "big, tough tackle" Clemson doesn't have this year is a guy named Don Chuy who used to draw more blood from running backs than a piranha fish from a dead cow. Chuy ran into Ronnie Jackson last year in Death Valley, and they called a priest to administer last rites before they found out little Ronnie wasn't broken in two after all.

Jackson won't have to worry about Chuy this time, but there is plenty of meat left—both in the line and behind it—to give him grief and satisfy Howard's sadistic tastes.

Up front, the Tigers roar with experience. The two ends, Bob Poole and Lou Fogle, are both seniors and two-year lettermen. Fogle (6-0, 180) has caught 10 passes for 139 yards while Poole 6-4, 211) is nine for 189 yards. Swift Johnny Case is the top reserve flanker.

Clemson's starting tackles and guards are also all two-year lettermen with the exception of probably the best among them, Vic Aliffi. Aliffi (6-1, 240) has as his running mate at tackle, Jack Aaron (6-0, 234). The guards are equally sound positions with Clemson captain Tracy Childers (5-11, 190) and Billy Weaver (6-2, 202) the starters. Weaver is also the Tigers' most important linebacker.

At the center position is the equal of any ball-snapper in the league, Ted Bunton (6-0, 204). Hus duel with Chris Hanburger will probably go a long way in determining the ACC's all-star center.

Bunton snaps the ball to Jim Parker, who has had a career of ups and downs and is certainly one of the conference's most underrated quarterbacks. Parker (6-1, 195) is of the Larry Rakestraw mold (and you know what happened to him)—considered a better runner but not as good a passer.

The big gun in the ground attack is fullback Pat Crain, a junior who is already being touted as one of Clemson's all-time greats. Crain (6-2, 216) is the punishing runner Howard loves to turn loose on ACC lines. He has rushed 343 yards for a 3.5 average and is currently third in the league behind Jay Wilkinson and Ken Willard.

Crain's starting mates are halfbacks Mack Matthews and Billy Ward. Matthews (5-10, 20[illegible]) has a 5.5 average on the ground while Ward (5-11, 176) pushed erstwhile starter Hal Davis to the third team on opening day and has averaged 4.6 yards ever since.

Ellie Howard 1st AL Negro Chosen MVP

TEANECK, N. J. (UPI)—New York Yankee catcher Elston Howard called his selection Thursday as the first Negro to win the American League's most valuable player award "my greatest thrill" but added that Mickey Mantle "is still No. 1 in my book."

"This is the greatest day of my life," said the 33-year-old Howard when he learned of his landslide victory in voting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. "But the most valuable player on our ball club wasn't even in the lineup."

The comment was typical of the modest Howard, but the fact is that it was Mantle's prolonged absence from the Yankee lineup that focussed attention on the Yankee catcher's tremendous value to the team, especially as a steadying influence on the New York pitching staff.

Runner-up to Howard was Al Kaline (Tigers). Others: Whitey Ford (Yanks), Harmon Killebrew (Twins), Dick Radatz (Red Sox), Carl Yastrezemski (Red Sox), Earl Battey (Twins), Gary Peters (White Sox), Pete Ward (White Sox) and Bobby Richardson (Yanks).

Boot-Ball Bunch From Emory Faces Carolina Kickers At 3

By WAYNE KING

North Carolina's soccer team hopes to rebound from Monday's heartbreaking 2-1 defeat at the hands of Maryland when it takes on the boot-ball aggregation from Emory University this afternoon at 3 o'clock on Fetzer Field.

The Tar Heel soccermen have looked better than their 4-3-1 record this fall ,and have high hopes of closing out the season with next Friday.

Coach Marvin Allen's talented toe squad will probably line-up like this: Buddy Siegel, goalie; Charlie Battle and George Butler at the fullbacks; Park McGinty, Steve Painter and George Beim at the halfbacks; Pete Blake at center forward; Drew Murphy and Bill Haywood on the inside; and Jim Talbott and Marty Kruming on the wings.

The booters have posted wins over Washington of St. Louis, N. C. State, Pfeiffer and Belmont Abbey, while tying Virginia. Besides the loss to Maryland, UNC has dropped decisions to powerful Navy and to Davidson.

Minataurs Called For Bad Conduct

By HUGH STEVENS

The Attorney General's office said yesterday that the members of the Order o fthe Minataurs are scheduled to appear before the Men's Council at Thursday's session.

The 20 members of the group will be charged with violations of the campus code for their actions prior to, during, and following last Saturday's football game.

Dean of Men William G. Long said yesterday that the group appeared in Y-Court last Saturday morning and engaged in "the most indecent mass verbal outpourings I have ever heard."

Long said the group apparently has no official function except to appear in public during one football weekend every year and engage in drinking, cheering, and other assorted activities.

He said a number of people, including several students, had complained to his office about the actions of the group, including "a young lady who was propositioned in a most gross manner." Long said he had referred such complaints to the Attorney General.

A question arose yesterday as to whether the matter should be referred to the newly-established IFC Court. It was the opinion of the judiciary leaders that the court lacked the necessary penalties and procedures to handle such a case at the present time. The members of the judiciary agreed to confer with the president of the student body further on the matter.

Dean Long, however, raised another point, saying that he felt

Another Gag In The Bag!

RALEIGH (UPI)—N. C. Secretary of State Thad Eure told American Legionnaires Friday if opponents to the anti-Communist speaker ban were successful in getting it repealed "I've got another one."

Eure told an American Legion meeting here "this hand wrote every word in that bill" passed during the closing hours of the 1963 General Assembly and assailed by educators across the state.

"I know my name has been kicked about since the closing days of the General Assembly," Eure said. He added that if the law was repealed he had another ready for a future General Assembly to enact and "I will keep on as long as I can, striking a blow at communism wherever I can."

Eure made his remarks at a membership meeting of the local Legion post. State Legion Commander L. J. Phipps of Chapel Hill also addressed the meeting.

Phipps said most of the people he talked to thought the bill was a good one.

UNC Analysis — 8 Big Front Line

By JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

Today we play what is perhaps the strongest team physically in the whole league. Clemson has got plenty of big boys up front, they've got a fine passer and they've got two of the best fullbacks around.

In many respects, we feel that this is the most important game we'll play all year. Of course not having won from Clemson in five years gives us a special incentive. But this game is more than that. We must win this one in order to hold our present advantage in the ACC race.

Frank Howard has a real good football team, and he's lost some real tough games. His bunch is ready to win now. Their quarterback Jim Parker seems to be fully recovered from his knee injury and he is by far their best passer. He's a pretty good runner too . . . likes to run the roll-out. He'll do this more than he'll drop straight back.

The two halfbacks I mentioned are Pat Crain and Bob Swift. Crain is their No. 1 man, but Swift is almost as good. They are strong and quick. The fullback off-tackle has been Clemson's "bread-and-butter" play so far. But Howard will also have his halfbacks running the sweep. None are exceptionally fast, but all can go with that football.

Clemson also has a good kicking game. Their punter doesn't get great distance, but he gets it high and the coverage is excellent. Their kick-off man gets it nice and deep and is also a field goal threat.

Our boys are in good shape too—maybe as strong as we've been all year, especially up front. Ends John Atherton and Joe Robinson are both ready to play.

I hope that we are up and that we play like we've been playing. I have no reason to think that we won't.

Heels Seeking Tie For Title

By JOHN MONTAGUE

Carolina's football team can start reaching for the stars, but it has to do something which it has not done in five years. The task is simply defined, but difficult to carry out. In two words: Beat Clemson.

It's Homecoming in Chapel Hill today and 30,000 fans are expected to be on hand in Kenan Stadium to see if Jim Hickey's charges, currently ranked 19th in the country, can overcome the snarling visitors from the Red Hills of South Carolina. Kick-off time is 1:30, and right from the on-set the old grads should be treated to a real battle.

The importance of this contest to the Tar Heels could not be more obvious. A win will clinch at least a tie for the ACC championship, something which has escaped the Heels since the loop was formed in 1953.

Also at stake is UNC's 5-game winning steak, the team's national ranking as the No. 2 pass-defense team, and, confidentially, the team's chances for a post-season bowl game. For those of you interested in ancient history, a win today would be the Heel's seventh this fall—which would be the first time since 1949 that a Carolina team has won that many games in a single season.

Legislature Takes No Action On Bill

By HUGH STEVENS and ANDY MYERS

Student Legislature deferred action on the Honor Council's request for the expulsion penalty in its regular meeting Thursday night.

The delay came after a number of legislators said that more hearings and information were needed in order to properly evaluate the campus feeling on the expulsion penalty.

Phil Baddour, chairman of the judicial committee, said that the committee had heard testimony from both factions in the case. He indicated that the committee would hold further hearings on the issue if it were recommitted.

Whitney Durand, chairman of the Men's Council, was granted privileges of the floor to speak for that body. He asked that the issue be given immediate consideration.

"We have a large number of cases upcoming, and it is difficult for a representative of the Council to appear before the Legislature, as our meetings are held on the same night," he said.

"We feel that members of the Legislature have had sufficient opportunity to consider this matter, and they may speak here tonight if they desire."

Dick Ellis said he felt that members of the Student Government had been occupied with the Student-Faculty Review Board case, and thus had not been able to discuss the matter enough.

"There was only one person who spoke in opposition to expulsion at the Judicial Committee meeting last week," Ellis continued. "I feel that the opinions of the campus should be heard on this."

John Ulfelder also called for recommitment, saying "we should be as well prepared as possible to consider this matter."

Mike Lawler, president of the student body, also rose to urge a delay on the matter.

The motion to recommit was approved, and included a phrase stating that the action would be held "until such time as the chairman of the Men's Council may appear before the body."

Baddour announced that the judicial committee will hold further hearings Tuesday at 3 p.m. in Graham Memorial, and urged all those interested in making their views known to be present.

In other non-legislative action, Richard Johnson was seated as a new UP legislator from Town Men's II, and the appointments of Linda Cogdill and Thompson Mann to the Student Carolina Athletic Council were given unanimous approval.

Absent from Thursday's session was Erwin Parrott (UP), TW.

In further action:

A bill re-organizing the Dormitory Improvements Committee and re-naming it the Residance Hall Improvements Committee was passed.

Another bill appropriating $120 for an NSA-sponsored leadership institute next spring was passed after representative Hugo Spechar (SP) gave a favorable report on a trial conference

Debate Highlights 'Roundtable' Meet

Chapel Hill's proposed public accomodations law brought on a sharp exchange Thursday night on WUNC-FM's weekly panel show, Carolina Roundtable, as panel members disagreed on its justice and whether it could be enforced.

James Shumaker, editor of the Chapel Hill Weekly, said that if a merchant covered under the law refused to serve a white man, he would be considered cantankerous, but if he refused service to a Negro, he would be breaking the law.

Dr. Earle Wallace, associate professor of political science and associate dean of the graduate school, moderator of the show, pointed out that the white man would have the same recourse to the law against the merchant that the Negro would.

Joe Augustine, executive director of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association, defended the traditional right of a businessman to serve whom he pleases.

Hilliard Caldwell, chairman of Citizens United for Racial Equality and Dignity, asked why a businessman opens his doors if he doesn't want to serve the public.

The show was the first of a three-part series discussing "Desegregation in a Small Southern Town." Shumaker, Caldwell and Augustine, on the panel, discussed "Business and Desegregation." The next two shows will be concerned with the law and government, and moral and ethical considerations in the civil rights issue.

Caldwell said Chapel Hill Negroes are basing their desegregation demands on the concept of "public businesses." He said the license given businesses by city or state makes the business "public", and when a man opens his business to the public, "public means everybody."

I am a member of the public," Caldwell said, "and this (giving of a public license), gives me as a citizen, the right to seek service".

Di-Phi Slams Fraternities

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Di-Phi Society voted 13-2 this week favoring a resolution urging the University Administration to revoke charters of fraternities which have racially discriminatory clauses in their charters, by-laws or rituals.

The lopsided vote came after opponents of the resolution argued that it would withdraw the right of free association, a basic principle of democracy. The opposition said that to make a fraternity remove a discriminatory clause would lead to further regulations which would increasingly control a fraternity's selection of members, thus defeating the purpose of fraternities.

The proponents of the bill argued that it is the administration's duty to take such action because racial discrimination is contrary to the ideals of this university. It said that such action would be legal since fraternities can exist only if they are sanctioned by the administration.

No Reversal In Recounts

There were slight changes in vote totals but no reversals in six recounts by the Elections Board yesterday.

Gene Barrier (SP) picked up one vote in the junior class president race but still lost to Harrison Merrill, (UP) 454-449.

Dick Baddour (SP) maintained his lead over Bernard Baldwin (UP) for sophomore vice-president, 354-305.

For sophomore treasurer Jeff Davis (SP) beat Jerry Teale (UP), 350-303.

John Hedrick (SP) beat Mickey Gamble (UP) for freshman vice-president, 635-603.

In Men's Judicial District V, the new totals were: Bryan Simpson, 203; Pete Wales, 200; Mac Boxley, 163; Bill Taylor, 153; George Butler, 151; and Steve Hoyle, 87. Three seats were open.

Football Horrorscope

The mad Frenchman of Franklin Street took one look at the customer by the front counter and made an equally-mad dash to accomodate him.

It was the fabulous Kemp Battle Nye being visited by the equally-fabulous Horrorscope, but you'd think it was a naive and deaf and dumb freshman the way Kemp hustled up to him, eyeing his pockets or anything else where money might be sprouting.

Kemp

Kemp could indeed help us. Pick some football winners, baby. He was glad to and, like Billy Cunningham and Spero Dor ton before him, was also ready to pick the exact scores.

The wild one picked upsets by VPI, Georgia, Michigan, Notre Dame, UCLA and California before giving way and handing the paper back. He didn't blow the big and bellowing horn, but, when told his picture would be taken for his trouble, jumped back, gave the famous smile, and fairly yelped "Preciate it!" We preciate it too, Kemp. Thank you.

Al Kaplan, who is putting on a late push for the number one spot, became the first man to get over 15 of the 20 games right last week when he hit 16 correctly.

Kirkpatrick, who has held first place since opening day, had a 14-6 week last time and is now at 92-36-7 for the year.

Behind Kirkpatrick and Kaplan are Ron Logan (88-40-7), Mat Friedman (85-43-7) and John Montague (82-46-7). The guest stars' record took a severe jolt last week when "Chance" House could only manage 8-12. This reduced their overall mark to 69-59-7.

Phillips Named Law School Dean

Phillips

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

RALEIGH — James Dickson Phillips, 41, has been named new Dean of the University of North Carolina Law School. His appointment was announced riday by the executive committee of the Board of Trustees which met in Raleigh.

Phillips will replace retiring dean, Harry P. Brandis, Jr., whose resignation is effective July 1, 1964. Brandis has headed the law school here since 1949.

In announcing the appointment, Consolidated University President William C. Friday said that he was "fully confident that Mr. Phillips will provide the law school with excellent administrative leadership and will build upon those constructive developments that Dean Brandis brought to the law school during his administration."

UNC chancellor William B. Aycock, who will resign that position this summer to rejoin the law school faculty said, "I am looking forward to being a member of a faculty in which Mr. Phillips is dean. I think he will be a worthy successor to Dean Brandis who has done an outstanding job over the last 15 years."

Phillips said he was "proud to follow" in the footsteps of Maurice T. Van Hecke, Robert H. Wettach and Brandis, who have served as deans since 1931.

"Each of these men came to the deanship from this faculty and by choice of the faculty, and each still serves on the faculty," he said in a statement. "This evidences a spirit of continuity possibly unique in institutions of this kind over such a period, and in my judgment has been one of the greatest sources of strength of this school.

"Each of these men has been my teacher, my colleague and my friend. I therefore have no lack of appreciation of the responsibility which this history and their parts in it place upon me, and am naturally proud to follow in this succession."

Phillips, a native of Scotland County, practiced law in Fayetteville from 1949-1960. One of his former partners was Gov. Terry Sanford.

A graduate of UNC law school himself, Phillips was associate editor of the N. C. Law Review when he was a student here. He was a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Davidson College in 1943, receiving the bachelor of science degree.

During World War II, he was a first lieutenant in a parachute rifle platoon of the 17th Airborne Division, U. S. Army.

He became an associate director of the Institute of Government in 1948 and served until 1949 when he went into private practice. He returned to Chapel Hill in 1960 and taught property law and procedural law.

Phillips is a member of the Board of Governors of the N. C. Bar Association, and on the American Bar Association's Committee on Continuing Legal Education.

He has served with the North Carolina Court Study Commission and on the N. C. Wildlife Commission. He is a member of the drafting committee revising the North Carolina General Statutes Governing Civil Procedure.

He is married to the former Jean Duff Nunalee of Fayetteville. They have three children, two girls and a boy. Two other older children are by Mr. Phillips' first wife, Evelyn Butler, who died in 1957.

They are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Seat-Stealers And Card-Tossers

Every week two unnecessary events mar the fun of watching the Tar Heels splash some unfortunate visiting team all over Kenan Stadium.

The first of these two annoyances, and by far the worst, concerns those people who knowingly take the wrong seats in the stadium. This results in much unnecessary confusion and blocks the view of everyone sitting behind the seat-stealers when the usher tells them they're in someone else's seat and they'll have to move.

If this practice continues, we urge Student Government to empower ushers to escort violators out of the game, pronto. There's just no excuse for such downright lack of consideration by this type of person.

The second annoyance, or hazard, is heaving the Cardboard Club's colored cards into the air once the half-time pattern-making is finished. The practice ceases to be fun once you catch one of those sharp-cornered missiles in the head. If the cards must be tossed, at least rip them up into smaller pieces first. This is not only safer, it provides you with more ammunition.

Right, Tom? Right, Clarence. Right, Clarence? Right, Tom.

Several of the most vociferous members of the 1963 state legislature met in Raleigh Wednesday to begin waging their war in behalf of the little man. Actually it's not the little man these Senators are worried about, it's the little county and those little counties' imminent danger of losing political control of the state.

All the to-do is about the "little federal" amendment to the state constitution, which will go before the state in a referendum on Jan. 14. The proponents of the amendment say that it would preserve the balance in state representation. This is not just stretching a point, it is shredding it. The amendment is obviously designed to keep the balance of legislative power in the smaller counties and ignore the political rights of those heavily populated areas in the Piedmont crescent.

As might be expected, Senate President Clarence Stone is in the forefront of the clique wishing to deny the larger urban areas equal representation, and needless to say, Stone's political crony, Senator Tom White of Kinston, was also present at the war council. We don't know exactly what went on at the meeting, but some of the quotes issued by Stone and White are classic examples of their brand of short-sighted, self-centered thinking.

For example Senator Stone said:

"Whenever the balance of power gets in big counties like Guilford, Mecklenburg and Forsyth, God help this state."

"We've never got any leadership from those counties, only criticism from their big papers. Look at Mecklenburg, it has got Republicans and it has got Democrats. They have hardly a single vote in the House because they are so split up."

What this means, we're not quite sure, but it would seem to imply that the delegation from Mecklenburg County is unable to ram legislation through the House because it represents such a variety of political opinion that a solid bloc is not possible. Ws personally have some reservations about whether this state of affairs—caused, if you'll pardon the expression, by a two-party system—is as dangerous a situation as Senator Stone seems to think.

Stone then amplifies his sentiments by the following gem:

"Us little fellows are being put out of the trough. I'm for Eastern North Carolina because that's where the Democrats are."

Enter Tom White, stage far right, saying that the amendment is "an effort to keep the reins of government in the hands of North Carolinians."

From these statements we can gather two things. First, there are no Democrats outside of Eastern North Carolina, and second, there aren't even any North Carolinians outside of Eastern North Carolina. This is just the type of selfish, witless thinking that Senator Perry Martin obviously had in mind when he warned that the Democratic party is in real danger of being taken over by "Democrats not worthy of the name."

The American Legion is a service organization and not a "vigilante" group, National Commander Daniel F. Foley declared Thursday in Benson.

"We exercise the utmost care to keep from bringing down upon ourselves the label of witch-hunters and other unsavory epithets," he said.

Wonderful. Now if he can just get that message over to Legionnaires in North Carolina, especially the ones in Chapel Hill called Colonel Henry E. Royall.

Judging from Dr. W. C. George's race findings, the only thing wrong with being sympathetic to integration is that it's unscientific. At least that's a higher form of criticism than is usually expressed by segregationists on the matter.

Cold War At Home

More From Washington

By FRANK CROWTHER
DTH Spy

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Today was election day in many states around the country. That's the day when 50% of the eligible voters make an uneducated guess as to which of the candidates offered will take fewer bribes and steal less during their tenure of office. In Mississippi, they'll decide who had the slimiest epithets for the Kennedys; in Philadelphia, who will better keep the Negroes out of the way.

On the surface, Washington at the moment is rather subdued, having tasted warm blood over the weekend, waiting for Rockefeller's hat to sail and thud, readying sagacious pronouncements about today's elections, enjoying the full swing of the fall social season, howling with delight at the mention of the secret word, Bobby Baker. The Baker affair, by the way, is potentially one of the wildest scandals here in many years but it is generally agreed that buckets of whitewash are being stirred everywhere. Some top figures are scrambling for their political lives.

Art Buchwald was already victim of this week's perfect squelch. Coming up on the Press Building elevator yesterday morning with the Tass correspondent, Buchwald, in a jovial mood, offered the Russian congratulations on the wedding over the weekend of the two Soviet cosmonauts. With perfect deadpan, the correspondent turned to Buchwald and said, "Thank you, and congratulations on your Coup." Art admitted the fellow had him there.

Another item of interest to North Carolinians comes from over in Virginia. A fellow named Barnes, running for the state house, included in his platform a note of horror that a communist recently was invited and spoke at the University of Virginia. Barnes has promised to save the University from subversion. I believe another leprous gag law is in the wind. But don't worry, folks, everything's going to be fine. Merely another isolated incident, right? Yes, we might answer, but what are we going to do that morning one day soon when we wake up to find those hideous rats suppurating in the streets—kill all our first born and hope for the best?

All of you will be pleased to learn that your tax money is currently being squandered on a couple of zoos—one human, one avian.

The National Institute of Mental Health over the past few years has spent more than $200,000 spying on the indoor habits of newlyweds. NIMH constructed several experimental homes with see-through mirrors, swearing they honored the sanctity of bedrooms and bathrooms, then invited young moderns to be their guests, under glass . . . for the edification and greater glory of Behavioral Psychology. Additional volunteers (so help me) are being sought. I suppose they are looking for red-blooded adventuresome types, with slightly warped minds and a marked proclivity for untrammeled exhibitionism.

The other zoo project is only somewhat saner. Architects and engineers are constructing a great outdoors flight cage for the birds—eagles and hawks excepted—to mingle freely with the zoo visitors (integration in the aviary!). As one architect said, in a candid moment, "It's not every day you get a chance to do a zoo." Personally, I think it would be simply wizzard to watch some of the New Frontier hawks and doves, of last fall's eyeball to eyeball fame, have at each other in the cage (which will have "artificial mist and rain to make the birds feel they're really out in the world living it up"). I can see it now. An Acheson hawk swoops down on a Stevenson dove, aiming for the jugular but missing, then flys over to the Alsop/Bartlett parrot, a known nesting buddy of the bald eagle. The hawk ruffles its feathers and prances on the limb, deeply impressing the parrot, which naturally squawks and squeals. The bald eagle, however, sensing trouble a-wing, shrewdly turns its back on the sordid mess. The flustered dove regains its composure, the blustering hawk falls off the limb on its head, and the parrot, of course, winds up eating crow. End of bestiary.

Washingtonians are rather avid readers, to change the subject, and lately they have been prattling and honking about Mary McCarthy's The Group and James Baldwin's The Fire Next Time, among other bad books.

Miss McCarthy is a problem. She writes extremely well, has an acrimonious wit, and is capable of maiming for literary life with one whip-lash of her critical tongue. Though I'm among those who read her every word, it seems to me she is bitterly twisted in one area. Some one must have been the cause of what might be called a libidinous hysterectomy when she was young, for her loathing of the male animal is quite vicious. One is hard-put to recall a genuinely appealing masculine character in her books. And even she has remarked about one of her sympathetic creations, a character in her novel, A Charmed Life: "He's too sweet to be mortal!" Her other males turn up simpering, ignorant, parasitic or sadistic; if they begin to acquire admirable qualities, she will manage to castrate them eventually. Miss McCarthy, at times, might well have been more in her element on a sheep farm, dagging the hogget (that's gelding sheep the hard way). It must be sad for her, though, knowing she'll never be as good as Dorothy Parker.

James Baldwin is a cat of another stripe. F. W. Dupee, in that grand first edition of The New York Review of Books, has written the best review I have seen of the essays. Baldwin is another fine writer, a crisp and fertile essayist with a smooth style. But the important essay in this book ("Down At the Cross; Letter From a Region of My Mind") is an attempt at prophecy that stirs up bitter bile, in both white and Negro. It is maddeningly deceptive, as well, for much of what has happened to Baldwin as a Negro in America can only elicit compassion. But, finally, the appeal ends up being more useful to the extremists, and Baldwin has defeated his own purpose.

I'd rather listen to Martin Luther King, Jr., he seems to be living more to the point, and his voice has a sad but clear ring.

C'mon Forum

By PETER HARKNESS

Has it occurred to anyone that there has not been one speaker on the campus yet sponsored by the Carolina Forum?

This is a pretty terrible situation considering the fact that $2245 of your money and mine goes to the Forum this year, appropriated by the Student Legislature.

In the past, the Forum has been highly successful. Last year, for instance, there were so many Forum-sponsored speakers the Legislature appropriated an increase in funds for this year.

Now, since the Forum has failed to bring anyone to the campus, there is a danger that the legislators will react and cut appropriations for next year.

Come on Forum, the Speaker Ban doesn't mean you can't have any speakers!

Flights To Europe

By PETER RANGE

Many students would like to spend a summer in Europe traveling on their own. The first step is getting there cheap. The answer: Graham Memorial student flights.

In conjunction with Pan-Am and TWA, Graham Memorial is offering round trip flights from New York to London and return this summer at reduced rates. Round-trip fare will be $310 on all flights, as opposed to $500 regular price.

All students and staff members of the Consolidated University are eligible to join the flights.

Four tentative flights have been set up:

No. 1—leave New York June 9, return September 9.

No. 2—leave New York June 4, return July 15.

No. 3—leave New York June 23, return August 5.

No. 4—leave New York July 22, return September 8.

In order to determine how many students are interested in each flight, all persons considering the trip are asked to sign up now at the G.M. Info Desk. No obligation is involved. Only in February will the actual applications be sent out.

Deadline for reservations will be around March when a $50 deposit will be due. Full payment for the flight will be due around the end of April. No reservation is transferable.

Last year Graham Memorial offered the flights for the first time. About one-hundred students took advantage of the opportunity. A larger number of participants is foreseen this year.

Most students are unaware of the possibilities of traveling on their own or with a smaller group not connected with an organized tour. Students traveling in the summer is as common a sight to Europeans as baseball is to us. Hitchhiking, bicycling, scootering, and hiking are all very popular among students there.

A student can travel by these means with more security than in the U.S. because it is so widespread. Girls and boys alike can do this.

A summer in Europe need not cost $250 more than the transocean transportation costs. Some students have done it on $100. Accomodation is cheap if you stay in the countless youth hostels and student hostels covering Europe. Food is cheap if you learn to make your own food bought at the grocery store. No student need waste money on gift-buying, night-clubing, and the like. Save that for your old age.

With your International student ID card, you can get into theatre, concerts, opera, museums, and student trips to distant countries at about one-half the regular price.

In order to dissiminate and supplement the information offered in these columns, Graham Memorial and Seminars Abroad will soon sponsor a meeting of all persons interested in travel abroad. Included will be a brief slide show, a panel discussion, and a question-and-answer session. Time and place will be announced next week.

Student Klansmen

Calvin Craig, the Grand Dragon of the Georgia Ku Klux Klan, announced recently that 32 University students had joined the ranks of the KKK.

Since that time there has been no record of open KKK activity on campus. But Craig has sworn upon his green robe that he has papers to prove these student Klansmen are indeed here on campus.

Craig, however, has refused to name the new initiates and their activity, if any, is obviously undercover.

It is a shame that supposedly intelligent college students would affiliate with an organization whose purposes are based on such backward, prejudiced, un-American concepts.

If they did not feel some shame or guilt in their membership, these students should have no objections to having their their names made public. Craig's refusal to name them and their failure to make themselves known is an obvious admission of the Klan's ignoble aims.

The Indian Summer has left us and it appears as though we may be in for a chilly winter. Personally, I can't stand cold weather (I've lived in Florida for nine years and was in Hawaii for two) and October suited me fine.

Ah, well, one can't ask for everything. UNC is better than ever. Look at what happened lately: the Student-Faculty Judicial Review Board mess, the football team won all its games, the Gag Law may have been violated and Aycock's announcement of his intention to resign, to mention just a few.

The faculty decision about the judicial review board was done in such a miserable manner that the sum-total of the whole mess could easily be a strengthening of the position of students and student government. Mr. Spechar's offered resignation from the legislature was somewhat silly, but it is definitely a better method of attaining martyrdom than immolating oneself.

I hope that the students will attack such problems in the responsible and experienced manner of Lawler and Spearman, rather than leaping off the deep end with all the varieties of bitter pills. Student government is on the verge of realizing that foolish things cannot be attacked in a foolish manner—for example, the sane approach to the gag law.

And the football team. During my first two years at UNC I attended exactly two games. Every other Saturday I spent on the golf course. This year I even went to an away game! The team has better than a 50-50 chance of playing in a bowl, and if they can get by Clemson, Miami and Duke we may well be sitting in the Orange Bowl come New Year's Day. If we lose one of the three, the Gator Bowl might find a place for us. And there are only eight seniors on the first two teams. I'm glad I'm just a junior.

The Everett Dormitory bull session featuring Larry Phelps proved several things—no one knows exactly who is a Red, no one knows exactly who should be barred from speaking and no one knows exactly what happens if someone intentionally violates the Speaker Ban.

This week a Soviet physicist spoke on campus, and nobody said much about it. Dr. George E. Nicholson, head of the Statistics Department, said that Dr. V. V. Petrov was not a member of the Communist Party, that it was his responsibility to worry about such matters and he had checked everything out. There has been no comment on the matter by any of the ban's supporters, so this may be a precedent.

The ban has no teeth, and everything may well be back to normal within a few months.

Chancellor Aycock's decision to return to teaching saddened many hearts. He had been under fire many times, but in the final analysis he will prove to have done a damn good job.

Choosing his successor will be a long process. Many names will be considered between now and June and the committee has a wide choice. Perhaps the top candidate is Alexander Heard, former Dean of the UNC Graduate School and present chancellor of Vanderbilt. But Vandy pays $40,000 and UNC is half that.

Gordon Blackwell, former chancellor at Women's College and present chancellor at Florida State, is another outstanding man, but I suspect he would like to stay at FSU, which he has made the top college in that state.

So who's it going to be? Well, try this one on for size—Terry Sanford. Don't laugh too loud, my friends.

Staff members of the Daily Tar Heel yesterday voted 9-1 to abolish the Di-Phi Society.

The resolution, proposed by Etadin Moladnu, stated "whereas, the Di-Phi has become a bunch of people who get together every other Tuesday night to abolish something and; whereas there is very little left now and; whereas it is about time these people were abolished—be it resolved that the Di-Phi no longer exists."

The lone dissenting vote was cast by Sue Simonds, who said, "anyone as cute as Hubert Hawkins should never be abolished."

Immediately after the vote was taken it was learned the YMCA had voted to abolish Christians; Christian groups had voted to abolish DKE (for allowing Negroes in their house); DKE had voted to abolish Negroes (for coming in their house); and Negroes had voted to abolish 14 business establishments in Chapel Hill. Other groups were meeting as the DTH went to press, and it appears that Chapel Hill will disappear by noon.

a trial by the IFC Court would be based on retroactive procedures.

"The IFC Court did not officially have jurisdiction over individuals on the date when the alleged offenses occured," he said. "It seems to me that this court could try the organization, but not the individuals, since jurisdiction over individual members was granted only in Tuesday's election."

However, Dean Long indicated, the implications of the situation should be decided by Student Government.

held Oct. 26.

The Residence Hall Improvements bill, introduced by Donald Carson (UP), was amended before passing.

The amendment stemmed from a lengthy discussion disclosing that the committee had "failed in its function" last year.

Under the amendment the new head of the committee will be an executive appointment by President Mike Lawler.

The new head will be able to put more time into making the committee more useful.

The Administration has hinted that it "might make a five-figure appropriation" only after a good working committee was established.

Coeds Return

Two Carolina coeds reported missing Thursday night were located yesterday when they called from Virginia Beach, Va.

Parents of the two girls were notified of their absence Thursday night and immediately came here to consult with Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

The coeds were due to return to Chapel Hill last night. Both went to Virginia with dates from the campus. All four persons apparently will face Honor Council proceedings.

UNC Ain't Sacred—Just Ask Frank Howard

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

AS A NEWLY-APPOINTED member of the neuveau riche and a charter subscriber to Inanity, I continue to amaze myself with the ineptitude of these weekly football picks.

I really would rather do something else than subject myself to the attacks from people who know so much more than anyone else. Like write commercials for Winston or Marlboro—I tried that this week. But they were all rejected—I don't have any tattoos. And, besides, they were inane, snide and tasteless.

But I have decided to stop the continuing harrassments of Wake Forest (which are totally unwarranted) so that my future employers at the tobacco warehouses in Winston-Salem will take more kindly to me. Maybe they'll even hire me soon to either roll cigarettes or write ads, and I'll be able to escape the clutches of the capitalistic lords in the DTH advertising department and their money-pinching king, Art Pearce.

I'd sure as heck make more from commercials than from this rag.

But for now the Clemson battle is at hand, and UNC hasn't had a more important ACC game all year. A win means a championship, or at least a tie for a championship. A loss means . . . well, we don't talk about a loss. Especially when Frank Howard's in town. He does enough talking for five mortals, Jesse Helms and a myna bird.

I get worse every week at this game. When the first returns came in last Saturday, it looked like I picked five wrong out of four games—but Alabama finally won. Another wire service story came over from Clemson late in the day, and somebody yelled "Wake Forest SCORED." But, too bad, it was a misprint.

The record was 16-9 for the week. Indicative of the performance was "LSU over Mississippi, by 7." That was close. It is now 122-47-11 and the percentage is down to .722.

DUKE AT WAKE FOREST. The Blue Dukes were smashed last week and should be in for a rough time again today against a strong, tough aggregation from Winston. The Baptist Deacons will be up for this one and their powerful line and swift, hard-hitting backfield will be a good test for Duke. It may be close. Duke, by 80.

VPI AT NC STATE. That football rarity, a great running quarterback, will pose a big problem for the Wolfpack. Though a sound ball club, State may be living on borrowed time. I wish it had come last week, but the upset today is in Bob Schweickert's hands. VPI, by 7.

MARYLAND AT NAVY. A couple of other fair country quarterbacks perform at Annapolis. But the Navy's got more where it counts. Roger Staubach and his mates just may make up the best team in the country. Navy, by 15.

SOUTH CAROLINA AT MEMPHIS STATE. The Gamecocks played a team last week that hadn't won all year. But they managed to lose—easily. They play today a team that hasn't lost all year. Again, they will lose—easily. Memphis State, by 20.

GEORGIA AT FLORIDA. Humbled last week, Larry Rakestraw didn't slip much in his national ranking. He's still the third man in total offense. Florida continues to sleep every other week. A 3-3-1 is not what the Gators were supposed to be. But this is a week of awakening. Florida, by 10.

FLORIDA STATE AT GEORGIA TECH. A rash of injuries, apologies, etc. which has hit Bobby Dodd's ends has not dulled too severely the bowl hopes of the Ramblin' Wreck. This is largely because of the one-man gang, Billy Lothridge. On the way to the big one with Alabama next week, Tech should not be stopped by the Seminoles. George Tech, by 11.

TCU AT LSU. The carnage that took place at Baton Rouge last time out was sort of unbelievable. TCU isn't as good as Mississippi and LSU is a little embarrassed. The Bengals should come roaring back again. LSU, by 9.

AUBURN AT MISSISSIPPI STATE. Jimmy Sidle, a quarterback, leads the country again in rushing, and he has carried this surprising team to a number five ranking. But State came within a point of Alabama last week. Color this one Maroon—an upset. Mississippi State, by 5.

PRINCETON AT HARVARD. These two clubs have almost the exact same total defense marks, and they rank nationally fifth and fourth, respectively. But this first team, see, scores 32 points a game. And they have this great big fullback, see, whose name is Cosmo. How can you beat that? Ivily, for the championship. Princeton, by 8.

MICHIGAN AT ILLINOIS. For the Brothers Elliott, the shoe is on the other foot for the first time since they began playing against each other. Pete, from Illinois, sends his darkhorse against Bump as a definite favorite. It's justified. Illinois, by 13.

OREGON STATE AT INDIANA. An upset winner over Minnesota last week, Indiana goes intersectional this time. Gordon Queen, an adequate Beaver, is nonetheless, no Terry Baker. Indiana, by 10.

MINNESOTA AT IOWA. The Hawkeyes continue to lose the close games this year. They've dropped two three-pointers and had a couple of other touchdown losses. But this one should be a tight one they win—despite Carl Eller. Iowa, by 12.

KANSAS AT NEBRASKA. Nebraska's big one comes in two weeks against Oklahoma. But this is no time to rest. The best halfback in America, Gayle Sayers, will be a good match for Dennis Claridge and the Cornhuskers. Nebraska, by 3.

PITTSBURGH AT NOTRE DAME. The explosive Panthers fought fire with fire last week and outscored Syracuse. But Notre Dame is tired of being pushed around after the big win over Southern Cal. Notre Dame, by 7.

PENN STATE AT OHIO STATE. Buckeye finesse and power have found a new leader in the splendid soph, Tom Barrington. Along with the big runner, Matt Snell and the quick one, Paul Warfield, he gives OSU some high face cards in the bid for the roses. Ohio State, by 16.

MICHIGAN STATE AT PURDUE. MSU puts in the bid also. And now people are beginning to realize just how good this team is. Today, it'll be a tough one, however, and the Spartans may need another Sherman Lewis squirm to pull it out. Michigan State, by 6.

Booters Take Fifth On 3-1 Emory Win

By RON LOGAN

North Carolina's soccer team caught fire midway in the third quarter and rolled to a convincing 3-1 win over a surprisigly-strong Emory University eleven yesterday.

UNC completely dominated play throughout the game, and, although the defense left much to be desired, the Tar Heels limited Emory to four shots on goal as compared to thirty boots by Carolina.

Marty Kruming, Jim Talbott, and Edwin Okoroma were responsible for the UNC tallies. Kruming's came with 37 seconds left in the first half, Talbot's with 9:39 gone in the third quarter, and Okoroma's with only :30 left in the same period.

The game started off very slowly, but midway through the second quarter the pace began to pick up. By the time Kruming headed in a corner kick by Pete Blake both teams were in high gear.

The second Carolina goal came on a penalty kick by Talbot after a handball call against Emory, but just a minute and a half later Emory's Bill Eager tightened the score with a boot which got past NC goalie Tom Roberts.

The game was still up in the air until Okoroma swept in from his left wing position, faked out Emory goalie Alex McKinnon, and booted his first goal of the season into the nets.

"Although we played an aggressive game, our defense was bad. Emory didn't get many shots, but our tackling was poor, and we weren't coming out to meet the ball," said Coach Marvin Allen.

"We were a little flat after being up so high for the Maryland match on Monday, and we are very happy to come out of the game today with a win," he continued.

Carolina's record is now 5-3-1 and only one game remains on the schedule, but that game is THE GAME. The Blue Devils of Duke travel to the Hill this coming Friday, and, if past performances are any indication, the Heels have a good chance of whipping the invaders. Only one problem — past performances won't count in the final score.

Seek First Win In Five Years

out thrashings of Virginia and Wake Forest, the Tigers haven't forgotten the four losses and a tie which started their season. In order Howard's 'Cats lost to Oklahoma, Georgia Tech and N. C. State, tied Georgia and lost to Duke. All tough opponents, but four losses are four losses.

However, the Tigers' 2-4-1 record is deceiving when used as a reference for games yet unplayed. In many cases, Clemson has beat itself. Ball-bobbling has resulted in loss of possession 21 times. This means 21 scoring opportunities have been thrown away.

The Tiger attack is directed by quarterback Jim Parker with fullback Pat Crain creating most of the noise. Ramming off the tackles, Crain has picked up 343 yards in 98 carries this fall. Backing him up at this postion is soph Bob Swift, and down in Death Valley they talk about this fellow as perhaps "the best player ever to attend Clemson."

Halfbacks Mack Matthews and Billy Ward are hard runners and good blockers, while an experienced and beefy forward wall is anchored by tackle Vic Aliffi and center Ted Bunton. Both are considered All-ACC material, End Lou Fogle is the team's No. 1 pass receiver.

The Tigers arrived in Chapel Hill Friday afternoon and went through a 20-minute, sweat-suit workout in Kenan Stadium. Their big coach was in a good mood.

"I brought 47 players with me and 45 are ready to play," said Howard, commenting on his team's physical condition. "Of course I'll need most of 'em to cover Lacey. I plan to put one man behind him, one in front of him and two on each side of him."

On the Tar Heels, Howard said they've got a real good team, "but I don't see anything sacred about 'em." He outlined a rosy future for UNC.

"They oughta go to the Orange Bowl or the Sugar Bowl of the Cotton Bowl or some bowl," said Howard.

Maybe true — IF they beat Clemson.

ZBT, Nurses Win Co-Rec's First Place

By AL KAPLAN

ZBT teamed up with Nurses Dorm 2 and copped two first places in Tether Ball and Box Hockey, to win the annual Co-Rec Carival Thursday night.

Finishing second with 12 points, two behind the winners, was the team of DKE and Whitehead 2. The combo was good for two third place finishes, in Carnival Games and the relays, and a second in Tether Ball.

Avery-West Cobb 1 scored 11 points including a first place in Archery, for a third place.

This was one of the largest Co-Rec Carnivals held at UNC, with a total of 80 men's and women's teams participating.

Clemson Hex Hurts Title, Bowl Chances

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

They say any success a football team accumulates during its season is half due to ability, half to luck. North Carolina was lucky here yesterday, lucky to come within four points of a Clemson team which completely outclassed it both on the field and afterwards on paper.

The final score was 11-7, but it could just as easily have been 29-7 for the big, mean Tigers from South Carolina blew three sure touchdowns in the first half which they came out of with only a 3-0 lead, and then matched TDs with UNC in the final two periods to put away the devastating win—a sixth straight one in their jinx over the Tar Heels.

Devestating could be the word for it, but disastrous would also fit because UNC now can only share an ACC championship (and they'll have to beat Duke to do that) and the Heels' chances for post-season bowl play may have also disappeared.

UNC yesterday was beaten on the ground (by almost 100 yards), beaten in the air and unmercifully beaten on defense where the Clemson line just told 'em they were coming and then came — right through 'em.

It's sort of hard to see how this team could have been beaten by NC State and tied by Georgia but for all the domination by the visitors of Big Papa Howard, the Tar Heels did show well at the start of the second half when they took the kickoff and went 62 yards in 15 plays for a 7-3 lead.

Ken Willard went busting over from the three-yard line at the end of the drive, and nearly 36,000 people arose in anticipation of a rally that would cut down the big cats in short order. It never came.

On the Carolina touchdown march, Bob Lacey played All-American again, and it looked easy when he caught three lookin passes from quarterback Junior Edge for a total of 28 yards and three first downs. On all three maneuvers, Lacey skipped past a lone defender, kept balance with one hand and went an additional five or six yards with two men on his back.

These, a 13-yard rollout by Edge and a seven-yard over-the-middle pass to John Hammett which set up the TD run, were the big gainers in the effective march.

But, when the Heels got the ball back a few minutes later to go for the killer, they couldn't touch it. The second unit was in with Gary Black at the controls, but after they went from the UNC 33 to the Clemson 23, it was all over.

Carolina took up much of the quarter with this bit, but with a second-and-six from the Tigs' 23, Joe Robinson dropped a pass right in his belly at the 15, and that hurt. On the next two plays, Black was smothered by Clark Gaston and then overthrew Ron Tuthill at the goal line.

An exchange of punts gave Clemson the ball on its 12 just after the fourth quarter opened and the Tigers began a long roar which lasted till the final gun and victory.

Jim Parker, a fine ballhandler and faker, led his team and some of the hardest-hitting backs Carolina has seen to the clinching touchdown in 14 plays.

Most of the yardage came as it had all day for the Cats—on the ground. But 38 of them were covered in one big motion of Parker's arm when he threw deep to Johnny Case on a play that went to the UNC 33. It was the fourth time during the day the vaunted Tar Heel pass defense was embarrassed by the long bomb.

From there, Clemson took it in on those sharp, thrusting power sweeps which Howard teaches to such perfection.

Pat Crain, Mack Matthews and Billy Ward alternating taking handoffs from Parker, and when they had gotten it down to the one, the Tiger quarterback called on himself for the sneak that shot UNC down.

It came with 7:54 left in the game, and when Carolina jumped offsides on Frank Pearce's conversion attempt, Clemson decided to go for two from the shorter distance, a protection from any Tar Heel field goal.

The Tigers got the 11-7 when Parker received terrific protection on a pass to Lou Fogle in the corner. But they didn't need it, for UNC could get only to the Clemson 37 in two more tries with the ball.

Once, Edge (third and three from the UNC 47) threw a quickee that was almost intercepted—the Tar Heels had to punt.

Then, when they got the ball back with 4:10 to play, again a third-down play failed when Edge was trapped passing from the Clemson 39 for a seven yard loss, and a nine-yard screen to Willard on the last down could not get enough of it back.

The Tigers started their zoo parade early on the warm (high 60's) day, but their own mistakes and a big penalty deprived them of an early feeding time.

The second time it had the ball, Clemson went to the air on the first down from its 40, and Parker threw a beauty that went right into Bob Poole's hands at the Carolina 25. Poole had Ronnie Jackson easily beaten and a touchdown in perfect reach, but the big end dropped the ball as Clemson fans moaned and UNC fans gasped. Carolina then held at its 43.

The next Tiger series saw them get five first downs while going 62 yards to the UNC 18 only to pull a faux-pas on a brilliant run by Bob Swith.

Swift, Crain's replacement in the backfield stronghold but probably also his equal, burst off left tackle and sprinted into the end zone for what looked like a sure TD. But end Charlie Meadowcroft was charged with a clip on the play, and they had to go back down to the other end as the quarter changed.

Two running plays couldn't get it all, and Parker fumbled for the third down, so Pearce calmly kicked a 40-yard field goal with 14:04 left in the half.

UNC got only one first down in the opening half, and that came in the early minutes, so Clemson continued to growl the rest of this second period and scratched its way down to the Carolina 11 after the field goal.

Only 1:33 remained when the Tigers called time out to decide what to do. But on the next play, their plan apparently didn't work because sub QB Tom Ray fumbled on a power sweep and a third easy touchdown went down the drain.

Ronnie Jackson recovered it, but it will take a lot of spirit and points in the next two games before Carolina, as a team, recovers from this one.

Clemson's Rick Johnson (70) and Joe Blackwell (67) contain Carolina fullback in first-half action of yesterday's Kenan Stadium battle. An estimated 36,000 fans watched as Clemson defeated the Tar Heels, 11-7, while dealing a severe blow to both UNC's ACC Championship hopes and post-season bowl plans. Carolina is now tied with Duke and NC State in the race for the league crown, all three with 5-1 records.

Aycock Looses Searing Blast At Speaker Gag

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Chancellor William B. Aycock launched a blistering attack upon the so-called gag-law Saturday, calling it "a stigma, an insult and a limitation imposed upon higher education."

He told his audience of UNC alumni and others:

"If there was a choice between giving us your money or giving us your time in getting this law repealed, then we would surely say, 'Keep your money and give us your time.'

"Only the legislature has the power to get rid of this unfortunate stigma," Aycock continued. "The only power we have is the power of education . . . to show the people and the legislature the tremendous harm in this bill. And it takes time for such an educational power to assert itself."

Speaking at the annual meeting of the UNC Alumni Board of Directors, Aycock cited the law as being "full of ambiguities," and called it "the sloppiest bit of legislation I have ever witnessed.

"It was also the poorest-drafted legislation that I have ever seen and is the most serious challenge to the University since the Monkey Bill of the 20's," he said. The Monkey Bill prohibited teaching Darwin's theory of evolution. It was never passed.

"People who have taken the Fifth Amendment can't speak on the campus irrespective of what they talk about," Aycock continued. "They can speak on the steps of the Post Office or in the Chapel Hill High School, but, no, they can't speak on campus.

"It's just like the Legislature has told the University, 'I'm sorry, but we can't trust you to discriminate between different ideologies'."

Aycock said the law was supposedly passed to "meet an evil that was supposed to exist."

"But I can assure you that there was no need for such a law," he said. "There is no evidence on any of UNC's three campuses to indicate any need for such a law, that takes basic fundamental rights away from the University.

"If there was an evil to be met, it certainly wasn't proved, and even if they (the legislature) had proven there was an evil, this law was very inept in meeting it.

"If there was an evil, and if you were going to have something to offset it, the evil should be so great that the people would give up a fundamental right of the University, that is, freedom of speech, to offset the evil.

"But the legislature slapped this so-called evil down without proving it."

Referring again to the Monkey Bill of the 20's, Aycock said it didn't become law because some of the leaders of the state had the foresight to envision its consequences. If these backers of the Monkey Bill were in the legislature today they wouldn't dream of proposing their law now, Aycock said. It would be absurd.

"The same problem is with us today," he continued. "The leaders in this state who can foresee the damaging implications of this current law must work for its repeal.

"One of the most used arguments of the bill's backers," Aycock continued, "is that the majority of the people across the state are in favor of it, and that the legislature is only responding to the public will. They say if the bill were submitted to the people, it would receive overwhelming approval.

"But the legislators are supposed to be leaders with foresight, and not subject to the immediate whims of the people. The legislature purposely never submits many questions to the people. They wouldn't dare let them vote on a referendum to abolish the sales tax for education or outlaw the sale of liquor in the state, or even a question of whether the state should own an airplane.

"If they did, we'd have no sales tax, no liquor sales, and no airplane. So the argument is not valid.

"I don't know if the people really realize what this law is doing to the University, especially in the field of science. If a man has a funny name, people call me and ask, 'Should we let him speak'?

"The legislature passed an appropriation of $2 million to establish a National Science Board in the Research Triangle. This was a pet project of the Governor and was considered the only way to get more scientists in this area and give them a favorable environment in which to work.

"But then the Legislature turns right around and says you can't have this favorable environment. It's just as if this $2 million appropriation was washed down the drain," he said.

"People keep telling us to 'Be quiet, be quiet.' But we can't be quiet. This law is before us every hour of every day. We've got it and we can't forget it. People call every day asking all kinds of questions on the law. I got a letter Friday from a man in Texas asking me if he would be able to speak on this campus. It's like that all the time," Aycock said, "so that's why we can't forget it."

Aycock said proponents of the gag-law were using the argument, "If you're for this bill, then you are against Communism, but if you are against it, then you are for Communism."

"Nothing could be farther from the truth," Aycock said.

"The law is so full of ambiguities that even the author (Secretary of State Thad Eure) couldn't possibly say what it really means."

STUDENT GETS PROBATION

A student was placed on indefinite all-campus probation and two others given official reprimands in Men's Residence Court trials this week.

A student pleaded guilty to a "serious" violation of Dormitory Regulations and was sentenced to indefinite all-campus probation.

The penalty cannot be removed before Feb. 1.

In the other case two co-defendants pleaded guilty to a violation of Dormitory Regulations. Pleas of guilty were accepted by the Court and both were given official reprimands.

You & The Law

What's the relationship between the law and the 10,500 students at UNC?

The answers to that and other similar questions will be discussed on WUNC-TV Monday night at 8:30 p.m. on "Encounter."

Guests will include Arthur J. Beaumont, campus safety officer; Chapel Hill Police Chief William D. Blake; and Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge William Stewart.

RTVMP Professor John Clayton, moderator of the weekly show, said other questions will deal with the kinds of problems police officers encounter in dealing with students; the relative seriousness of student pranks; the extent to which the police try to protect the reputation of students in trouble; and the relationship between the police and the press in disclosing information about students who break the law.

N. C. Enrollment By '70: 109 - 125,000 Students

North Carolina will have between 109,00 and 125,000 students wanting to go to college by the end of this decade, Consolidated University President William C. Friday said this week. Public institutions must be prepared to accept about 60 per cent of them, he added.

Friday, addressing a two-day meeting of the high school section of the Division of Principals of the N. C. Education Assoc. in Greensboro, noted that private institutions are doing their share in higher education in the State.

He told the principals, "We cannot admit a student who, by his demonstrated record with you, is not prepared for college work." He said the major requirement to the university is what the student did in secondary school to prepare himself for college.

Friday said he does not feel the new requirement of a total of 800 points on the College Board aptitude tests excessive. "Too high a percentage of students admitted in years past are in the low test group and now are in difficulty." He noted that the average score at the university in Chapel Hill is 1,070 and at North Carolina State it is equally high.

STUDENT CONVICTED

A student was convicted on a Campus Code violation and given an official reprimand in a Women's Council open trial this week. The student pleaded guilty to a charge of being two hours and 20 minutes late.

The student had remained at another women's residence without properly signing out and had not immediately contacted the administration in either residence.

The incident occurred during the latter part of the first session of summer school and the trial had been delayed until the student's return this fall.

Vermont Royster Adds His Voice To Gag Protest

Vermont C. Royster, editor of the Wall Street Journal, Saturday voiced his opposition to the controversial State Speaker Ban Law, saying that students should be able to hear people with differing opinions.

In a brief interview, Royster said, "When I was a student here in the mid 30's, there were speakers here of all shapes and opinions including some who were considered pretty radical.

"I never saw that it hurt me or any of my friends to listen to any of these people. I listened to their opinions and think that it made the University a better place, in that people with all kinds of opinions were welcomed here."

Royster is second vice president of the general alumni assication of UNC. The board of directors held their annual meeting here Saturday prior to the UNC-Clemson game.

Royster concluded his brief comments on the gag-law by declaring emphatically, "I am very much against it."

Campus Chest Drive Holds Interviews Thru Next Week

Organization of this year's Campus Chest drive is now under way, according to Betty Ward and Henry Morgan, co-chairmen of the Campus Chest Committee.

Anyone interested in working with the committee can drop by the Campus Office, on the second floor of the Y building, for a brief interview. The interviews are to be strictly informal, and will be held from 2:30-5:30 Monday through Thursday, each week until Thanksgiving.

The purpose of the interviews, according to the co-chairmen, is to acquaint interested students with the workings of the committee, and to find out the extent and area of their interests. No previous experience is necessary for work on the committee.

The Campus Chest is the only authorized fund-raising drive on the campus that is put on by students. Money collected from the drive each year goes to a number of charities selected in advance by a student Interim Committee.

Charities to be represented in this year's drive are the World University Service (WUS), the American Friends Service, the World Clothing Service, and research donations for white and Negro mental patients in North Carolina.

The Campus Chest was begun as strictly a World University Service drive, but in 1958, branched out to include a number of charities and a variety of fund-raising devices.

A "Campus Chest Week" is set aside in March for the drive, in which funds are received through individual solicitations, an organized auction, and the Campus Chest Carnival.

An auction and the carnival were added in recent years to promote more student interest and participation in the drive, and have added greatly to the success of the Campus Chest. The auction offers student- and merchant-donated articles for sale to the highest bidder, and the carnival consists of a variety of rides, games and booths sponsored by organizations on the campus.

The co-chairmen emphasized the fact that a large and efficient committee will be needed to plan and carry out these various activities of the drive, and that a good deal of fun and enjoyment is involved in the committee's work toward the ultimate goal of a strong Campus Chest collection.

Peace Medal Goes To Martin L. King

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King, Southern civil rights leader, received the Roman Catholic St. Francis peace medal Saturday "for truly Christ-like efforts in behalf of peace among all men."

The Negro leader received the medal at a luncheon for 1,008 Catholic leaders given by the lay organization of Franciscans. He was cited for his "truly Christian approach through his program of non-violence in the campaign for equal rights and opportunity for all minority groups."

The Rev. Dr. King's principles were likened to those of St. Francis of Assisi, who founded the Franciscan order 750 years ago.

Others who have received the Catholic award in the past have been the late Pope Pius XII, speaker of the House John McCormack, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, and Dr. Ralph Bunche.

Duke Grad Plays Lead In 'Journey'

By JOHN WHITTY

Richard Parks, an experienced young actor from Jacksonville, Fla., is playing the role of Edmond Tyrone, the dramatic counterpart of the young playwright himself, in the Carolina Playmakers production of "Long Day's Journey Into Night," one of the last dramas written by Eugene O'Neill.

The play, which opens to the general public on Wednesday, Nov. 20 for a six-performance run in the Playmakers Theatre, has been referred to by many critics as the finest American play of our time.

A recent graduate of Duke University, Parks is now a graduate assistant in the Department of Dramatic Art at UNC. With a list of theatrical experience and background that would do credit to an oldtimer, Parks appeared in leading roles with the Duke Players in "Richard II," "The Fantasticks," and "Death of a Salesman."

He has directed "Anything Goes" for the Triangle Summer Theatre in Durham and "Once Upon a Mattress" for Hoof 'n' Horn, the Duke musical comedy theatre. In June, the Playmakers produced his original one-act play, "Where Do You Go When It Starts to Rain?"

In "Long Day's Journey Into Night," Parks has the task of portraying Eugene O'Neill himself, although the playwright has changed the name of his family to Tyrone. Other than the change of names, however, O'Neill has created a monumental drama which mirrors the tensions and conflicts of his own family life.

The production opens at the Playmakers Theatre for a special Student Night performance Tuesday Nov. 19, and will continue through the end of the week, including a Sunday matinee and evening performance on Nov. 24.

Tickets will go on sale at the Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall and at Ledbetter-Pickard on Thursday.

The Stench Of Truth Is Gagging

Slowly, like the maladorous trickle of a clogged sewer pipe, the sordid truth about the background of the gag law is coming out.

Proponents of the law would have the citizens of North Carolina believe it was motivated by the legislature's desire to help stamp out communism, which we agree is a worthy aim. But now, no less a person that Secretary of State Thad Eure has dispelled this lie and laid bare the shabby motivations which prompted some of our legislators.

Eure should certainly be in a position to know, for Friday, in a speech to the American Legion he said, ". . . This hand wrote every word in that bill . . . I have no hesitancy in saying that this hand wrote every word . . . " Of course the bill was passed four months ago and Mr. Eure has just begun to pat himself on the back. Maybe that length of time doesn't constitute a hesitancy to him, but even he must admit it could be termed a slight stutter

In his speech, Eure went on to say that if the law's opponents were successful in getting it repealed, ". . . I've got another one." After the Legion meeting, however, Eure was questioned by a reporter and softened his statements quite a bit. What he had really meant to say was that he could write another bill if the present one is repealed, and that the original bill, now law, was just his presentation of a similar law that the Ohio Legislature did not pass.

We won't quibble about his equivocation over who wrote or copied what from where, for what is truly significant in the Secretary's remarks is his recount of how the law came to be brought up in the first place, as reported in Friday's edition of The Raleigh Times.

In Eure's words, it all came to a head one night while he and Judge L. J. Phipps, of Chapel Hill, were standing in the entrance of the Sir Walter Raleigh Hotel in Raleigh and saw a white man in a civil rights parade going by. Phipps—then the Representative from Orange County—told him that the man was a UNC professor.

Eure said he then told Phipps that there should be some tactful way to see that the man didn't demonstrate anymore, because the legislature was still in session. Eure said that Phipps went to his room and tried to call Consolidated University President William Friday, but was unable to reach him. Phipps then got Fred Weaver, Secretary of the University, on the phone, but Weaver said nothing could be done.

Eure said Phipps then reported to members of the General Assembly, and some of the members said they would do something about it. "Some of the members were mad enough to go out and manhandle them (the demonstrators)," Eure continued. The members then told him of a law that the Ohio Legislature had considered, nd he sent for it.

"They brought it on themselves by permitting such goings on," Eure said.

So the truth sneaks out. All those fine gentlemen who wish to keep us safe from the communist menace and keep democracy strong, actually wished only to punish those who think our strong democracy should extend to everyone, even Negroes.

So we see the Gag Law for what it really is: A monument to bigotry, hidden under that wonderful catch-all of anti-communism.

The law remains, but the stench grows stronger.

Bartender: 'What's Eure's?'

N. C. Secretary of State Thad Eure says he has another gag in the bag of opponents of the present one succeed in getting it repealed. This is about as heartening as the doctor who told his patient, "the ankle's okay but the knee's got to go."

And then there was the bartender who turned to our honorable Secretary of State and said:

"Okay, bud. What's Eure's? Right. One Democracy On The Rocks, comin up."

More And More Controversy

Another Crisis

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Crisis number three of the school year has just arisen. First we had the speaker ban, then supplanting it came public accommodations, and now the student body is beset by the recent action of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline. One of the unique facets of the student body of the University of North Carolina is its ability to be in the midst of perpetual controversy. This ability is not really surprising considering the nature of our much touted Student Government with its widely heralded autonomy, and also the nature of our beloved oracle of omniscient wisdom, the Daily Tar Heel. Be that as it may, we are embroiled in the deepest and most vital controversy since the speaker ban, the dropping of students from the Student-Faculty Review Board.

I am not going to harangue you in the next few paragraphs with an inspiring discourse on the value of student rights and liberties. Nor am I going to urge you to pour out into Cameron Avenue and throw bombs at South Building, protesting with your dying breaths this blatant infringement of student rights.

For you see, my friends, we really have no rights beyond those the administration and faculty wish us to have.

Immediately, the brickbats begin to fly. Heresy upon heresy! Dissension within the ranks! Throw the wretch to the ravenous packs of Chapel Hill dogs!

Let's be sensible. What is really at stake in this issue? Certainly not the old shibboleth of student autonomy. No, the crux of the matter is whether or not students needs to serve on the Review Board and how justice will be affected by their presence or absence.

I would submit that there really is no need, nor is it right, for the President of the Student Body and the heads of the two Honor Councils to sit on the board with or without a vote. Most cases that come before the Honor Councils are quickly and fairly decided, with justice distributed in a forthright manner. Occasionally we have cases such as the Doug Moe affair in which the system of student administered justice breaks down. It it here that the more or less objective view of the faculty is reuqired. Perhaps I am mistaken in my belief, but the students responsible for passing judgment on fellow students in Honor Council cases must be interested in seeing their decision and the decisions and the decisions of their colleagues upheld, if not for the justification of their own judgment, at least for the maintenance of the validity of the system. For this reason, the idea of their impartial involvement in the case is questionable.

Under the Federal and State judicial systems, in the event of an appeal from a lower court, the judge of the lower court who has considered the case and rendered a decision, is rarely called on to sit in judgment on the case when it reaches the higher judicial level. The lower judge's interest in maintaining his decision would almost inevitably affect his involvement in the case.

Dr. Gordon Cleveland, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, has stated that the purpose of his committee's ruling was not the abolition of student rights, but rather the fulfillment of the need to provide justice for the students who appear before the board.

Granted that the manner in which the student body was informed of the faculty decision was unfortunate. To merely thrust the decision on the student body as a dictat, while perfectly within the power of the faculty, showed a lack of tact. To have advised Pres. Lawler and other key figures in Student Government of the pending action, to have reasoned with them, and at least to have pretended to maintain a semblance of student authority, would have produced less of an uproar and more efective student-faculty co-operation in the long run.

For all of its power, the administration and the faculty need Student Government to maintain the Honor System, the IDC, the DTH, the Yack, Orientation, and the many other useful and indeed vital functions performed by the wheels in Graham Memorial. In the interests of preserving these functions, I urge the faculty and administration to be more circumspect in the future in the use of their power.

But as for the removal of the President of the Student Body and the two Honor Council Chairmen from the Student-Faculty Review Board, the act has been committed, it is completely legal and certainly justified. It's all over except for the shouting. So, my friends, go on back to your dorm rooms and your fraternity houses and your offices in Graham Memorial and bide your time. Have hope. Have faith. For those with a yen for excitement, there's always another "crisis" just around the corner.

News Writing?

Editors, The Tar Heel

I would like to take this opportunity to express my agreement with the letter submitted by Frank Aycock concerning Curry Kirkpatrick's biased sports articles. I have had four years' experience as a sports writer—two years as sports editor of the Durham High Hi-Rocket and two years as a member of the Durham Morning Herald sports staff, so I feel qualified to express my views.

The sports editor of a college newspaper should be mature enough that his personal opinion would be omitted from his "news" articles; Kirkpatrick obviously lacks this maturity. School spirit is a wonderful thing to have, and he is not to be derided for having spirit.

However, he is so full of this spirit that his articles are anything but news articles . . . rather, they are Curry Kirkpatrick's personal opinions. And, as a journalism major (which I assume he is) Curry ought to know that a writer's personal opinions are expressed only in an editorial or his column, and the game stories are not columns or editorials, although Curry is trying very hard to place them in that catagory (sic).

The DAILY TAR HEEL ought to be proud of its 70 years of editorial freedom, but Kirkpatrick is using this freedom without regard to responsibility. If he persists in using the paper for his personal stomping grounds, someone should be given a position as adviser that his articles might be more closely censored in the future. Curry Kirkpatrick needs to take a lesson in straight news writing.

Mediocrity

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Mr. Bobby Ray read my article on free flicks as carelessly and thoughtlessly as he helped select films for our campus.

Several points are in order. (1) His remarks justified my criticism, whether he realizes it or not. He admits what I contended and deplored, that popular taste serves as the committee's criteria. (2) He finds it impossible to "suit each student's cinematic taste." This is irrelevant and not related to my point. To do so is neither possible nor desirable. I asked only that selected films be above ordinary in quality.

As chairman, Ray should have acquainted himself with professional movie critics, such as Dwight McDonald, Bosley Crowther, Hollis Alpert, James Agee, and other recognized "men in the know", who possess unquestioned critical perception and sensitivity. Their wealth of imagination is to a good film chairman as an anatomy text is to a medical student.

(3) There exists an abundance of available films which far outdistance any on the GM list in superiority of script, story, photography, acting, direction, and production. Any and all have the power to pull full houses at Carroll Hall. They have done so in recent years, and can do so again. Sadly, they were not chosen. They scheduled flicks, omitting the eight I suggested as fine, received mediocre or worse critical reception, and the critics were embarrassed to review them.

(4) The committee made a serious mistake in judgment with the shallow assumption that films which interest the most students utilize student money best. Not so, Mr. Ray. The fact is rather that students are the ones shortchanged culturally, spiritually and economically when they are given a cinematic diet of inane, stale, and undistinguished pictures.

(5) Ray stated that "Mr. McInnis mentions 10 films, eight of which he likes. Yet he is disappointed and asks that the committee 'cull from the gross garbage." It should have been obvious that all the other films, too numerous to mention individually, numbered the ones I thumped down.

(6) Ray overlooks the fact that Bergman's "Sawdust and Tinsel" is hardly vintage Bergman, and even if it was, the fact is more students are free to attend flicks on Friday and Saaturday night than Sunday, the reasons again being obvious. Hence, had it been scheduled the other way around, the crowds would have been there. There is uncalled-for condescension and cynicism in Ray's unfortunate statement which said, "However, through the Sunday Cinema we also attempt to please those students who are interested in films of more exceptional cinematic and artistic quality." We are all guilty,, I fear, of being interested in the superior film, whether it be shown Saturday or Sunday. We can always take in the hack work downtown in the commercial movie house or on TV. There is a big gap between what our complacency will allow us to watch and what our inner needs demand.

(7) The fact that Doris Day is America's "number-one box office attraction" is a silly, and again, irrelevant point. Teen-age bubblegummers may be influenced by such knowledge, but not responsible film-goers. Popularity polls have notoriously small significance in this matter. Most people on campus are genuinely interested in seeing vital movies, even though they get rare chances to do so.

(8) "Seven Year Itch" and "How To Marry A Millionaire" have sex and comedy, it is undeniable, and they are not strange or unorthodox. I did not ask that all free flicks be strange, but tried to indicate a crying need for the untrite, the different, the provocative movie. I used the term "sex comedies" to describe the recent rash of banal, contrived, coy and unfunny films, Monroe's sexual essence was a spontaneous crystaillization of her own personality, and it was completely natural, and uniquely artful. I plead wretchedly guilty to the charge of worshipping The Monroe. Now that she has left us, the world is a less lovely place in which to live, and the film world has lost its greatest sorceress.

(9) A great university such as UNC should not fail to make available to its students the opportunity to witness the classics, whether in music, theatre or the arts in general. Complacency forces the university's educational function out of focus. Mediocrity casts an unworthy image on us all.

Guide Posts

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I was concerned over the "firing" of Elayne Gilbert editor of the University of Miami Hurricane. The University Official stated Miss Gilbert was dismissed because of academic reasons and not for writing a controversial editorial. I confess that I am ignorant of the circumstances and facts involved in this particular incident. I am aware, however, that similar incidents have occurred in the past. Editors of student publications have been dismissed because of "lack of journalistic taste."

The article as it appeared in the DTH did, in fact, imply that the student publication board does impose restraints on the editors of a Miami student publication.

This incident at Miami does have serious implications. The right of a student to disagree; the right to express a minority or dissenting opinion has been and is being challenged. "Freedom of conscience, of education, of speech, of assembly, are among the very fundamentals of a democracy. All of them would be nullified should freedom of the press ever be successfully challenged."

I have observed several traditions at UNC which perhaps are not afforded at other institutions. Students at UNC have a voice in formulating and enforcing University policies and regulations. Trust of the student is exemplified by our Honor Code. The administration is susceptible to student criticism. Students may speak before the Board of Trustees to express their views. The DTH is an official organ of the University for student opinion-controversial or otherwise.

These few traditions at UNC have made students of other universities envious, and we at UNC quite proud and rightfully so.

I think of an education as the searching for truth; democracy as the right to participate. UNC possesses both of these qualities. These traditions should be upheld whenever questioned or challenged. If not, the principles for which an education and a democracy stand will become meaningless.

I hope that the incident at Miami will be a guide post for us all.

"Last One In Is A Vacillating Old Reactionary"

Sex In Hollywood

By RONALD SPAINHOUR

THE NEW YORK TIMES recently reported that movie producers are worried about what effects the increase of nudity in American films will have on censorship. Concern about Hollywood's attitude toward sex is long overdue. Hollywood's honesty and intent with its use of sex are to be questioned.

The right to use sex in American films has been a constant battle. In 1932 Miriam Hopkins waved her naked leg in the film "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and all hell broke loose. In "It Happened One Night" Clark Gable took off his shirt to reveal a bare chest without a tee shirt and tee shirt sales dropped.

Today themes dealing with sex may be used in American films. American films have finally come of age, matured, and grown up. But look how they have grown.

There are the funny sex films. Example: the Great White Virgin or the grown-up Shirley Temple—Doris Day—being chased by the Big White Tomcat—Rock Hudson or Cary Grant.

There are the travelogue sex films. Example: "Rome Adventure"—sex with beautiful scenery.

Next come the religious sex films. Example: "Solomon and Sheba"—they draw the pious to see mass pagan orgies in full sexorama.

Finally come what is known as the American realistic films. Example: "Walk on the Wild Side" with its pimps, prostitutes and lesbians. Ah—how realistic.

But the old Doris Day technique couldn't last forever. Now there's something new in "A New Kind of Love."—a new Hollywood stereotype—the semi-virgin. (A semi-virgin is a girl who has failed at marriage once and turned into a full-time career girl.)

Hollywood has won sex and used it well. Carroll Baker has a nude scene in "The Carpetbaggers." Kim Novak, Shirley MacLaine, and Marilyn Monroe have disrobed for films. And Jayne Mansfield in "Promises, Promises" promises more soap suds and flesh than ever before. But don't forget "Cleopatra" or 40 million dollars worth of Liz and Burton in the bluff.

American films view sex as realistically as a five-year-old boy who has just discovered that there is a difference between boys and girls.

Even when Hollywood produces a superior film such as "Hud"—the attempted rape scene in the film is pictured in its advertisements. The policy is to emphasize sex—downgrade quality.

But perhaps the best example of Hollywood's sex views comes in "Susan Slade." Connie Stevens tells her lover: "We've been sinful." Her lover climbs Mount McKinley and falls to his death. Connie is rescued from suicide, and the baby is born. Finally as TIME MAGAZINE reports: "the baby catches fire and blazes away on the screen for quite a while. But somehow, after two hours of watching the trouble he's made, it's hard to be sorry for the little bastard."

It's hard to feel sorry for you, Hollywood. What you claim to be realism is dirt designed with nothing honest in mind, sensationalized, turning sex into something funny, shameful and degenerate. All your so-called realism does is get the fast buck.

Give us some films of good quality such as "The L-Shaped Room," "This Sporting Life," or "A Taste of Honey"—films that view sex as adults.

Sex and seduction can be high art and great drama—but at Hollywood's rate—the producers may lose their freedom to use sexual themes before they have realized how to use it.

BULBS TAPPED

The Order of the Old Lampshades tapped 21 new members recently. The group taps twice a year and is led by Head Bulb Ellen Solomon.

The Order is characterized by its complete lack of organization, projects, goals, and treasury. Members are tapped for their "do-nothing" spirit.

The new seniors who were tapped are: Vicky Hinnant, Carol Mashburn, Esther Winters, Sandy Strawngh, Jean Cly, Laura Carlo, Nancy Habrat, and Sally Laws.

The juniors are: Ann Maxwell, Nancy Rieman, Susan Kemmer, and Nancy Ray.

New sophomores are: Penny Scovil, Leith Merrow, Buff Cox, Loretta Kelly, Ginny Eddy, Ann Smith, Libby Waite, Barbara Whyte, and Dusty Anderson. Mary Greenwood, a graduate counselor in the Nurses Dorm, was the only honorary member who was tapped.

I WAS A TEEN-AGE SLIDE RULE

In a recent learned journal (Playboy) the distinguished board chairman (Ralph "Hot Lips" Sigafoos) of one of our most important American industrial corporations (the Arf Mechanical Dog Co.) wrote a trenchant article in which he pinpointed our single most serious national problem: the lack of culture among science graduates.

Let me hasten to state that Mr. Sigafoos's article was in no sense derogatory. He said emphatically that the science graduate, what with his gruelling curriculum in physics, math, and chemistry, can hardly be expected to find time to study the arts too. What distresses Mr. Sigafoos—and, indeed, all of us—is the lopsided result of today's science courses: graduates who can build a skyscraper but can't compose a concerto; who know Newton's Third Law but not Beethoven's Fourth Symphony; who are familiar with Fraunhofer's lines but not with Shelley's.

The lopsided result of today's science

Mr. Sigafoos can find no solution to this lamentable imbalance. I, however, believe there is one—and a very simple one. It is this: if students of science don't have time to come to the arts, then the arts must come to students of science.

For example, it would be a very easy thing to teach poetry and music right along with physics. Students, instead of being called upon merely to recite, would instead be required to rhyme their answers and set them to familiar tunes—like, for instance, the stirring Colonel Bogey March. Thus recitations would not only be chock-a-block with important facts but would, at the same time, expose the students to the aesthetic delights of great poetry and music. Here, try it yourself. You all know The Colonel Bogey March. Come, sing along with me:

Physics
Is what we learn in class.
Einstein
Said energy is mass.
Newton
Is high-falutin'
And Pascal's a rascal. So's Boyle.

Do you see how much more broadening, how much more uplifting it is to learn physics this way? Of course you do. What? You want another chorus? By all means:

Leyden
He made the Leyden jar.
Trolley
He made the Trolley car.
Curie
Rode in a surrey
And Diesel's a weasel. So's Boyle.

Once the student has mastered The Colonel Bogey March, he can go on to more complicated melodies like Death and Transfiguration, Sixteen Tons, and Boo-Hoo.

And when the student, loaded not only with science but with culture, leaves his classroom and lights his Marlboro Cigarette, how much more he will enjoy that filter, that flavor, that pack or box! Because there will no longer be a little voice within him repeating that he is culturally a dolt. He will know—know joyously—that he is a complete man, a fulfilled man, and he will bask and revel in the pleasure of his Marlboro as a colt rolls in new grass—exultant and triumphant—a truly educated human person—a credit to his college, to himself, and to his tobacconist!

'We Could've Done Anything We Wanted' Bellows Howard

By MAT FRIEDMAN

At 3:30 yesterday afternoon about 36,000 stunned and surprised people (not counting Clemson fans) filed out of Kenan Stadium. But Frank Howard was not one of them.

"Hell," said the massive, red-faced Clemson coach, we've been playing good football all year. We've just been making a lot of mistakes. North Carolina's got a good football team and Hickey's a real nice fella. Honest, I sure hate to see old Hickey lose."

The Clemson band blasted "Hold That Tiger" and the big blunt man from South Carolina went out to answer the "We Want Frank" chants. "Just write what you want, he bellowed back to reporters, "because that's what you're gonna do anyway.

"Awful sorry to see you're not going to that bowl game," he said when collared again. "But I think we could've done anything we wanted today. You build up a bunch of myths about a pass defense that ain't true. We did exactly what we thought we could do. There ain't nothin' mysterious about football."

A roar of victory rocked the Clemson dressing room. But the choleric Howard bellowed on.

"We didn't try anything new," he said. "If you had played as much as we have this season, you wouln't change either. Carolina didn't show us anything new. The only new thing we're gonna see is that colored boy next week Darryl Hill of Maryland)."

"No, I didn't tell anything at halftime except to buckle down and go have a coke.

"We just used the good old 5-4 and didn't try to get smart. We just said 'come get us.' When you try to get smart, you get in a hell of a mess. Everyone knows what we're gonna do."

By now a large group of fans had joined the post-mortem, and Howard was kept pretty busy signing autographs. But he kept talking.

"We sure stopped them," he boasted. "No one is ever gonna run on us. That's as much as anyone is gonna run on us. They're not gonna score unless they find some fancy way of doing it."

"There ain't no need to change unless you get tired of looking at the same thing. I got tired of looking at the single wing so we switched to the 'T'."

Would he like to start the season all over again, and erase those four losses

"Not if we had to see Oklahoma again and it was that hot," he said of the sweltering 31-14 opening day defeat in Norman,

Did he try something special on Oklahoma.

the long pass that wide-open Bob Poole dropped in the first quarter?

"We just drew them up and faked to the fullback," he said, "and broke him free. He just dropped the damn thing."

Joy To Despair In One Week

By JOHN MONTAGUE

The difference between victory and defeat is everything in the world if your name happens to be Tar Heels. From unrestrained enthusiasm to stunned silence—this is what one week has meant to the North Carolina ootball team.

The defiant 11-7 defeat the Clemson Tigers hung on the Tar Heels Saturday afternoon seemed for awhile, unreal. People stood outside the Carolina locker room and talked in hushed tones. . . . . IF . . . IF . . . IF . . . .IF' Then suddenly they realized the ball game was over. It's history and IF doesn't matter anymore.

No one grasped this fact any quicker than Jim Hickey. The little UNC coach had wanted this one badly and he hadn't gotten it. In the stillness of of Kenan Field House, Hickey sat down, lit a cigarette and talked.

"There isn't an awful lot to say," said the man who had brought his team through its first seven games with a 6-1 record. "I don't guess we've ever wanted one as bad as we wanted this one. Now there's nothing left tfor us to do but buckle down and win our next two."

Hickey had words of praise for the team which had just outplayed his Tar Heels. He compared the Tigers' fullback Pat Crain to Michigan State's Roger Lopes, said second-stringer Bob Swift wasn't too bad either and admitted the fine faking of the Clemson quarterbacks had a lot to do with the outcome of the game.

We weren't surprised by them throwing the long passes. We simply were unable to get a good rush on the passer because the play fakes were executed so well. They were throwing from the 'dead T' which is harder to rush."

Asked if there was a particular play which turned the tide after UNC came out roaring in the second half, Hickey said that possibly the long pass they threw over Ronnie Jackson caught by Johnny Case) could have been it. But even after the Tigers scored, Hickey said he felt that his team had plenty of time to come back.

"We got the ball with about eight minutes left and couldn't move it. Then we got it again with some four minutes left and still couldn't get going. On that last play Edge was looking for Lacey, but had to throw to Willard. It just wasn't long enough."

Someone asked Hickey if he felt his team was pressing after they fell behind in the final priod.

"I don't know," came the reply, but the assumption was not altogether denied.

"Those two passes we dropped sure hurt us," said Hickey, referring to key passes which were dropped by ends Joe Robinson and John Hammett. Both came at times when the Heels were seemingly on the move.

"Of course we've been getting great receiving out of our ends all year," the disappointed coach added. "And then Clemson dropped some too." This was an obvious reference to the almost certain TD which Tiger end Bob Poole let slip through his hands in the first period.

"We played a miserable first half," said Hickey, "but we came out there and took command in the third quarter. We just didn't hold that advantage. Even when we were ahead we thought we needed another TD. We didn't get it and that was the ball game."

WHAT'S GOING ON AT THE INTIMATE

CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK

This is children's book week, and as you'd expect, there is whooping and hollering at the old emporium First of all, we've been wrestling with publishers and salesmen, and we think we've gathered together the prettiest, most colorful and altogether the most exciting new childrens books you'll find anywhere this Christmas season. This is the week when we spread 'em out, and hope you'll agree.

Second, we've bought in a batch of shiny new children's books, stars of former Christmasses, which are being dropped from publisher's lists, and they are all out on the feature table at 99c each. There's nothing that gives such rich satisfaction as giving a youngster a book, and this table will make it possible for you to enjoy that pleasure at a moderate cost.

Third there are BALLOONS for all the youngsters who give a grown-up a treat by bringing him into the shop during Children's Book Week. Balloons all over the place! And if YOU feel a bit youthful, there's a balloon for you, too!

Used History Collection

In the Old Book Feature Case this week, we're showing not one, but TWO libraries of good history reference books. If we may hazzard a guess, these will mostly be of interest to graduate students and advanced undergraduates. The lots include a few good editions, but they are mostly sturdy work-horse books, and we think the right scholars will be delighted to add them to their shelves, and the prices will be a pleasant surprise.

Engagement Calendars

Most of the new 1964 engagement calendars are now on display, and a right tempting batch they are! The lot includes PEANUTS calendars, and a very charming engagement calendar just for the busy junior citizen. Don't miss them—early birds will get the widest choice.

Residence Hall Damage Is Down

By HUGH STEVENS

A special committee investigating dormitory conditions has found that damage in men's residence halls is down from last year, and that there are some openings available for students desiring to move out of three-man rooms.

These facts were included in a report made to the Student Legislature last Thursday by Richard Westin, committee chairman.

The committee announced that it will hold an open meeting in Roland Parker I at 5 p.m. Wednesday, and all residence hall problems will be open for discussion by interested students.

"Anyone interested in dorms and dorm improvements is encouraged to attend," Westin said.

Westin reported the number of charges made for dorm damage was down from 106 at this time last year to 31. He attributed the decrease, for the most part, to the new dorm manager system.

"Russell Perry and Reid Suggs have done an excellent job of finding and preventing damage," Westin said. "They are not only giving us better residence halls, but saving the students money as well."

Westin said other factors had aided the damage situation, including better dormitory officers, a higher class of student, and improvements in the resident advisor system.

"All these factors should help cut the damages from the 730 charges made last year, of which 291 were in Ehringhaus alone," he said.

The committee told the legislature that there are at present 41 openings in double rooms, for which no one has applied. Westin said it was probable that students were simply unaware of the openings and thus had not applied for them.

"We currently have 439 triple rooms on campus," he said, "which stretch the capacity of the dorm rooms from 3,995 to 4,393. There are 1,999 rooms in all."

The committee reported that the 950-man residence hall in the Ehringhaus - Craige area would not be completed until the fall of 1965. The housing situation is expected to remain about the same until that time, although it may worsen somewhat due to deferred fraternity rush next fall.

Westin said the University is taking certain steps to control the enrollment increase next year,

"A ceiling of 2,080 students has been set for the freshman class next year," he reported," and they will be required to make 800 total score on the College Board tests, as opposed to the curent 750. In addition, no student will be admitted whose projected quality point average is less than 1.6."

Westin said that transfers would be limited to 900 next year, and that no new applicants would be taken for the spring semester.

"Any increases next year should be due to the retention of more students from this year, rather than from an increase in admissions," he said.

Westin concluded that the committee would continue its work throughout the year, and is especially interested in the effect of three-man rooms on grades.

Adenauer Wants Food As Weapon

BONN (UPI) — Former Chancellor Konrad Adenauer told a group of 20 American businessmen Monday the West should use food as a cold war weapon against the Soviets the way medieval leaders starved beseiged cities into submission.

Adenauer, who has criticized the Kennedy administration recently for alleged soft dealings with the Soviets, told the industrialists that Soviet leaders need more food to deal with the basic tasks facing them.

He said the Western Alliance must decide now whether and how it is to use this opportunity to exact deeds rather than words from Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Russell Blasts Accommodations Bill

DUBLIN, Ga. (UPI) — Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.) strategy chief of Southern Democrats, said Monday House Republican leaders are "moving forward in lock step" with administration lieutenants behind President Kennedy's civil rights bill.

Russell said the administration's proposal to guarantee full access to public accommodations would put every businessman "in constant fear of the attorney general, the FBI, the hundreds of U. S. marshals under his command, and, indeed, the armed forces of the United States."

Instead of being a civil rights proposal, he said, it's "a threatened crime against the whole philosophy of liberty for which our government stands."

Minataurs Apologize For Saturday Actions

By JOHN GREENBACKER

The Order of Minataurs formally apologized to Student Body President Mike Lawler Monday for their behavior at the Georgia-Carolina football game of Nov. 7.

Members of the organization, all fraternity men, were drunk and disorderly during the game and attempted to get onto the field while play was in progress. Police officers and Lawler repeatedly tried to restrain the Minataurs and were subjected to verbal abuse.

The Minataurs' conduct at the game followed a drinking bout which began early in the morning. Earlier in the day they staged a demonstration in Y-Court which was heavily criticized by University officials and student leaders. It was reported that Chancellor William B. Aycock had instructed campus police to arrest any of the group's members who were disorderly, but no arrests were made. Lawler condemned the Minataurs' actions and urged Attorney-General Buzzy Stubbs and IFC President Charlie Battle to investigate the matter. The Minataurs will go on trial Thursday.

The apology said, "Our inconsiderate and ungentlemanly conduct both at Y-Court and at the football game on Saturday was certainly uncalled for. Our unwarranted crudeness and lack of decorum shows not only our lack of personal decency and disrespect for others, but it also demonstrates blatant immaturity on our part. Therefore, we sincerely apologize for our overall indiscretion and thoughtlessness." The Minataurs also stated they should assume responsibility to correct their abuse of the original aims of the society.

"It is the first constructive thing in an otherwise disgraceful sequence of events," said Lawler of the apology. "I think that it is encouraging that the members of the organization are aware of the broader implications of their actions," he said.

"It was a nice thing for them to do," said Dean of Men William Long. "Each one of them has already apologized to me or a member of my staff. I see no reason for them to go back on their statement," he added.

Student Gag Law Opponents Meet

Aycock & The Gag

A News Analysis

By GARY BLANCHARD

Chancellor William B. Aycock got a big load off his chest last weekend.

Aycock has been wanting to say what he thinks of the controversial state Speaker Ban law since it was passed last June.

Last Saturday he did, calling it "an insult and saying it was the "sloppiest" and "the poorest-drafted legislation I have ever seen . . ."

He took direct issue with legislators who say they were only responding to public sentiment in passing the law, by asserting that "legislators are supposed to be leaders with foresight, and not subject to the immediate whims of the people."

And he indirectly attacked Secretary of State Thad Eure, who says he wrote the law, by saying that "the law is so full of ambiguities that even the author couldn't possibly say what it really means."

Aycock and other University administrators had previously made it a point to challenge only the wisdom of the law and the way it was written, for fear of making it any more of a political issue than it already may become in the upcoming Governor's race.

A lesser reason for keeping criticism of the law impersonal was the normal reluctance of an administrator to alienate legislators for fear of them retaliating by trimming the University's operating budget the next time appropriations are made.

In blasting the law as he did Saturday, Aycock apparrently has concluded (1) that it can't become any more of a political issue than it already is, and (2) repeal of the law is so cital to the University's well-being that it is worth chancing further alienation of some legislators and other proponents of the law.

Besides those two paramount considerations, however, lie a bevy of others where Aycock is concerned.

He hates the law because it offends his fundamental belief in the power of truth to assert itself in "the free market-place of ideas."

He resents deeply the implication that the University can't be trusted to run its own affairs and "discriminate between ideologies." He is quick to stress the fact that out of thousands upon thousands of gradu-

Raleigh Is Site Of Conference

Students from 15 state colleges and universities met yesterday at the N. C. State student union to discuss the speaker ban and programs aimed at repeal of the law in 1965.

Rep. Martha W. Evans, of Charlotte, addressed the students on the issues involved in the law and suggested things students might do to "educate" the people of the state on the issues.

It was the third of a series of intercollegiate meetings this fall on the speaker ban. John Bynum, State's student body president, presided.

Most of the colleges represented had passed a resolution in their student legislatures against the law. Others had carried out further programs of speakers and seminars on the ban.

Both private and state-supported colleges were represented.

Mrs. Evans and Bynum suggested six major programs for individual campuses:

1) The appointment of a coordinator on each campus to lead efforts against the ban.

2) Setting up speakers and seminar discussions in campus living units.

3) Sending out all news articles and other information on the speaker ban to all colleges and universities in the state.

4) Creation of a speaker bureau on each campus. This would list five to ten students who would be prepared and willing to speak to civic clubs and discussion groups all over the state about the speaker ban.

5) Urging of students to relay their knowledge of the speaker ban issues to their parents and friends in their hometowns and to write letters to their newspapers.

6) Placing spot public service announcements on radio and television about the speaker ban. Also the use of regularly scheduled panel shows for discussion by students of the law.

UNC students attending the meeting were Vice-President Bob Spearman, Pete Wales and Fred Seely, DTH Managing Editor.

The date for a fourth meeting will be announced later, Bynum said.

Playmaker Ducats Are Now On Sale

Student Night season tickets for the four remaining Carolina Playmakers productions go on sale this morning in Y-Court and at the GM Information Desk.

At a price of $3.50 for four plays, students can now see live theatrical productions for only a few cents more than the price of a movie ticket.

The four plays remaining on the Playmakers' agenda this season include "Long Day's Journey Into Night," the Eugene O'Neill drama which opens on Nov . 19, "The Busy Martyr," a new comedy, "J. B.," the verse play by Archibald MacLeish, and a comedy by Plautus, "The Braggart Soldier," which will be presented in the Forest Theatre.

The Student Night ticket plan which is designed to enable UNC students to attend Playmakers productions at reduced prices, was initiated on a trial basis for the opening musical, "Little Mary Sunshine." The reaction of the student body was so favorable that the Playmakers now plan to continue the policy for the remainder of the season.

Saturday Night has also been endorsed by Student Government, the YM-YWCA, and the

Anti-Grossness Group Formed For Dook Parade

Another old Carolina tradition, indecent floats at the Beat Dook parade, will vanish this year.

Mike Lawler, president of the student body, announced yesterday the formation of a committee to inspect every float before the parade starts. Excessive grossness in last year's parade, sponsored annually by Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, caused the administration to direct student government to take steps to insure a decent parade.

The committee includes representatives from the MRC and IFC, the president of the Panhellenic Council, the president of a selected girls' residence hall and the chairman of the Beat Dook parade. The chairman this year is Tommy Harris.

The committee will review the floats during the morning of the parade and again at the assembly area.

Prints and sculpture by the Mannerists will be exhibited at the Ackland Art Center today through Dec. 3.

The exhibition of Mannerism, comprising 32 prints from the print collection of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York City, and 10 bronze sculptures from the Walters Art Gallery, Baltimore, is being circulated by the American Federation of Arts.

The Mannerist period (1520-1590) included the years between the High Renaissance and the Baroque periods, a span sometimes called contemptuously, "an interval between two peaks."

From its inception the term Mannerism has had a derogatory meaning. In its original and narrowest context, Mannerism described an art rebellion in Italy led by Pontormo, Rosso and Parmigianino.

According to Frances Huemer, instructor in the UNC Art Department, these artists were among the first "to turn the ideal and monumental style of the High Renaissance into a personal and subjective one. With a disregard for the laws of harmony and balance, they used the human figure for expressive purposes.

"After 1550, the style degenerated. The artists used endless repetitious compositions with a piling up of human figures and erotic overtones."

In this exhibit an engraving, "Elijah and the Ravens," by the Utrecht Mannerist Abraham Bloemart, illustrates the artistic tension and instability typical of this style.

The striking features of Mannerism were asymmetry, vagueness and heightened subjectivity and emotion. In the print "Amerigo Vespucci Giving His Name to America," by Stradanus, these elements are present.

Italian Mannerism spread over most of Europe where its influence was felt in sculpture, graphic arts, architecture, and the decorative arts.

The museum is open to the public Tuesdays-Fridays 2-5 p.m. and 8-10 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sundays, 2-5 p.m.

Driver Speaks At Duke Symposium

DURHAM—A social revolution against the middle class is well under way in this country, according to drama critic Thomas F. Driver.

Dr. Driver, of the Union Theological Seminary in New York City, gave the keynote speech Sunday night for Duke University's fifth annual symposium. His topic was "Poetry, Prose and People."

Our country is controlled by the middle class, the most self-pre-occupied in the world, Dr. Driver declared. But this class is losing its hold on reality and the revolution is under way.

Occupied primarily with making money, the middle class is essentially uncreative, views life as an extension of itself, and strives constantly to standardize itself, he added.

Dr. Driver was quite critical of modern drama but said that the novel has become directly relevant to modern existence.

"The novel makes human explorations, but the stage issues summary reports," he said.

Dr. Driver praised modern poetry and said future historians might well refer to it as a golden age of poetry.

The symposium will continue through tomorrow night. Poet W. D. Snodgrass will speak tonight at 7:30 in Page Auditorium on "An Overview: 1870-1970." Novelist Ralph Elllison will give the final lecture tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Duke Women's College Auditorium. His topic will be "The Novelist and the American Experience."

Both speeches will be followed by panel discussions.

The symposium theme is "Contemporary Literature: A Post-Human Age?"

Symposium Hunts Fraternity Help

The formation of a special committee to promote more fraternity interest in the Carolina Symposium was announced yesterday by Student Body President Mike Lawler.

Lawler said the four-man committee will program faculty discussions on Symposium - related topics at fraternity houses between now and next April.

Different professors, in philosophy, art, history etc. will visit specific houses to discuss his views on the topic.

"These will be introductory discussions to build up interest in and familiarity with the Symposium," Lawler said. "The broader purpose will be to involve the IFC in an area other than discipline so that it will be more actively concerned with the broader aspects of the fraternity system," he added.

Those named to the Fraternity and Academic Life Committee include Dr. Raymond Dawson of the Political Science Department who will serve as advisor, IFC President, Charlie Battle, who will chair the committee, Dick Baddour of the Sigma Nu house and one members to be appointed by Battle.

Lawler indicated the program would probably start after the Thanksgiving recess.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE

The Judicial Committee of Student Legislature will meet Wednesday at 4 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room of GM to discuss a bill to reinstate the penalty of expulsion. Interested students can attend.

The committee is also expected to begin closed-door hearings on a bill to abolish the student judicial system. Administrative officials and student leaders are expected to appear before the committee, according to chairman Phil Baddour.

Econ Club

Dr. William Wolman will speak on "The Business Outlook" at a meeting of the Economics Club, tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 2 Carroll Hall.

Currently Dr. Wolman is an Economist for Business Week Magazine. He is the author of several books and professional journal articles and has written on a wide range of economic issues dealing with economic interpretation.

Dr. Wolman received his B.A. degree from McGill University and a Ph.D. from Stanford. Since 1956 he has taught at Stanford, the University of Washington and Washington State University.

The meeting is open to all interested students.

MISS GREENE AWARDED

Miss Eleanor Anne Greene received the Haskins and Sells Foundation Scholarship in Accounting for 1963-64, it was announced today by the Scholarship Committee of the UNC's School of Business Administration.

New Program In Honors Is Started Here

Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences and Professor John A. Parker of the Dept. of City and Regional Planning this week announced the formation of a new undergraduate honors program in urban and regional studies.

The program was recently approved by the Faculty Council on Honors. The program will focus on problems of urban and regional development in the departments of City and Regional Planning, Economics, Geography, Political Science, and Sociology and Anthropology. The Urban and Regional Studies Center of the Institute for Research in Social Science will serve as coordinator of the program.

Undergraduates majoring with honors and those certified by their departments as eligible to major with honors may enroll for an honors seminar and write an honors paper in the major discipline which is oriented toward urban or regional developmental problems.

Students achieving distinction in honors papers and maintaining a very high level of academic performance in their course work, in addition to graduating with honors, will be awarded a "Certificate of Honors in Urban and Regional Studies."

The program was established in recognition of the increasing opportunities for highly qualified persons in university instructional and research programs as well as in governmental agencies and private corporations concerned with urban and regional affairs.

In addition to frequent job openings in the United States and in developing areas abroad in urban

Come On Barry, Some More Statements

It looks like the Republicans are going to make the national scene as interesting as the Democrats are going to make the state scene in the coming months. Everybody understands why Goldwater is running, just as everybody understands why Preyer, Moore and Lake are running, but many people are wondering just what it is that Nelson Rockefeller is running for.

Many theories have been proposed, and out of them have come some rather interesting points. First, it must be said that Rockefeller's commitment to his wing of the party is so strong that he would be willing to sacrifice himself to head off Goldwater and keep the party reins out of the hands of the far right. This may be what all his efforts are for.

But then again, those who have written him off, may have done so a little prematurely. Polls in the two key primary states show Goldwater to be ahead, but his lead is no larger than the lead Averell Harriman had over Rockefeller at the beginning of the 1958 campaign.

Rockefeller overcame that lead, and he just might do it again if his present strategy continues to work. That strategy can only be to back Goldwater up to the wall and make him say what he thinks about things. Granted that's a tough chore for a man like Barry, but if pulled off successfully it could have some profound effects. Goldwater, happily, has the habit of saying things which either annoy or frighten a good number of people, and it must eventually come to pass that voters will start listening to what the man is saying instead of just flocking to a new messiah.

He has already cut a toe on a tooth when he said he would like to sell the Tennessee Valley Authority to private enterprise. Them's fighting words in Tennessee. Then there was his interesting philosophy of the form which the civil rights plank of the Republican platform should take. In an interview with U.S. News and World Report he said he favored a simple statement like "we believe in the freedom of the individual." That's fine, but he didn't stop. "All right, Senator Javits can take that in New York and apply it to civil rights, the Negro problem, and everything else. I can take it and apply it to the 'Right to Work! I can apply it to states' rights."

That sort of duplicity can't enhance his image with most people.

Then there was the terrifying little remark that if he had his way, U.S. field commanders overseas would be authorized to use nuclear warheads whenever they saw fit. That's the kind of talk that will send most of us scurrying for cover.

There's a long way to go before the Republican convention, and things might look a lot better for Rockefeller by then if he can just get Goldwater to up his output of pronouncements.

Barry, several months ago, said that it would be a frightening thing for him to wake up one morning and find himself President.

He and fifty million Americans would be scared to death.

Keen Knife Needed For Jackass Skinning

"Refreshing" and "heartening" are the words that seem to best describe Chancellor William B. Aycock's blistering attack on the gag law and its proponents last Saturday.

There are many who will disagree with the wisdom and strategy of how he said what he did, however much they agree with the substance of his remarks. They are the people who feel that repeal of the short-sighted gag law can best be accomplished by quietly pointing out to small gatherings of people the fallacies of the law.

We agree that this is a sound tactic and needs to be continued. But we think there is a definite need for someone of Aycock's stature to stand up in public, as he did Saturday, and demonstrate just how insidious and invalid this law and the arguments for it are.

The only way this law is going to get repealed, as it must be if the University and the State are to progress, is to get people talking about it, and to make sure the forces of rationality don't lose the debate by default.

Aycock's speech was a giant step in the right direction.

Something To Do Between Paydays

From The Raleigh News And Observer

Thad Eure's assumption of the leadership against the Communists in North Carolina should be welcomed by everybody.

It is good to have Mr. Eure, after hemming and hawing for four months to see how all the winds blow, to hold up his arm and say "this hand wrote every word" of the college speaker gag bill and that, if this bill is repealed, he's got another one.

The threat of communism in North Carolina may be so great that the state needs a full time man on the job of defense against it. And certainly nobody has as much time to put on that job as Mr. Eure.

As Secretary of State he now gets $18,000 a year for supervising a clerical staff of less than 20 people. The duties at his office have been steadily cut across the years until today his position is more decorative than essential.

Nobody can blame him in his official loneliness if he would like to make his job more dynamic. And establishing himself as the prime official for "striking a blow" at communism could be just what he, if not the state, needs.

After all Mr. Eure must get tired of just signing documents put under his pen. And for $18,000 a year (recently raised $6,000 at one clip by the legislature that passed the gag law) the state ought to get a little more work out of him.

If he is ready to devote himself to saving North Carolina from the Communist menace here, there is certainly nobody who could be more readily spared for the job.

Our Spy In Washington

Barry, Bobby, And Folk Music

By FRANK CROWTHER
DTH Spy

Have you ever noticed how closely Nelson Rockefeller's second wife resembles his first one? Some guys never learn. Of course, it is like turning the clock back. On your wife.

Everybody says Rocky's second marriage has scuttled his '64 chances. Others insist JFK cannot be beaten next year. Both true. But there are rumors of 'money will out' here in Washington these days (Harry Byrd hasn't heard it yet), and Goldwater is going to be out of the picture by the end of the year.

The root of the problem is Bobby Kennedy. There is growing antipathy for the wire-tap kid among Democrats and Republicans. Worse than ever. The only way to beat him in '68 is with a Republican, since any Democrat that values his life and sanity is frightened of Bobby. Goldwater can't do it. He has the appeal, for the moment, but at heart he's a fascist and intellectually he has the capacity of a drunken apteryx. The smart money is going behind Rockefeller; the build-up as candidate in '64, the candy store in '68.

The question is how to get rid of Goldwater. We've stumbled on the answer, and JFK will unknowingly lend a hand, thinking he is merely sending Goldwater down in flames, rather than Bobby. Khrushchev is also on the take (he gets the state of Kansas, with a five year plan).

It goes like this.

Khrushchev blocks the Berlin highway again. JFK, after meeting with his inner sanctum, appeals for bi-partisan support. Getting it, he federalizes Major General Barry Goldwater to lead the Arizona Minutemen on a spearhead drive to open the autobahn once and for all. General Walker is named his exec., Senator John Tower (the roaring runt) is designated mascot. H. L. Hunt buys in as quartermaster and PR officer, supplying his canned foods and canned propaganda. As an incentive, Robert Welch offers a lifetime membership in the Birch Society to all veterans of the police action, plus free T-shirts (American flag in front, catchy phrases from the Constitution on the back). The D.A.R. will supply dog tags, after blood samples are submitted.

Goldwater gets killed in the first day's action, after tripping and falling on his Goldwater for President pin. General Curt LeMay is furious, turns his SAC bombers loose, and they destroy the whole damned autobahn (Bobby Baker negotiates the new construction contract). In that there are no more access routes to plague both sides for the moment, a summit conference between JFK and Khrushy calms tempers (instead of blowing up New York, we give him Kansas). Rocky beats out Mrs. Goldwater for the nomination on the third ballot, with LeMay as VP candidate (after his release from the Air Force and the mental hospital).

Any questions?

Returning to a modicum of sanity for the nonce, I must say that the Folk Music movement which has swept the country in the past year is one of the most heartening signs I have seen.

And it should be noted that the college students of the United States have brought about the revolution. This is probably the second most significant cultural event in America in our generation—the Negro revolt being the first.

Rock and Roll is dying a most deserved death. Why we, may even be rid of Leonard Bernstein for a while. Mitch Miller and Lawrence Welk still hold pockets of resistance, but are weakening. Hootenannies have been denounced on the floors of Congress, a sure sign of success.

The very nature of Folk Music, I believe, is a harbinger of further changes in our society. It shows an appreciation for meaningful and useful heritage, a championing of causes, and a determination to purge ourselves of all the fraudulent nonsense and horse manure spoonfed us since the turn of the century. Let us hope everybody takes up the guitar and the humanities again.

I was listening to a new tune the other day, and it has been bouncing around in my head ever since. The Wonderful (or Marvelous) Toy, by the Chad Mitchell Trio. The lyrics, describing the toy, go something like this:

"It went Zip! when it moved, Bop! when it stopped, Whrrr! when it stood still. I never knew just what it was, and I guess I never will."

One might apply this concept to a thousand things, but somehow it reminds me mostly of the 88th Congress.

A useful project for those of you similarly taken with the folk movement might be a singing sit-in at the Capitol in Raleigh until the Gag Law is struck from the books. Or rewriting the lyrics of any song to ridicule the whole mess.

Try this one, to the tune of "Old Smokey":

On top of the State House,
All covered with shame,
There flys the black banner,
Of those whom we blame.

They perverted our freedom,
By legislating a gag,
This was done in the name of,
Mother, country and flag.

They say that our minds are,
Young and soft as a fig,
When these were the nuts who,
Couldn't even pass trig.

Next they'll wire-tap our dorm rooms,
Censor thoughts in each book,
Fingerprint, mug and slug us,
Then we will be forsook.

Think I'll ask my Dear Santa,
To bring each for his wall,
Our clear, strong Constitution,
First Amendment and all.

Fellow friends of Carolina,
Unite, holler and nag,
We have nothing to lose,
But that tyrannical gag.

Are Students So Gullible?

By JOHN GREENBACKER

On October 31, two alumnae of UNC, Larry Phelps and John Salter, returned to their alma mater. Their original intent in coming was supposedly sentimental, for Phelps wanted to see some people he knew in his old dorm, Everett. Before the evening was over, however, his presence on the UNC campus had possibly become an illegal act and violation of North Carolina's controversial Speaker Ban. Within a matter of minutes, Phelps and Salter had been changed from two guys known for their radical political views in the eyes of the Everett residents, to super-subversives in the eyes of the state, capable of duping and corrupting the ignorant children of our universities with a single phrase.

Phelps and Salter were asked to conduct an informal question and answer period in Everett's social room about their trip to Communist Cuba in defiance of the State Department travel ban. The meeting itself was very enlightening. Despite the reluctance of these two to answer questions directly and without embellishment, Cuba was seen as a nation in serious economic difficulty. Supported for the Castro government is presently maintained by Russian aid and a continued harping on the "revolution" theme amongst the people. Perhaps more important than this is the proven absolute control which Castro and his subordinates have over the Cuban nation and its governing body. These were only a few of the facts Everett residents learned about Cuba.

A most interesting insight into Phelps' character showed itself during the discussion. He inadvertently admitted that one day while he was in Cuba he saw some films of fighting in Viet Nam, and he cheered with other spectators when he saw a U.S. Army helicopter being shot down. When he was asked to account for this action, Phelps tried to explain by saying that he realized the futility of our troops fighting for a government whose people were against it. He was asked if this was a reason for cheering. Phelps answered that he felt it was tragic that those Americans in the helicopter had given their lives in vain, and he didn't feel it was a subject for rejoicing. Again he was asked why he cheered. Phelps dropped the subject.

Phelps will not be allowed to speak at Carolina again, and is it any wonder? As our state legislature so astutely realized, these subversives are too much for the youth of Carolina to handle. We aren't smart enough for them, and with the Gag Law we are assured of protection for our state and the minds of its future citizens.

They Are Unafraid

(From The Raleigh Times)

Davidson College students must have the "opportunity to hear diverse viewpoints expressed by speakers invited to the campus by student organizations as well as by members of the faculty and administration." The man who said that is Dr. Grier Martin, the president of Davidson.

Furthermore, Dr. Martin said yesterday, "it is highly desirable that students have the opportunity to review and discuss the opinions of speakers representing a wide range of viewpoints. No speaker will be rejected because of his membership in an organization."

Dr. Martin not only believes that the students should have these opportunities, he is appointing a committee to "assure that the schedule of speakers is sufficiently varied to provide the widest possible educational experience for Davidson students."

All this is good, and it is heartening to have this word from the respected head of this respected institution of higher education. Nowhere in his prepared statement did Dr. Martin mention North Carolina's new speech-ban law, which forbids Communists and certain others from opening their mouths on the campus of a state-supported institution. But, it is very apparent that Dr. Martin had this obnoxious law in mind in making his statement.

What Dr. Martin says is good for Davidson students, and what he said the Davidson students must have would be equally good for the students at Carolina or State. What is more, the students at Carolina or State must have those opportunities just as surely as the Davidson students must have them.

Even more important is that the officials of Davidson now stand out as men who aren't afraid, as men who are willing for their good ideas to be pitted against the evil ideas of others. Unfortunately, because of this obnoxious law, North Carolina now officially stands out as being a people who are afraid, who are not willing for their good ideas to be pitted against the evil ideas of others.

Because of this law, North Carolina has officially branded herself as a state which is afraid.

It is good to have in our State an institution such as Davidson which admits it isn't afraid.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

A Reply

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I had not even dreamed that you would be so savage in your attack on the Di-Phi, especially after word had come to me earlier this fall that you intended to write a beneficent editorial praising us before the campus as a "very worthwhile thing." I tried my best last spring to pin you gentlemen down about your real thoughts concerning the Di-Phi, following a series of editorial sideswipes against the organization. We ought to be very much in the market for some good constructive criticism, and we welcome such from any source.

Constructive criticism, however, seems to be in low supply at the DTH.

Go back in your files, gentlemen, if you have time, and you will see that such criticism of the Di-Phi as you voiced a few days ago has been plentiful for many years; it seems that no organization lends itself so well as our own to the ridicule of a cynical generation. (For what body, I ask, is so audacious as to make a business of debating issues, and taking the further step of resolving on them? What other body sets itself up as the forum of the campus, or claims to be inextricable from the purpose of the University?) I submit that our humble senate of opinion has been hailed as an irrelevant and dying organism for the past forty years and more; but since that time it has had its ups as well as downs, its meaningfulness as well as its absurdity.

There is nothing contemptible or ludicrous about learning to listen to others' point of view and coming to a judgment; nor about learning the workings of parliamentary bodies, even though politics itself is often by its very nature exasperating and ludicrous.

I see far more death, active and reproductive, in the mutual-admiration arrangement between poular campus figures and popular activities; in the structured social stratification and the unrealistic, decaying habit of label-pinning thereby entailed, than ever I could imagine in our senile senate which has been dying for 168 years.

There really is a vitality and individuality which has somehow never been lost from our tradition; a pervading friendship friendship and personality which is inherent in diplomacy at its best; and genuine value not only in parliamentary method but also in the relevance of the issues discussed. The Di-Phi may have much to learn, but it has something to teach as well.

Gentlemen, we appreciate the attention you give us, and all of your speculations about our nature; but why don't you accept our invitation: come by sometime, and see for yourself?

CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK

This is children's book week, and as you'd expect, there is whooping and hollering at the old emporium First of all, we've been wrestling with publishers and salesmen, and we think we've gathered together the prettiest, most colorful and altogether the most exciting new childrens books you'll find anywhere this Christmas season. This is the week when we spread 'em out, and hope you'll agree.

Second, we've bought in a batch of shiny new children's books, stars of former Christmasses, which are being dropped from publisher's lists, and they are all out on the feature table at 99c each. There's nothing that gives such rich satisfaction as giving a youngster a book, and this table will make it possible for you to enjoy that pleasure at a moderate cost.

Third there are BALLOONS for all the youngsters who give a grown-up a treat by bringing him into the shop during Children's Book Week. Balloons all over the place! And if YOU feel a bit youthful, there's a balloon for you, too!

Used History Collection

In the Old Book Feature Case this week, we're showing not one, but TWO libraries of good history reference books. If we may hazzard a guess, these will mostly be of interest to graduate students and advanced undergraduates. The lots include a few good editions, but they are mostly sturdy work-horse books, and we think the right scholars will be delighted to add them to their shelves, and the prices will be a pleasant surprise.

Engagement Calendars

Most of the new 1964 engagement calendars are now on display, and a right tempting batch they are! The lot includes PEANUTS calendars, and a very charming engagement calendar just for the busy junior citizen. Don't miss them—early birds will get the widest choice.

Law Review Out In Dec.

By PHILLIP SPACE

The first edition of the North Carolina Law Review will feature a symposium on "Civil Rights and the South" featuring articles written exclusively for the Review by such prominent civil rights figures as Attorney General Robert Kennedy and U.S. Senator Sam J. Ervin.

The first issue of the Review will be out in December, according to editor George Cochran.

"This symposium is a landmark in the history of legal journalism," Cochran said. "It is a project which has never before been performed by a law review in the United States."

Cochran said that in order to cover the legal and social problems involved in the current civil rights revolution, "we have obtained the talents and opinions of men of great prominence in the field."

Cochran noted that opposite views on Civil Rights will be presented in the symposium.

U.S. Attorney-General Robert F. Kennedy will write the introduction. Other contributors and their subjects are Ervin and Harvard Professor Arthur E. Sutherland on the constitutionality of the proposed civil rights legislation; Martin E. Sloane, of the U.S. Housing and Home Finance Agency, on civil rights and housing; John G. Feild, on equal employment; constitutional lawyer R. Carter Pittman, on the import of the Brown decision; Berl I. Bernhard, Staff Director of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, on the Commission after five years.

Cochran said the Review had received orders for thousands of reprints, since giving advance notice of the Symposium. Cochran said reprints could be reserved by writing to the Law Review and asking for them.

They will sell for $1.50 each or less if ordered in large quantities.

– Aycock –

ates, only a bare handful have been militantly "leftist," and they probably were inclined that way before they came to the University.

As a lawyer himself, Aycock dislikes the law, aside from its wisdom, because it contains no legal definitions of exactly who is banned from speaking on state campuses, no penalties and only a general description of enforcement authority.

He abhors the law because it has saddled him and other state college administrators with the implicit responsibility—but not authority — for upholding its vague dictates in addition to meeting the myriad of routine problems involved in running a huge educational plant on limited funds.

Certainly, he says, the Board of Trustees has delegated specific responsibility for upholding the law to individual student or faculty groups which invite speakers. But, he points out, if they err he gets the blame.

What probably triggered his Saturday blast, however, is the general uncertainty over application of the law that has developed on the campus and around the state.

As Chancellor, Aycock is the most logical person to check with about the law. Consequently, he has been badgered incessantly with phone calls and visits from students, faculty members, newsmen and others as to the legality of persons due to speak on the campus.

The result has been to make him an increasingly edgy chancellor who finally spoke his mind, calling for outright repeal of the law in the strongest words any university official has used on the matter to date.

Time has no meaning to Mercedes-Benz.

The year-to-year obsolescence of most automobiles inevitably leads to a heavy annual depreciation. This high cost of staying in "style" is something you just don't encounter with Mercedes-Benz.

Drive about in one and you find people may ask what model it is, but never what year. Superficial style changes seldom occur inside or out. Modifications are made only when they are consistent with the traditional character and reputation of Mercedes-Benz.

For example, the new 4-speed automatic transmission, designed and built by Daimler-Benz, is the most advanced, widely acclaimed engineering feat ever conceived.

This is just one more reason why Mercedes-Benz has remained the symbol of motorcar prestige for over 75 years in over 150 countries.

There are 11 models, from sleek sports roadsters to the stately 300 Sedan, from $3844 to $13,000, for you to choose from.

European delivery of a Mercedes-Benz will double the fun of your overseas trip and pay a substantial part of your expenses.

Tom Thomsen wanted challenging work

He found it at Western Electric

T. R. Thomsen, B.S.M.E., University of Nebraska, '58, came to Western Electric for several reasons. Important to him was the fact that our young engineers play vital roles right from the start, working on exciting engineering projects in communications including: electronic switching, thin film circuitry, microwave systems and optical masers.

Western Electric's wide variety of challenging assignments appealed to Tom, as did the idea of advanced study through full-time graduate engineering training, numerous management courses and a company-paid Tuition Refund Plan.

Tom knows, too, that we'll need thousands of experienced engineers for supervisory positions within the next few years. And he's getting the solid experience necessary to qualify. Right now, Tom is developing new and improved inspection and process control techniques to reduce manufacturing costs of telephone switching equipment. Tom is sure that Western Electric is the right place for him. What about you?

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for—we want to talk to you! Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and also for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more detailed information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. # Harriers Clinch ACC Title

Maillet Wins; Jimmy Meade Cannot Finish

By EDUARDO CARAMBA

RALEIGH — North Carolina's powerhouse cross-country team did it again here yesterday. And this time the runners were without the valuable points of their second big man, soph Jimmy Meade.

Meade, who had a sure top-five finish in his grasp, pulled up lame about a half mile from the finish, but still the Carolina Harriers pulled out their third straight ACC Championships as three Tar Heels finished in the top ten. Art Maillett, the Flushing, N. Y. junior, duplicated his individual win in the State Meet on this same course a week ago as he won the title in 21:19.5—some 10 seconds slower than last Monday.

Mike Folk and Jerry Smith finished four-five for Coach Joe Hilton's club whose 52-point low score title defeated the seven other ACC teams. Duke was second at 68.

Finishing ahead of the Folk-Smith duo were Mel Woodcock of NC State (21:36) and Ernie Drown of Clemson (21:38). Folk finished two seconds ahead of Smith for fourth at 21:40.

Maryland, which placed Tom Kruger sixth, finished third in the team scoring with 75 points. State trailed the Terps at 96 while Wake Forest had 110, Clemson 137, South Carolina 143 and Virginia 219.

The top ten individual places included the Wolfpack's Silas Davis (seventh at 21:52), Duke's Bob Waite (eighth at 21:54), Wake Forest's Ron Taylor (ninth at 21:57) and Mike George of Duke who just beat out South Carolina's Jim Poules for the tenth spot at 21:58.

Other Carolina places which went toward the team score were Charlie Lefler who finished 20th and Bob Fawcett who came in 22nd. Worth Helms and senior captain Bob Bennett were 27th and 29th respectively.

Meade, the outstanding sophomore who with Maillett has led Carolina's onslaught of opposing cross-country teams this season (unbeaten on a 6-0 dual-meet record and winners of the State Meet and now this one), apparently first hurt his knee in the race last week.

The Washington, D. C. native's injury was kept quiet all week by Coach Hilton, and it certainly didn't seem to bother him here in last Monday's meet for he finished a close second to Maillett for the individual honors.

But the knee went bad on him yesterday heading for home among the leaders, and he was unable to finish. As it turned out, Carolina didn't need the points, but they wil need him if Hilton decides to make the trip to East Lansing, Mich. for the nationals some time at the end of the month.

Two Losses Didn't Dim Lights On Tar Baby Football Truck

By BILL LEE

DESPITE TWO out - of - state losses, very few, if any, Carolina fans were unimpressed by the brand of football played by the Tar Heel freshmen this season.

Good sized crowds showed up for three games in the triangle area and went away with the knowledge that Carolina's football future looks mighty good.

In the opener, the Tar Babies faced N. C. State at Raleigh before 10,000 fans, largely partisan to the Wolflets. Most of these fans were disappointed as the future Tar Heels romped to a 21-7 victory.

Jeff Beaver's squad scored all the touchdowns in this one. Tim Reardon and Tom Lampman carried over, while Bud Phillips scored on a ten-yard pass from Beaver. Phillips also caught four more for a total of 40 yards. This turned out to be Beaver's best passing game as he hit 16 of 19 for 130 yards.

Coach George Barclay, the team pilot and also Carolina's first All-American, said about the game, "We played real well for an opening game. Our passing and running game went real well. This was (Jim) Fortune's best best day."

Fortune, a running-back and a top varsity prospect, rushed for 67 yards in ten carries and caught three passes for 18 yards. A knee injury hampered his play the rest of the season.

The ground defense, led by guards Joe Fratangelo and Dave Erimias, held the Wolflet rushing game to a minus 24 yards in its best effort of the season.

Danny Talbott gave Wake Forest fans an opportunity to moan for at least another year as he single-handedly dealt the Deaclets a 23-0 defeat.

The quarterback from Rocky Mount had his best day of the season as he passed for two touchdowns and kicked two extra points and a field goal. He also rushed for 101 yards in seven carries, and completed 6 out of 9 passes for 72 more.

Talbott's TD aerials were to Bob Powell and Leon Fonvielle. Fonvielle also scored the initial touchdown on a two-yard plunge.

"In the Wake game we showed up real good," commented Barclay. "We should have scored more but the penalties hurt us. We were very aggressive and showed a lot of improvement as far as finesse is concerned."

VIRGINIA's Cavayearlings took advantage of three fumbles and four intercepted passes to give the Tar Babies their first defeat 32-12. Tar Heel supporters who saw the game just don't think the score shows the relationship of the two teams.

Barclay said about this one, "We blocked and tackled hard, but otherwise we just didn't play up to our potential. These mistakes will be helpful to them when they're trying out for varsity.

Fonvielle and Bobby Knott starred in the Carolina 28-27 victory over Duke. Fonvielle broke through the Blue Imp line to block a game-ending field goal attempt by Duke on the UNC four.

Knot pulled in two touchdown passes from Talbott, the first, a 39-yarder and the other covering five yards.

"We kept good field position of the ball," remarked the coach, "and we made three long marches. We made two big mistakes and gave them two touchdowns. Out of these errors the kids learned some football. They learned that each one has an assignment on punts, and Talbott learned to eat the ball instead of throwing it away.

The final game was played at Maryland in rain and mud. The Terrapins took to the muck and came out ahead 22-9. Again mistakes contributed to defeat as two of Talbott's punts were blocked. A fumble stopped one touchdown drive and another was stopped on the one.

Barclay commented, "This was a game played under adverse weather conditions. The rain hurt our passing game and that's what we've been depending on a lot this season.

"I was very happy with the over-all season and the way the boys improved. We like to win games, but our main aim is to develop them for varsity."

Everett Is Rod-Gun Champion

By AL KAPLAN

Everett dorm, edged out Law School and Craige B to become the winner of the Ninth Annual Rod and Gun Meet, held yesterday.

First place in Bait Casting, Kap Phi with 21 and third was Don Pratt of BVP with 20.

The Rogah scored 12 points, on second, third and fourth place finishes. Vee Hanna took second place in Rifle Shooting, on his score of 174. On his 187, Norm Mill copped a fourth place in Archery and Dane Marvin added a third place finish in Bait Casting with his tally of 100.

Reggie Fountain of Law School won his fourth straight Trap Shooting championship. Fountain hit on 23 of 25 shots. Second was Parks Smell of Pi or Skish, was won by Robert Liles of Alexander. Liles scored 112 out of a possible mark of 200.

On an excellent round of 310 of 324, Don Perry, of the Outing Club, walked off with first place in Archery.

In the Team Standings, behind Everett were Law School and Craige B with 11 points. Three teams tied for fourth with 10. They include Pi Kap Phi, Town Lodgers and Alexander.

Gag Law Labeled 'Constitutionally Suspect' By Pollitt

By KERRY SIPE

North Carolina's controversial Speaker Ban law is "constitutionally suspect," a noted UNC constitutional law professor says in an article to be published in the December issue of the North Carolina Law Review.

The law "raises serious problems under the constitutional guarantee of free speech, under the constitutional guarantee against self-incrimination, and, because of its vague and nebulous terms, under the due process clauses of the Constitution," said Daniel H. Pollitt, professor of Constitutional Law in a treatise entitled "Campus Censorship: The North Carolina Visiting Speakers Law."

Pollitt is a noted member of the law school faculty who has had extensive experience in the United States federal court system. He is well qualified to have an opinion on the subject," reported retiring Law School Dean Henry Brandis, Jr.

Pollitt's article is the first known legal analysis of the law by a lawyer outside of the N. C. State Attorney General's office, which previously ruled the law constitutional.

The article is a comprehensive outline of the history and effects of campus censorship in the United States. "The last place in a democracy to expect restrictions on the thinking process is in a university or college," says Pollitt. "Yet the censorship of ideas in such institutions is not rare.

"In the decades prior to the Civil War, professors were discharged because of sentiments for or against slavery. After the Civil War, and even into the twentieth century, teaching the theory of evolution resulted in the discharge of many faculty members . . . In 1396 professors were discharged because they voted for William Jennings Bryan." The list goes on and on.

"The advance attempt to prevent unlawful speech will also prevent lawful speech upon an erroneous prophecy that the would-be speaker intends to engage in unlawful incitement . . .

"The 1963 statute is constitutionally suspect for yet another reason . . . The federal constitution expressly provides that "no person . . . shall be compelled . . . to be a witness against himself.' When a state seeks to compel a person to be a witness against himself by denying rights otherwise available, the state is seeking to amend the Constitution, and in a fashion not contemplated by its framers."

Pollitt summarizes his comments with a quotation from the New York Times:

"Universities are not designed to shelter students from ideas, but to expose them to clashing viewpoints under circumstances that will help them make reasoned evaluations of what is sound and what is false in each . . . The best way to build appreciation of democratic traditions in our colleges is, as we have often observed, to practice them unreservedly."

Aycock Approves Faculty Changes

Four leaves of absence, two promotions and four faculty appointments were recently approved by Chancellor William B. Aycock, President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Jack Newton Behrman will join the faculty in January as a professor in the School of Business Administration.

Dr. Maxwell L. Harrison, previously a research associate at UNC, will be an associate professor in the School of Dentistry.

Dr. George Allen Coltrane of High Point, will begin as assistant director and professor at the Institute of Government Friday.

Raymond B. Jenkins was promoted from instructor to assistant professor in the School of Medicine; and Dr. George Nicholson, chairman and professor in the Department of Statistics, was approved for a salary increase.

Leaves of absence were granted to the following: Kenan Professor of Statistics Harold Hotelling was granted a one-year leave, beginning Feb. 1, 1964, to help develop a statistics program at the University of Buenos Aires. Dr. Frederick N. Cleaveland, chairman and professor in the Department of Political Science, will leave Feb. 1, 1964 to join the senior staff of Brookings Institution in developing of public administration programs for Latin America.

Dr. James B. Meriwether, associate professor in the Department of English, is now doing research in England, and Dr. Eugene Charles Luschei, assistant professor in the Dept. of Philosophy, will serve as visiting professor at Pennsylvania State University this spring.

Mark Van Doren Speaks Tonight

Mark Van Doren, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for the most distinguished poetry in 1939, will present the Weil Lecture on American Citizenship tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Invitations have been extended to about 1,700 members of the UNC faculty, trustees of the Consolidated University, state legislators, State Supreme Court justices and members of the Weil Family in Goldsboro and Wilmington.

The Weil Lecture was endowed by the late Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro. The first lecturer was William Howard Taft.

WUNC Radio (91.5 FM) will broadcast the lecture at 8 tonight. It is entitled "Classical Education in the Development of Citizenship Today" and will be rebroadcast at a later time, yet undetermined.

Van Doren, whose "Collected Poems" won international honors in 1939, said his lecture will consist of "a reading of poems with talk and commentary."

The 69-year-old poet, author and teacher was born in Hope, Ill., and was educated at the University of Illinois and Columbia University. As a faculty member at Columbia, he taught English for nearly 40 years. He is a former literary critic and movie critic of The Nation magazine.

His first volume of verse was published in 1924 and he ventured into the field of writing novels in 1935.

Forty years after receiving his doctor of philosophy degree from Columbia, he was awarded an honorary degree of doctor of letters for "rare scholarship, gifted teaching and the creation of verse and prose which have enriched our language."

Van Doren has been described as unlike the once popular ception of a poet. "For him no cloistered life or poverty in a garret," stated one account of his life. "His is the moderate success story of many Americans."

Van Doren has recognized there are exceptions, but he considers the best physical conditions for writing poetry as "neither too much comfort that wealth could purchase not too little."

$240,600 APPROPRIATION

Training teachers to instruct the "teachable" mentally retarded child is the objective of a $240,600 appropriation to the University's School of Education.

Part of Senate Bill 384, the Mental Health Bill, appropriated $1,800,000 in state funds for medical research, education of children and teachers, and new facilities for mentally retarded children.

Seven Fraternities Admit To Discriminatory Clauses

By PETE WALES

Seven of the 23 social fraternities at UNC admit to having membership clauses discriminating either by race or by religion.

Another four have a "socially acceptable" clause that is used to discriminate in some cases. This clause says that the national fraternity, of which the chapter is a part, must approve all members.

Three of the seven sororities here say they have no discriminatory clause. The other four replied that they would not discuss the matter without specific permission from their national office because membership requirements are secret.

UNC policy on discriminatory clauses states that no fraternity may establish a chapter here that has such a clause, according to Dean of Men William G. Long.

However, chapters already established on the campus may have the clauses.

Neither the Inter-Fraternity Council nor the Pan-Hellenic Council has any policy on the clauses, according to respective presidents Charlie Battle and Peggy Ann Harris.

"It's up to the individual houses as to what they want to do," Battle said.

The information came from a recent poll of fraternity and sorority presidents on discrimination, if any, in their houses.

The poll was prompted by the actions of two colleges which closed their sororities this fall, charging the sororities were practicing racial discrimination.

Portland (Ore.) State College suspended its six sororities when two Negro grils were cut by all six sororities in the first round of rush.

The two girls were referred to as "eminently qualified" and "the kind of pledges all sororities are looking for" by college President Branford P. Miller.

The Negro girls were two of four to be cut in the first round. There were 115 girls rushing.

Chapters of Delta Delta Delta and Pi Beta Phi were among the six suspended in the action. They protested that "to yield to faculty pressure eliminates all freedom of choice."

Pi Beta Phi was one of the three UNC sororities to reply that they had no national discriminatory clause.

An incident similar to the one in Oregon occurred at Williams College in Massachusetts four years ago involving Beta Theta Pi. The fraternity has no national discriminatory clause, but the Williams chapter went local when it was compelled to take a Negro boy.

It was felt that the college infringed upon the fraternity's freedom of choice of members. Negroes and non-Christians are members of other Beta chapters.

The second sorority case this year occurred at Long Beach State College in California where the administration withdrew recognition from six of the seven sororities for disobeying campus rushing rules.

The college charged that the sorority was rushing off campus to avoid compliance with a non-discriminatory rule effective next September.

The rule was passed by the trustees of the California state colleges.

One of the six sororities was Delta Delta Delta which has a chapter here and was among the four sororities who declined to reply to the Daily Tar Heel poll.

The fraternity discriminatory clauses break down into several categories.

Three fraternities, Phi Delta Theta, Kappa Alpha and Alpha Tau Omega said they have clauses limiting membership to "white Christian males."

Another fraternity, Pi Kappa Phi, has a clause prohibiting Negroes and non-Christians, but spokesmen said they could not reveal the wording of the clause.

The Phi Delts said they are in the process of removing their clause. They passed a resolution to repeal it at their summer convention, but it must be passed again next year before it goes off the books.

Sigma Nu has a clause discriminating by race, but non-Christian members are permitted, according to President Thompson Mann.

Kappa Sigma and Sigma Chi have no clauses discriminating against Negroes but they are limited to Christians.

However, there are no Negro members in any of the national chapters while there are some Jewish members.

Both houses must have members approved by the national office and no Negro members have come up as yet.

Jewish and other non-Christian boys who profess a belief in Christ are admitted under the religious clause.

Other houses with "socially acceptable" clauses are Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Phi Gamma Delta, Chi Phi and St. Anthony Hall. Of these, the St. Anthony Hall national fraternity is the only one with Negro members.

The Yale chapter pledged and initiated a Negro member four years ago without letting the national office know the boy was a Negro.

Brothers at the University of Virginia chapter flew up to Yale to protest because they had not had a chance to accept or reject the boy.

The Virginia alumni told their chapter that if another Negro was pledged by any chapter, the house would be taken away.

Thus when two Negro boys went through rush at St. Anthony Hall here this year, they were neither passed nor blackballed.

The three sororities who replied to the poll, Pi Beta Phi, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Alpha Gamma Delta, all have non-Christians in some of their chapters.

Alpha Gamma Delta has had Negro members and one Pi Phi chapter once had a Japanese girl.

A recent survey by the Associated Press showed "a conspicuous absence of Negroes in most of the nation's fraternities and sororities."

The three predominantly Jewish fraternities here, Zeta Beta Tau, Tau Epsilon Phi, and Pi Lambda Phi, have no discriminatory clauses.

Aycock Says Officials Won't Halt Protests Against Speaker Ban

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

4 Cubans Shot As 'CIA Agents'

HAVANA (UPI)—Four more Cubans were executed by Castro firing squads Tuesday as "CIA agents."

The execution brought to nine the number of "CIA agents" who faced firing squads in less than a week. Five men were executed last Friday. All were Cubans.

High Priest Of Love Scandal Roars

LONDON (UPI)—A coroner adjourned for a month Tuesday an inquest into the mysterious death of a raven-haired "high priestess of love" after disclosing that an attempt had been made "to interfere with and intimidate my officers in execution of their duty."

The disclosure intensified the mystery surrounding the case of Julie Molley, 24-year-old Italian-born beauty whose death Nov. 2 touched off reports of a sex-and-drug ring with overtones of blackmail in high places.

Soviets Won't Withdraw Cuba Troops

MOSCOW (UPI)—The government newspaper Izvestia said Tuesday night the Soviet Union never promised the United States to withdraw all Russian troops from Cuba.

It said the question of Soviet troops in Cuba "is a problem between the Soviet Union and Cuba" and no one else.

Convoy Is Cleared Without Trouble

BERLIN (UPI) — The Russians today cleared a U.S. Army convoy through checkpoints at both ends of the West Berlin-West Germany highway with only slight delays even though its commander refused to make it easier for them to count his troops.

Dispatch of the 54-man convoy from West Berlin was seen as a test of Soviet intentions on Western Allied access routes.

It was the first sizable American convoy that could have been challenged by the Soviets since they held up another convoy last week.

Negroes To Receive Top TV Roles

CLEVELAND, Ohio (UPI)—A top CBS television official said Monday night that Negroes are going to receive more key roles in television programs.

Public acceptance of programs dealing with the Negro has been good and advertisers are urging that more Negroes be given key television parts immediately, Michael H. Dann, vice president of the CBS television network for programs, said.

3 Houses Fined On Pledge Rule

Three fraternities were fined and placed on probation in an IFC trial Monday night for violation of the "bull-pledge" rule.

Delta Kappa Epsilon and Zeta Psi were found guilty of failure to register a party with the Dean of Men's office and with having members who were scholastically ineligible at the party.

Phi Delta Theta was found guilty of having members who were scholastically ineligible at a party.

DKE and Zeta Psi received $150 fines and the Phi Delts $100.

All three houses received a suspended sentence of social probation for the semester. This means that if they violate the rule again they will receive automatic social probation.

The social probation sentences were suspended because the houses turned themselves in.

Despite Whitley Threat

Chancellor William B. Aycock said yesterday university officials would continue to oppose the controversial speaker ban law as "injurious to the state."

Aycock made the remark in reply to State Sen. Adam Whitley's charges that if university officials continued to criticize the anti-Communist law it would result in election of UNC trustees "willing to carry out legislative policy."

"When we do not work against something we think is injurious to the state, then I think we are derelict in our duties," the chancellor said.

Whitley, from Johnston County, defended the law Monday night and said it had the support of the "great majority" of the people of North Carolina.

"I'm sick," he said, "of hearing university officials praise the legislature on one side of their mouth for giving them the money they asked for and out of the other side of their mouth criticize us for passing a law approved by the great majority of the people."

Whitley said he had heard much praise of the Legislature for passing the law, adding, "Not one single person in my district has ever told me that he's against it."

He said the only opposition he has noted was in the newspapers.

He particularly took to task Chancellor Willam B. Aycock for a speech made during the weekend and described Aycock's remarks as "just big talk."

In a statement to the university board of trustees recently Aycock said he knew of no violation of the original "gag" law adopted in 1941 and also claimed he does not know of anyone who has knowledge that the law has been ignored.

Whitley said UNC officials "continue to talk about the rights and necessity of academic freedom, but I haven't heard a single one of them say one word about the responsibilities that go with academic freedom.

"The Legislature has the authority to direct how the state institutions are to be run and we need no assistance from Mr. Aycock or other university officials," Whitley added.

Judge, Cops Give Students Break

By JIM NEAL

"We try to protect the students from themselves."

This was the consensus reached by University and Chapel Hill law enforcement officers Monday night in WUNC-TV's "Encounter."

"If a boy is on the street, and he's been drinking, we try to persuade him to go home, or we try to get a friend to take him on home. If he argues, or if he's too drunk to understand, and refuses to go home, we have to arrest him for his own good. We try not to have to arrest any student."

According to Chapel Hill Police Chief William D. Blake, this is the way the police department tries to handle one situation in which students sometimes run afoul of the law.

"Encounter" is a weekly show which discusses student's "Minds, Manners and Morals." The topic under discussion this week was "The Student and the Law."

"What about violations of the law which can't be condoned as a mere prank?" the three-man panel was asked by moderator John Clayton, professor in the RTVMP department.

Campus Safety Officer Arthur Beaumont answered, "If a boy is arrested, whether by one of my campus policemen, one of Chief Blake's town policemen or by any of the other authorities, I'm called.

"If it looks like the boy may have to make bond, I call Dean (of Students William) Long, and he makes bond for the boy. If the boy is from out of state, or he's in bad trouble, we try to persuade him to call his parents," Beaumont said. Then if he needs one, "we try to help him get a lawyer."

"Frequently, this is his first contact with a court," Chapel Hill Recorder's Court Judge William S. Stewart said.

"We try to give the students the impression they are being delt with fairly, but we like to think we deal with them firmly. There is a law there, and it must be obeyed." Judge Stewart said.

Beaumont said there is no problem with student parking, because "we reserve the campus for staff and faculty parking." He said students may park in the big Bell Tower lot, and in other lots off the main campus.

Blake said the town does have a parking problem, partly because of the number of student automobiles, and the town is now buying three lots on Rosemary Street to take care of off-street parking.

Judge Stewart said parking violations are not a concern of his court, unless the violators ignore notices to pay the fine. Then, he said, "they find it is a bit more expensive than it would have been if they had paid the dollar fine in the first place."

Chief Blake said he didn't find young people were such bad drivers—not any worse than anywhere else there are 10,000 people.

But Judge Stewart said the volume of motor vehicle violations has grown to the point that he now has a full day set aside in court to try nothing but traffic violations. He said the Recorder's Court has grown from one-day-a-week to twice a week.

"We spend more time on motor vehicle violations than on any other," the judge said.

Chief Beaumont explained that there are 15 full-time campus policemen and seven guards, all of whom are sworn into the town force. In case of emergency, he said, all his men could be used by the town. He said the town police patrol the campus in their automobiles, and may be called onto the campus in case of need.

Blake said his men stand by in a tense situation, and are on call it they are needed. He said the town police have found that too many police on the scene add to the excitement of any situation, and so they try to keep from being too obvious. Blake said his men are trained to handle large crowds or mobs, and that most of them are experienced.

Dr. Clayton noted that student riots have been going on for a long time, and asked if this seemed to be a regular part of student life.

Beaumont said he thought it had something to do with working off energy and mentioned the better pep-rallies now being held as a reason for fewer riots on the campus.

"Your presence at an illegal gathering makes you a participant," Beaumont said. He added that if there is trouble, people standing around are just as responsible as the people who actually brought the trouble on.

On the subject of fire-crackers, Beaumont said the problem "has kind of gone out." He said, "When your mother called, and the phone was out because your buddy had blown it off with a cherry bomb, it wasn't funny any more."

There has been remarkably little trouble with vandalism this year, Beaumont said. He attributed this to the higher admission standards now in operation, and said the danger of vandalism is discussed at orientation and discouraged.

Beaumont said there are very few serious crimes on the campus, and that most of these are by people who weren't really ready to come to college in the first place.

"If they act like men, we treat them like men," Beaumont said.

When someone does get into trouble, campus authorities try to persuade him to call his parents himself, Beaumont said. If the person doesn't want to call his parents, it is up to the Dean of Students what to do about communication, he said.

Parents are notified when their children get in trouble so that they can help protect the students, Beaumont said.

Prof. Silver, You Can't Go Home Again

With the possible exception of the late Senator Bilbo, who divided his time on the Senate Floor between spitting tobacco juice on the carpet and yelling "Nigger, Kike and Wop," Governor Ross Barnett is easily the most demogogic public figure the state of Mississippi (and therefore the nation) has ever produced.

But even bearing this in mind, it's difficult to conceive of a man so thoroughly blinded by demogoguery that he actually argues his opposition's viewpoint.

Last week, scarcely after Professor James W. Silver had left the podium from which he had charged that any man who dared speak the truth in Mississippi was unceremoniously booted out, the slack-jawed, unreconstructed Governor added his own telling postscript: "Old Silver," the Governor moaned, "should have been kicked out a long time ago."

Sadly enough, it was only last summer that Professor Silver announced in an address at Emory University that his one hope was that he could deliver his criticism of Mississippi and still be able to live in the state. "If I can read that paper, and not suffer from it in Mississippi," the veteran Ole Miss professor said, "the state will have proved that I'm wrong."

If the response of Mississippi's racerabid Governor is any herald of things to come, Professor Silver couldn't have been more right. Nor is there any hope that Barnett's heir to the Statehouse at Jackson, gravel-voiced Paul Johnson, will be any more receptive to that most rare of Mississippi commodities, the truth. During his primary campaign, Johnson referred to the students who rioted at Ole Miss as "the brick and bottle brigade — brave students who fought those federal troops with nothing but their bare hands." In the tortured logic of Mississippi politicians these days, the Ole Miss riot is regarded as roughly equivalent to the Hungarian revolt, and the screaming mob of hoodlums who turned the campus into a battleground are seen as the freedom fighters of the sixties. The Barnetts and the Johnsons patriotically hawk their racist wares by labeling them "individuality" and "freedom". But what they are really selling is the most terrifying brand of close-minded and hateful conformity.

Professor Silver put it this way in Asheville last week:

"The Mississippian, who prides himself on his individuality, in reality lives in a climate where nonconformity is forbidden, where the white man is not free, where he does not dare to express a deviation opinion without looking over his shoulder."

There are probably few men who know that better than Professor Silver. More than one soft, magnolia-scented Mississippi night has passed with the 56-year-old professor seated wearily in his bedroom, a loaded shotgun across his knee, waiting for the voice on the telephone to make good his threat to punish any dissenter from "the Miss-ippi way of life."

Courage does not come cheap in the Magnolia State, and more than one man has been unable to weather the assualt that falls inexorably on those who speak their minds there. We hope Silver will be able to stay in the state.

But if he, like so many before him, is forced to leave (and, as one editor put it, "come back to the United States,") we feel sure the state of North Carolina would welcome him.

We can't offer him any Barnetts or Johnsons to scrap with, but we do have the gag law, Thad Eure, and I. Beverly Lake. That should keep even Silver's capable hands full.

An Artful Dodger Goes A 'Courtin'

Watching Judge Dan K. Moore tiptoe around the state in his low-gear campaign for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination is almost as much fun as watching Barry Goldwater conservate around the nation, and not half as frightening.

The two men have much in common. Both are ardent conservatives, both find it most distasteful to make a declarative statement and both are past masters of their own particular brand of double-talk. This is not the time-honored type of double-talk characterized by saying two different things to two different people, but apparently a new type, a new weapon in the arsenal of political campaigners. This new weapon, which may revolutionize the industry if it proves profitable, is characterized by the startling tactic of saying two contradictory things to the same person. Of course it must be used carefully, and the tradition bound, use-tested, Good Housekeeping—sealed noncommittal statement may be substituted liberally for maximum effect.

While Goldwater is the acknowledged master of the contradiction, Judge Moore may well pride himself in his ability to issue non-committal, and sometimes downright funny, statements. The classic case so far came in his speech to the Hickory Rotarians. The Judge said that it would be "presumptious" of him to attempt to advise North Carolinians on the merits of the "little federal" amendment. "They do not like to be regarded as a people who jump through the hoop at a signal from some political group or personality," he noted magisterially.

Moore then deplored "the tendency to array the more populous counties against the less populous couunties and vice versa." He also said that he didn't think the amendment is a political issue, but hopes "our people will do what is best for all of North Carolina."

These are most noble statements on the Judge's part, but any amendment which would insure control of the House of Representatives to 19 per cent of the state's voters is bound to be controversial, and as such, a political issue.

Then there is the small unanswered question of what Judge Moore believes to be the best thing for North Carolina. Is it best when each citizen's vote counts the same, or is it best when the small counties on each side of the state ally themselves in a power grab which would ignore the rights of the voters in the heavily populated Piedmont Crescent? We would certainly like to know, for it would seem incumbent upon a gubernatorial candidate to have some thoughts about what is good for his state.

Moore is campaigning in Charlotte—the Piedmont's largest city — today and tomorrow, and owing to his rather exposed position on the stump, he may find it increasingly difficult to dodge such questions. We certainly hope so anyway.

Our Spy In Washington

Is Your Paper Boring?

By FRANK CROWTHER
DTH Spy

WASHINGTON—When it's 3 a.m. in the morning and your back is sore after reading for hours, and your Siamese cat has put your arm to sleep, and you made the mistake after dinner of 'taking a short nap' which lasted until 11 p.m., the only thing to do is sip some tea at the typewriter and ruminate odds and ends, smoking too many cigarettes while the Boston Symphony swirls through an overture of Berlioz on the habit-forming all night good music station.

I've been reading James Thurber's The Years With Ross, for the third time, and as the editor of The New Yorker used to worry about Thurber and England, I worry about not getting the books read and what's happened to journalism.

Now it must be granted that you don't necessarily have to be a journalist to worry over it; as a cat can look at a king, a Crowther can grumble over a Reston (usually in envy).

Reston has nothing to do with with anything, except that he worries about his country and the future of the West too much of the time because few other people with any intelligence are able to do so without roaring into hysterics or boring hell out of one. Reston should have more time to write those hilarious pieces about IBM machines and the bumptuous machinations of that country club rest home up on Capitol Hill.

The American newspaper has become something really to gloom over. The New York Times has degenerated from the good gray ghost to the glum gray ghoul. I mean, the weekly review is awful, the news stories are so thorough and over-written that they start on page one and end up in the next county, the articles in the magazine section read like ill-begot prefaces to text books. There is so little humor in it these days, you'd think somebody sprayed it with pesticide before each run.

The Washington Post has a splotchy make-up out of chaos, the society pages are the most arrogant rubbish heaps ever conceived, and the Potomac magazine is an abortion thought up by the business office for the sole purpose of carrying mindless ads.

The Baltimore Sun, in which my father has been incarcerated for 34 years, is still edited for Episcopal bishops, and, even if it is highly respected for its sober efficiency, the paper developed a cancer in the 40's that is now obviously malignant.

Of course, I always expect more of a newspaper than it ever has given or will provide. One morning you hope to pick up some mythological journal and find clarity, brightness, humor, outrage, satire, imagination, research, style and proper English. Such a paper would cost a fortune for talent (fortunes are being made by papers, but damned few pockets feel the jingle) and take weeks to produce, when all of us know there is only one rotation of the earth between editions. But, by God, things cannot get much worse than they are today.

Somebody asked what was going to happen to the New Yorker after Harold Ross died, and Joe Liebling said, "The same thing that happened to analysis after Freud died." He was right.

What has happened to newspapers, and were they all that good only a decade or two ago?

Some of them were good (remember PM?), and what has happened is well documented by the same Liebling in his book, The Press, which should be required reading (along with Hohenberg's The Professional Journalist) for anyone who sits down to write anything for public consumption.

Two major faults are that the business interests behind newspapers, which were always the enemy to be fought at every turn before, have completely engulfed the smaller papers while setting up tyrannical rule in their own monoliths, and the days of the flamboyant managing or city editors has gone forever. The arteries have slowly hardened and individual imagination, though still trickling in a few veins, has been battered and bludgeoned, now lies hemorrhaging with the copy paper on the floor.

Where are the Russ Bakers, the James Morrises, the Murray Kemptons, the Art Buchwalds who have given up in despair and disgust? Have you seen a Herbert Bayard Swope or Mike Berger around of late? Whenever I walk through the city room of a paper today, those overlarge ugly rooms squeezed with dull desks and sad faces, I wonder that the place hasn't burst of seething frustration and futility. There seems to be no pleasure in being a reporter anymore. The faces reflect what they all know: do it our way or get out; the formula is set and you'd better follow it; "if we need any advice, we'll read the Farmer's Almanac"; just the facts, nothing fancy; write it plain and don't disturb anybody; "the only satire in this paper is on the obit page, remember that."

We also have six million authorities on everything from pimples and begonias to Mesopotamian economics and the revealed word of God. Pundits abound, and they would bore duller men that Calvin Coolidge. The syndicated columns that are written each day, 99 and 44/100% inane and over-blown and miserably written, if laid tripe to tripe, would cover a foot path from here to limbo and back. I'm in favor of lining almost every columnist against a wall and turning the Eighth Army loose for target practice (myself included at the wall, one might add).

Radio and television journalism is such a disgrace, I will pointedly ignore it. Exceptions noted.

Finally, I will admit to excessive pessimism and generally agree with anyone rushing to the defense of particular journalism. Some good writing is getting done, and there is more alent around than ever before. Newspapermen are better eduated (maybe that's a problm, too) and occasionally demonstrate a marked facility with the language.

But when you read your newspaper next time, see if it doesn't honestly bore the hell out of you.

Good Idea

By PETER HARKNESS

President of the Student Body, Mike Lawler, has come up with a good idea.

A committee has been established by Student Government to organize informal discussions in different fraternities concerning the Carolina Symposium.

A number of faculty members will visit fraternity houses and talk to members in an attempt to stimulate interest in the Symposium, especially as it pertains to their different fields.

The Symposium is one of the finest things on this campus and any additional interest is beneficial.

From West Germany

Learning German

Ed. Note—Gray Temple is spending a year in West Germany on the UNC-Goettingen Exchange Program and will write back to the Daily Tar Heel about once a month.

By GRAY TEMPLE JR.

There is nothing particularly easy or difficult involved in learning another language. One simply realizes that this is a different way of doing it and and learns it, if one wants to.

The trick is wanting to.

One's immediate and constant inclination is to speak another language as though it were one's own. This tendency led the porverbial German in a London restaurant to ask the waiter "I am sit here already one hour! When do I become a sausage?" ("Bekommen" in German means "receive".)

Lacking the will-power and intelligence to learn good German by myself, I spent my first two months in Europe in a Goethe-Institut. This institute has language schools in all parts of the world and in many cities and villages in West Germany. The locations are beautifully selected, (mine was in the Black Forest just north of Switzerland) and the instruction, by and large, is excellent. Each teacher is a university graduate with a fluent knowledge of two other languages. Their patience approaches sainthood. The student is placed in any one of six levels, depending upon his previous knowledge and facility. The classes are fairly small, (20 at the largest) and quickly become quite congenial, as one spends a good part of each day in them. One eats in local restaurants, and lives with a German family, with a room-mate from another country. Trips are arranged to nearby points of interest, including cathedrals, breweries, and distilleries. (This can be rough if one happened to miss breakfast!)

My own teacher was a very gracious lady who bore a strong resemblance to Sally James. I once had occasion to try her patience very severely: the morning after my birthday orgy, half the class came in hung-over. I myself came two hours late, still just the slightest bit plastered. In order to cushion the blow, I handed her a flower as I entered. Not only was she very charming about it all, but she also had the good sense not to call on me the rest of the morning and spoke with a mercifully soft voice for the remaining two periods. Such teachers are rarely found!

Besides birthdays, there is an added difficulty in learning German. Most Germans speak at least two languages: Their own and Martin Luther's. Without Luther's "High German", in many cases, people in different parts of Germany literally could not communicate. Picture, if you will, a Gulla Negro speaking to a Cockney—then multiply by three. Any German who has been through the school or owns a radio can speak High German, if he chooses; (some find it a bit affected.) But in most regions, at home and among themselves they prefer dialekt. (Or it seems to a poor foreigner.) Thus when you run across a person who speaks mostly (or only) dialect, it may indeed be impossible to communicate two ways. In this situation, the German's immediate instinct will be to speak the louder. You painstakingly explain that you are not really deaf, only stupid. But he has been shouting all this time and has not heard you. I once saw a student from Iraq draw a crowd in this manner; it took us two minutes to wade through and rescue the poor devil, who at this point was invoking the Prophet.

After 2 months of this sort of thing, one takes a test and receives a certificate entitling one to talk German to anybody. This is useful to produce when a conversation is going a bit roughly. It gives one moral support, after a fashion.

Fred Welder, Ralph Reid, Richard King, Punk Reid, etc. all ask to be remembered to you all. You will hear from John Shelborne and me again if and when we learn enough to figure out what our classes are all about.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Belle Of Ball

Editors, The Tar Heel,

"No human being can stay keyed up to a high pitch all the time," I replied to those I heard bewailing the defeat of the Tar Heels Saturday by Clemson. "We all have our days of letdown, and today was one of them." But with proper rest, and care of their nerves and bodies, and faith in the excellence of our players, our team will come back. And win, or lose, a game, we shall back them to the very end.

I was invited to six open-house parties after the Clemson-UNC game. I chose to attend the one that I was invited to first. I stayed in the lounge about an half-hour, waiting for the dance to warm-up out in the court. As I watched through the window they all looked like they were at a funeral, instead of a dance. Suddenly an idea struck me. I went out the door and down the steps, doing the Twist. The crowd really waked up then and came to life, watching me do the Twist, after a fashion. They laughed, and waved, and shouted to me, and two boys joined me in the dance. The leader of the combo announced that the next dance would be dedicated to Otelia. When I looked around and saw the couples on the "floor", dancing I took my leave, as I felt my purpose had been accomplished.

But there were far too few girls at the dance. Cannot the WC girls, where there are far too few boys, come down in busses for these dorm dances, pay their own way, and have a grand time, with Otelia there to mix them up and get them going?

I am struck with how little initiative the boys have in contacting the girls who come in masse. No doubt, he, or she, is afraid they will get "stuck" and can't get away after they get together. But we managed the USO dances during the War so that things kept moving and no one got stuck, by the simple procedure of thanking the girl after one dance number, and returning her to her seat. However, if the couple liked each other they could dance on as partners.

But breaking on a couple, or tagging, was in order, so that everybody had many partners during the evening. This dancing with one partner all evening is something new to me. When I came along, you felt like a wall-flower if you danced with your partner all evening.

I think these Dorm parties are an excellent idea, but they need a lot of planning and development to get to be the success that the long established fraternity parties are. By the way, I went to a fraternity dance after the UNC-State game, and I was the belle-of-the Ball! How about that?

Wants Support

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Re: 'Rx for broadcasting: More Morgans'. Well, here we go again with more invective directed at WRAL's Jessie Helms.

The Daily Tar Heel can't seem to get over the fact that there is a commentator in the area who is conservative. According to this editorial WRAL is a biased station. Perhaps the editors are unaware that a five minute editorial is hardly an unusual thing for a radio or TV station to include in its programming. Or is it that because the views expressed are different than (sic) those of the DTH that the station becomes biased? No doubt if there were a station in the area which took a similar interest in current events but had liberal outlook, it would be hailed by your paper as a bastion of freedom, truth, and light.

Your paper often berates Mr. Helms's comments as containing twisted logic or exaggerated or incorrect facts. However you give no support to this observation. Perhaps some time, (the next time you decide take a poke at him) you could refer to a specific Viewpoint and show us where Mr. Helms went wrong. Then perhaps you would have some room to talk.

Scholarships Available For Journalists, Others

Five scholarship programs are now available for students interested in Library Science, mass communications, secretarial training, or travel and study in Europe.

Five graduate scholarships in Library Science will be offered next year by the South Carolina State Library Board to prepare students for employment in that state's system of county and regional libraries. The $2,500 scholarships may be used for a year of graduate study at any accredited library school participating in the board's scholarship program.

Requests for information should be sent to the South Carolina State Library Board, 1001 Main Street, Columbia, S.C. Deadline for application is Jan. 1, 1964.

Stanford University is offering graduate scholarships for persons preparing for careers in editorial journalism, mass communications research, advertising and media research, and broadcasting and film. For information write to the Executive Head, Dept. of Communication, Stanford University, Stanford Cal. Jan. 15, is the deadline for application.

The Katharine Gibbs School, 200 Park Ave., N.Y., is offering two national scholarships to senior girls in secretarial training. The scholarships will consist of full tuition plus a cash grant of $500.

The Kosciuszko Foundation, 15 East 65th St., New York, is awarding an all-expense six weeks tour of Poland for the best essay from an undergrad on: The Meaning of Poland's Millennium. Write the above address for information.

Application periods for three full-year programs in Paris, Vienna, and Freiburg, W. Germany are open. The Institute of European Studies announced in Chicago that sttudents have until June 5, 1964 to submit applications for the 1964-65 programs. For information write the Institute of European Studies, 35 E. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill.

ARMY RESERVE

Army Reserve Officers among the students, faculty, and staff, especially those with a reserve obligation, are invited to enroll in the Army Reserve Officers School. This school offers an easy way to meet the reserve obligation without disrupting your normal schedule. Courses are offered for officers in almost all branches of the service.

The class meets for two hours per week, and the program is completed in May. For further information, call 967-7057 during the day, or 942-490 at night.

JUNIOR CLASS COMMITTEES

The Junior Class is now seeking students interested in serving on class committees, Harrison Merrill, class president, announced yesterday.

Merrill said that there still are a number of openings on all ifve committees, which include Campus Communications, Finance, Publicity, and Social Committees, as well as the class Secretariat.

Interviews for all positions will be held in Roland Parker III of GM Thursday from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

On Campus with Max Shulman

(Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and "Barefoot Boy With Cheek.")

SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE AND JAZZ LIKE THAT

I am now an elderly gentleman, full of years and aches, but my thoughts keep ever turning to my undergraduate days. This is called "arrested development."

But I cannot stop the healing tide of nostalgia that washes over me as I recall those golden campus days, those ivy-covered buildings (actually, at my college, there was only ivy: no bricks), those pulse-tingling lectures on John Dryden and Cotton Mather, the many friends I made, the many deans I bit.

I know some of you are already dreading the day when you graduate and lose touch with all your merry classmates. It is my pleasant task today to assure you that it need not be so; all you have to do is join the Alumni Association and every year you will receive a bright, newsy, chatty bulletin, chock-full of tidings about your old buddies.

Oh, what a red-letter day it is at my house, the day the Alumni Bulletin arrives! I cancel all my engagements, take the phone off the hook, dismiss my resident osteopath, put the cheetah outside, and settle down for an evening of pure pleasure with the Bulletin and (need I add?) a good supply of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Whenever I am having fun, a Marlboro makes the fun even more fun. That filter, that flavor, that yielding soft pack, that firm Flip Top box, never fails to heighten my pleasure whether I am playing Double Canfield or watching the radio or knitting an afghan or enjoying any other diverting pursuit you might name—except, of course, spear fishing. But then, how much spear fishing does one do in Clovis, New Mexico, where I live?

But I digress. Let us return to my Alumni Bulletin and the fascinating news about my old friends and classmates. I quote from the current issue:

"Well, fellow alums, it certainly has been a wing-dinger of a year for us old grads! Remember Mildred Cheddar and Harry Camembert, those crazy kids who always held hands in Econ II? Well, they're married now and living in Clovis, New Mexico, where Harry rents spear-fishing equipment, and Mildred has just given birth to a lovely 28-pound daughter, her second in four months. Nice going, Mildred and Harry!

"Remember Jethro Brie, the man we voted most likely to succeed? Well, old Jethro is still gathering laurels! Last week he was voted 'Motorman of the Year' by his fellow workers in the Duluth streetcar system. 'I owe it all to my brakeman,' said Jethro in a characteristically modest acceptance speech. Same old Jethro!

"Probably the most glamorous time had by any of us old alums was had by Francis Macomber last year. He went on a big game hunting safari all the way to Africa! We received many interesting post cards from Francis until he was, alas, accidentally shot and killed by his wife and white hunter. Tough luck, Francis!

"Wilametta 'Deadeye' Macomber, widow of the late beloved Francis Macomber, was married yesterday to Fred 'Sureshot' Sigafoos, white hunter, in a simple double-ring ceremony in Nairobi. Many happy returns, Wilametta and Fred!

"Well, alums, that just about wraps it up for this year. Buy bonds!"

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

SOME OF THE things Frank Howard says after he loses a football game can be printed. They really can. After he wins one, even more of his comments are put down. Unfortunately, last Sunday's papers had big stories rather than small ones on the corpulent Ph.D. (Alabama '31) otherwise known as The Baron of Barlow Bend.

When you interview Howard, you take a megaphone or ear trumpet (for Howard), a bar of soap (also for Howard—his mouth) and a four-letter dictionary (for yourself, but probablly obtainable from Howard).

You thought the Minataurs were crude? Listen, this guy could make Lenny Bruce turn and hide from blushing so much. Talking to him after Hickey is like switching from Harpo to Groucho Marx. And, contrary to popular opinion, he does say some things that can be repeated in church. Some.

Howard said before his game with UNC here Saturday that the two best teams in the league would be playing. This would suggest that the winner was the best, which further suggests that Clemson is the best, which is exactly what Howard had in mind.

However, too bad. Because the second, third and fourth best ACC teams will be playing for the championship the weekend before Thanksgiving, not Howard.

The big man also bellowed things like "We could've done anything we wanted." "Those are all a bunch of myths about a pass defense." "We sure stopped them." And "Awfully sorry to see you're not going to that bowl game." Gee, it's hard to see a guy like that leave town.

Despite UNC's disappointing 11-7 loss in which it was badly outplayed the first half, Carolina is said to be still very much in contention for a spot in two post-season bowl contests.

The Tar Heels came out of those first 30 minutes Saturday lucky to be down just 3-0. They could have wilted then. But they didn't. The team played a strong game the second half and looked like the club that had pushed to a 6-1 record earlier, especially on the scoring drive that got it the lead.

Even two UNC dropped passes on crucial plays and a sustained Clemson march for the go-ahead points didn't put the Heels out of the ball game. They had four minutes to do something about the deficit. That they couldn't pull it out did not diminish the feeling of confidence they had for the win in that time.

This is certainly one of the main changes the UNC football team has undergone this year from last—the feeling of confidence they have in their ability to move for the score. Hickey is confident. the team is confident and, in turn, the fans are confident. Personally, I never once thought UNC was going to lose that game. Not until Clemson ran out the last 30 seconds.

UNC A Strong Bowl Possibility

HOWEVER RIGHT HOWARD may have been about the first three statements mentioned earlier, he may turn out to be wrong about the last one.

This is a colorful team, an exciting team. It is also the best one UNC has had since 1949. And it's color and excitement that goes to bowls.

The two interested parties still watching Carolina are the committees from the Orange and Gator Bowls.

ORANGE: Oklahoma or Nebraska vs. Georgia Tech or North Carolina State. GATOR: Auburn vs. Penn State.

Of course, this still is idle guessing and the writer neglected to mention Alabama which has to have some heavy stock in the situation. But two weeks can make a lot of difference in any assessment and, assuming UNC wins its remaining two and State does the same, the feeling among insiders is still that Carolina would get the bid before the Wolfpack.

Despite a release yesterday that said the Gator Bowl list had been narrowed (leaving out UNC) officials from that committee have not cancelled their passes to the UNC-Miami game here Saturday. The Clemson loss, further, apparently did not put the final damper on alternate possibilities, for other representatives are also expected to be here.

Whatever the case, Carolina would only go to a "Major Bowl" which seems to rule out any chance of participation in the Liberty, Bluebonnet, etc. classics.

National Optimism For UNC Cagers

IF YOU GET a good look at these Varsity-Freshmen basketball scrimmages, you either get there an hour early or you're eight feet tall.

They're packin' tem into a Woollen Gym which, as yet, has had no wooden bleachers up to accomodate them. Coach Dean Smith hopes the situation will be a better one when the clubs play the rubber match in their series this Saturday afternoon directly following the football game.

The first "official" game between the two is scheduled to start approximately 30 minutes after the end of the UNC-Miami clash.

Three or four of the basketball magazines which annually pick a pre-season top twenty are out now, and the acknowledged best one (a Dell publication) lists UNC as the number six team in the country

This is in direct contrast to the others which fail to place the Tar Heels in the first twenty. This optimism from national sources may or may not be good for a team, though Smith seems to enjoy it.

"We're always pleased to be named in any of the pre-season polls," he said earlier this week. "It's nice to know you're respected. But we like to believe we're that good anyway. We always approach the season optimistically, and this time we'll just have to strive for this ranking."

The AP and UPI pre-season polls, out probably at the end of this month, should also have some mention of the Tar Heels. But, as Smith also pointed out, it's the season that counts. And, if UNC is rated highly in those two "big" polls, two of their first four games (Indiana and Kentucky) will give the team a good chance to prove it belongs.

The freshmen, too, continue to make the big noise—as far away as St. Petersburg, Fla. where some weeks ago, Jimmy Mann of the St. Pete Times ushered into view "All Eyes On Ian At Chapel Hill"—an eight-column spread with green ("From Green Devil Green") and blue ("To Tar Heel Blue") boxes and a picture of home town boy (St. Petersburg High) Ian Morrison.

"The fad here is for a large group of the student body to turn out and watch these freshmen practice," Mann says. "But it is one fad that some 200 to 300 students here feel won't turn into a national craze. For, only the University of North Carolina has Ian Morrison of St. Petersburg and Bob Lewis of Washington D.C. enrolled as freshmen and only this pair is worth playing hooky from lessons for.

"Just seven months ago, Ian and Bob were standing before national television cameras. They were guests of the Ed Sullivan Show and were 40 per cent of the All-America Prep Basketball team. North Carolina came up with this 40 per cent through an enticing recruiting system."

Mr. Mann should have also taken a look at the varsity while he was around. Perhaps word hasn't reached him that they've got probably the most exciting ,baskteball player in the country. And you can think that over for awhile, too.

Both Titles To Phi Delt In Frat Play

By AL KAPLAN

Phi Delta Theta swept to a double victory in the Frat tag football championships Tuesday. Phi Delt's Blue team defeated SAE 32-18, and the White squad won over the ATO Pledgepins, 39-2.

Timely interceptions aided the Blues' win over SAE. On the opening kickoff of the second half, SAE took the ball on the goal line and went 98 yards only to throw the ball away to the Phi Delts. Another time with SAE back on its own 2 yard line, the champs intercepted and scored.

At the end of the first half, SAE trailed by only one point, 19-18. But the Phi Delts completely dominated second half play and allowed no serious drives by SAE.

The big men for Phi Delt were Erskine Duff and O. H. Parrish, strong candidates for All-Campus. Each scored two touchdowns.

For SAE, Brooks Reed, Bright Williamson and Stu Saunders scored one TD apiece.

In the White game, it was no contest. Leading by the slim margin of 6-0, Phi Delt exploded for 33 points in the second half for the one-sided score.

Bud Crowden scored two touchdowns for Phi Delt and Al Jackson, Mike Mastin, Bill Bagwell and Bob Taylor each added a TD.

'Hummingbird' Mira Produces Butterflies

By JOHN MONTAGUE

When Emmett Cheek, UNC's head football scout, got up in the Pine Room of the Carolina Inn Tuesday afternoon and referred to Miami's George Mira as a "regular hummingbird in the backfield," everybody had a good laugh. Even Jim Hickey managed a chuckle.

Hickey was probably hoping that he'll be able to laugh after Saturday's encounter with "El Matador" Mira and the Miami Hurricanes. Ordinarily, George Mira is no laughing matter.

"Mira has completed 93 of 176 passes for 1,076 yards so far this year," detailed Cheek, "and it's almost impossible to trap him in his own backfield (explaining the 'hummingbird' tag). He darts about here and there and can get off the pass from any angle, running in any direction at any speed."

The implication was clear. The Tar Heels must really be on their toes if they expect to snap back from the heartbreaking loss to Clemson. Coach Coach Andy Gustafson's Hurricanes have been somewhat of a disappointment this fall, but any team which has a Mira throwing the football is a dangerous threat. And Miami has more than Mira.

"Their defensive line is bigger all the way across than any we've run up against this year," said Hickey. Miami uses a 6-1 defensive set-up, and the average weight of the front line is 220 pounds per man.

"They're a hard club to run against. Real hard. Only Kentucky has had any success in moving the ball against them on the ground," Hickey went on to say. The Hurricanes shutout Purdue and yielded only a field goal to LSU.

Hickey compared Miami's attack to Maryland's — "when Shiner is at his best." They run from the popular "pro-set" and always have somebody split wide. Mira's favorite target is flanker back Nick Spinelli, a 183-pound speedster. Also, one of the ends, either left end Hoyt Sparks (6-1, 211) or right end John Weisacosky (6-1, 201), is usually split wide.

The Hurricane ground game is handled by fullback Pete Banaszak (6-0, 203) and running back Russell Smith (6-1, 186). Banaszak, a sophomore, has been the team's top rusher so far, while Smith, also a soph, will be seeing action this weekend for the first time since he was injured in the Purdue game, September 28.

Miami, which had an off-date last Saturday, has a 3-3 record. The wins have come over Purdue, Tulane and Kentucky, and have been matched by losses to Flordia State, LSU and Georgia.

Commenting on the attitude of his own squad after the 11-7 loss to Clemson, Hickey said that, until Monday's practice, he was worried about the team's spirit from here on.

"But in practice Monday, spirit was better than ever," reported Hickey. "The desire to win is still very much there and I think we'll come back and play even better and harder than before."

Hickey also announced that soph Ed Stringer has replaced the injured Glenn Ogburn as second team center. Ogburn, a junior, will not play any more this fall.

It's Those Weird NFL Plays That Keep Grid Fans Happy

By BILL STROUPE

Last Sunday Cleveland Brown quarterback Frank Ryan pitched out to Jimmy Brown in the end zone. The Pittsburgh Steelers tackled Brown immediately for a safety.

Not only was this a rare treat for the hometown fans, but it also allowed Pittsburgh to beat Cleveland 9-7. (It also allowed the New York Giants to tie the Browns for the National Football League's Eastern Division lead.)

Fans who remember nothing else about the game will remember Frank Ryan's strange call. On the other hand, it's usually the strange play and not the call that the fans will remember from a game.

Such a fluke occurred in an NFL Championship game between the Washington Redskins and the old Cleveland Rams.

Early in the game, Washington's Sammy Baugh dropped back into his own end zone and threw a pass. A gust of wind drove the ball against a goal post for a safety. (This would not be scored as a safety today.)

Each team later scored two touchdowns. Cleveland missed one of its extra points, but won 15-14—on that safety.

Washington's self-inflicted safety came in the 1946 Championship game, but Tommy MacDonald of the Philadelphia Eagles had a more recent run-in with a goal post in a game against the Steelers.

Another strange, but more frequent play, is the one in which the quarterback passes to himself.

When Bobby Lane was playing for the Detroit Lions, he performed this stunt. He fired a pass, watched it bounce it off an opponent's helmet, caught it and then ran.

Carolina's Ray Farris must have been watching the game, because he completed a Farris-to-Farris pass the same way in 1960.

And Raleigh Broughton's Tommy Snotherly showed that high school players can work the play in the same year.

Such plays hold a simple fascination for many fans, but what really shakes up a spectator is the multi-player action.

The Eagles unintentionally teamedup with the Giants to dazzle Yankee Stadium fans on such a play. The Giants' Y. A. (the Bald Eagle) Tittle threw a pass, but Jimmy Carr of the Eagles deflected it. The ball sailed over Kyle Rote, the intended receiver, and Don Burroughs of the Eagles caught it, temporarily.

But Rote tackled him so hard that the ball popped loose—still in the air. Del Shofner of the Giants caught it, turned around and sprinted five yards for the touchdown. A bizarre footnote was added to the play as Shofner lost a shoe somewhere along the way to the end zone.

Another intricate play the same year involved the St. Louis Cards (and whoever named them must have counted jokers in the deck.)

The Cardinals had just enough time to snap the ball. As soon as the ball was downed, the game would end. The fans must have become suspicious when the ball carrier fumbled as soon as he was hit.

But when the ball rolled over to another Cardinal, it was clear that the St. Louis team had a premeditated case of butter fingers. The fumbles and laterals the Cards made would have made your head swim, but the other team finally tackled the man with the ball before he could "fumble" in the right direction.

On the scoreboard the Cardinal play went for naught, but it is probably the only one that stands out in anyone's mind.

Later on in the year, Carolina pulled a similar play against Duke. The Tar Heels, trailing 6-3, took Duke's kickoff for the last play of the game. They moved up field using laterals, but no fumbles, and came close to scoring.

Mel Allen did the play-by-play for the game. It would be an understatement to say he was excited after the play was over.

But this time he didn't lose his voice.

Trousers by CORBIN

Have you looked at your trousers lately?

Are they correct? Are they really narrow in the leg — or too narrow (or too wide)? Do they hang properly or do they drag on the floor? Do they come up too high or do they rest securely on your waist? Do your trousers enhance your appearance?

Corbin trousers do more than simply clothe

A change of pace is always welcome! Some of us travel, others like to use specific recreational facilities. Many of us prefer to just take it easy over the weekend.

Corbin makes trousers for the man who chooses his clothes with care. They look good and wear well.

Student Judicial Committee Holds New Expulsion Bill

By BOB SAMSOT

The Judicial Committee of Student Government has voted to hold the Expulsion penalty in committee until next week, when it will be voted on by Student Legislature.

Whitney Durand and Carolyn Pinion, chairmen of the Men's and Women's Councils, asked the committee for the penalty so that they might more effectively deal with the "professional student criminal."

The most severe penalty the Honor Council can hand down now is indefinite suspension with the recommendation that the student never be readmitted to the University.

Durand claimed that this penalty is unfair to the student since it leaves a chance that he might be readmitted.

He said that the penalty would probably be confined to Honor Council violations and would not be practiced in Campus Code violations.

He added the reason honor council violations would be considered more seriously than Campus Code violations was that although many more people were aware of the Campus Code violations, the reaction to such violations was more lightly thought of.

The Expulsion penalty will have to be carried over in legislature until next week, since the expulsion bill calls for the presence of both Honor Council chairmen before the bill may be considered.

Durand will be unable to attend tonight's session because of a heavy case load in the Men's Council.

Under consideration in tonight's 7:30 legislative meeting will be a bill to appropriate $550 to send a representative to Europe to investigate the possibility of setting up a University Abroad program.

Also under consideration will be appropriations of $600 for typewriters for student government; $20 for the Co-op Committee; $140 for the Cosmopolitan Club.

A resolution commending those responsible for student night performances of the Playmakers productions will be introduced. A resolution calling for a referendum on the abolition of the student judiciary may be introduced.

Durand And Pinion Ask For Expulsion

The Men's and Women's Councils are seeking the expulsion penalty "in order to deal adequately with the great variety of situations" which confront them, Whitney Durand and Carolyn Pinion, chairmen of the Councils, said in a statement yesterday.

"Expulsion is involved deeply with the philosophy of the Honor System," they said. "When mutual trust is violated, however, action must be taken to punish the offender and to aid in the process of self-correction."

The statement continues that it is the difficult task of the Councils to find a sentence which allows for correction and still demands strict maintenance of the standards of high personal conduct and consistency of treatment.

"There are times," the chairmen said, "when one or more of the aims of a penalty assumes a disproportionate share of consideration. Consistency, for instance, may be sacrificed for the sake of correction, while at other times punishment may seem less important than its companion aims.

"Finally, the University's role in the process of correction is at an end when there are indications that reform is highly unlikely or when the violation is so serious that it jeopardizes the Honor System itself.

As examples of the above situations, the two chairmen noted instances in which one person has had repeated convictions for the same offense, or the mass cheating rings which almost spelled doom for the Honor System in 1936.

Indefinite suspension with the recommendation that the defendant never be reinstated is the penalty now used for the most drastic violations of the Honor or Campus Codes. The chairmen stated that this penalty does not seem to be either fair or explicit, in that the date of termination is not suggested.

"To offer hope of reinstatement when for all practical purposes there is none, is difficult to justify upon either philosophical or moral grounds," the chairmen said.

Durand and Miss Pinion said they felt that expulsion causes a "necessary but unpleasant realization" that there are rare occasions when the student body must recognize a threat to its fundamental principles.

The expulsion issue is currently under consideration by the Judicial Committee of Student Legislature, which must approve all Council penalties. The committee will hold hearings on the matter until such time as the Men's Council chairman can present the matter to the full body.

UP To Meet On Monday

Dean of Men William G. Long will address a meeting of the University Party Monday night at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. Long's topic is "The Nature of Relations Between Student Government and the Administration."

The meeting will also feature discussion of two resolutions and the first reading and consideration of the revised party by-laws. The by-laws were tabled at the last meeting.

DTH PARIS BUREAU

PARIS — About 1,500 students who massed before the Sorbonne to protest government education policies were dispersed Thursday by club-swinging policemen. The students have long protested what they call insufficient government efforts to provide classroom, laboratories and housing.

Who? Me? Ugliest?

One lucky Carolina gentleman will be chosen the "Ugliest Man on Campus" in a contest sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, a service fraternity.

Pictures of the ten entries from the various dorms and fraternities are placed above ballot boxes in Y Court, Lenoir Hall and the Monogram Club.

All students are urged to aid in this selection by voting for the male of their choice at a penny per vote.

All proceeds from this contest will go to charity in the organization's project, Hope.

The contestant voted ugliest will receive a date with a beautiful Carolina co-ed and a large trophy.

The contest will run until the end of next week.

AWARDED SCHOLARSHIP

The Ernst and Ernst Scholarship in Public Accounting has been given to Robert D. Skees, Greensboro, a senior in the School of Business Administration here.

The scholarship, given for the 1963-64 year by the Scholarship Committee of the School of Business Administration, is awarded upon the basis of scholastic achievement, leadership qualities and financial need.

News Briefs

Moscow Man Grabs Girls

MOSCOW (UPI)—A Soviet television chief engineer who described himself as a "gentleman of culture" was reported being tried here Wednesday on charges of corrupting at least 41 teenage girls in sex orgies in his Moscow apartment.

The newspaper Moskovsky Komsomolets said Boris Yudkin, 50, would stroll through the parks, pick up girls as young as 15, take them to his apartment for a drink and show them "foreign magazines and pictures."

Then, the newspaper said, Yudkin would "instruct" the girls "how to imitate the women of the West and have the best fun out of life."

The paper said a Moscow municipal court Tuesday began the trial of Yudkin, who was alleged to have seduced the girls "to satisfy his lusts, turning his apartment into a hotbed of infamy."

Yudkin was described as chief engineer of the Moscow television relay station and a self-asserted artist.

Most of the engineer's recruits, the newspaper said, were girls who had left school and were working as elevator operators, sales clerks and telephone operators.

But 15 of the girls were members of the Young Communist League, the newspaper said, adding this fact showed there were serious shortcomings in the party's educational methods.

Harvard Men Don't (Much)

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (CPS)—The Boston papers and the wire services had a field day proclaiming to the world about the "wild parties" and "wild orgies" that were being held in the dorm rooms at Harvard. To the average Harvard student the news was just as new to him as it was to the outside world.

The Crimson, the campus newspaper at Harvard, in baring the fraudulent scandal that it saw inflated into big banner headlines in the Boston papers said, "It was the Boston Record American that discovered the issue, and proudly announced its find in a front page banner headline: "Harvard Bares Wild Parties." Harvard, of course, had bared nothing; the Record had just 'exposed' some selective passages in Dean Munro's Oct. 9 letter to the Crimson (which expressed concern over the parietal rules and the attitudes they engendered).

Erik Sundquist, a Harvard senior, commented on the allegations in an exclusive DTH interview: "There are always one or two wild parties a year, but nothing really depraved."

Negroes Go Thru Rush This Year

By PETE WALES

Last Article of Two-Part Series

Three Negro boys went through fraternity rush this year at UNC, at 13 fraternities.

One fraternity St. Anthony Hall, held the two boys they had invited, neither passing them nor balling them.

The two boys were Tom Bynum, a freshman, and Ed Hoover, a sophomore. Hoover had been recommended by an alumnus.

The third boy, freshman Connie Lovett, went through 12 fraternities, not including St. Anthony Hall, and was balled or not invited back at all of them after the first night of rush.

Lovett filled out a fraternity interest card before rush. Under the fraternity preference section he wrote, "The fraternity I'm best suited for in the best fraternity in the country."

"Like any high school student I figured fraternities were a part of college life. I was told by Negro graduate students that this was closed to me but I wanted to find out myself."

Lovett is not connected with any of the integration movements.

"I wasn't trying to make any kind of a test case. I'm genuinely interested in joining a fraternity.

"Even if I'm not accepted, at least it might make it easier for the next fellow who wants to join."

Lovett attended a predominantly white high school in San Diego, Calif., where he was vice-president of his class and co-captain of the football team his junior year. He also played basketball and participated in a variety of other activities.

In the middle of his junior year his family moved to Greenville, N. C. He finished high school at an all-Negro school there and won a Navy regular scholarship to UNC.

St. Anthony Hall was unable to act on the two Negro boys they invited to rush because of pressure from their chapter at the University of Virginia.

The Virginia chapter in turn is under pressure from alumni to veto any Negro boy pledged at any chapter under the "socially acceptable" clause of the fraternity constitution.

UNC End Is Honored Among Nation's Elite

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

The Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday that Bob Lacey, senior end from Pelham, N. Y., has been selected to the 1963 Look Magazine All-America football team.

Lacey, a 6-3, 210-pounder, was chosen along with 21 other collegians by a seven-member panel of the Football Writers Association of America at a board meeting in Chicago Sunday.

The Look All-America is annually chosen from votes submitted by 1,100 national members of the Football Writers Association. Leading candidates are listed on a blackboard at the meeting of the seven panel members, and are submitted to close scrutiny and long discussion by the group. The final selection usually takes more than five hours.

This year's team is expected to be announced in the Look edition of early December under the byline of Look Magazine Sports Editor Tim Cohane.

Lacey, a three-year standout on the Tar Heel football team, was expected to get much consideration on the post-season all-star groups, but this is the first word of any specific recognition.

The outstanding flanker, an Education major, made several All-America teams last season as an honorable mention choice and also was a unanimous All-ACC pick.

Lacey came to UNC after an outstanding two-year athletic tenure at Trinity Pawling, a prep school in upper New York state, where he was a three-letterman in football, basketball and track.

He caught 10 passes for 161 yards in 1961—his sophomore year here—and showed then all the qualifications of an outstanding end.

His size, speed, sure hands and deceptive moves are the implements to the success he has achieved this season and last.

In 1962 Lacey had 44 receptions for 668 yards and five touchdowns. At the time, the latter two were ACC records. The 668-yard mark is still a conference high.

In eight games so far this year, he has caught 32 for 341 yards and a single touchdown—the winning score in UNC's 14-7 victory over Maryland.

His career totals are 86 receptions for 1,170 yards and six TDs with high marks coming in the Michigan State game of last year (10 for 168 yards—a league record) and the South Carolina contest three weeks ago (10 for 113 yards).

Lacey is currently waging a battle with Duke's Stan Crisson for the Conference career mark in receptions. Crisson's 88 and Lacey's 86 have both already surpassed the previous record of 74 set by Gary Collins of Maryland in 1959-60-61.

Lacey also needs just 13 more yards to set a new league career record for yardage gained by an end. His total of 1,170 yards is just short of Collins' mark of 1,182.

Look's choice of the UNC end is the first legitimate All-America selection for a Tar Heel football player since Al Goldstein made this same team in 1958.

Goldstein, an end, also was selected to the NEA All-America team that year.

Other Carolina choices over the years have been guard George Barclay (current freshman coach) in 1934, end Andy Bershak in 1937, tackle Steve Maronic in 1938, end Paul Severin in 1939 and '40, halfback Charlie Justice in 1948 and '49, end Art Weiner in 1948 and '49, end Ken Powell in 1949, and center Irvin Holdash in 1950.

Lacey, thus, is the sixth UNC end to receive All-America mention.

The 22 honored players will be invited to New York City sometime in December for festivities celebrating their selection.

Last year, team headquarters were at the Hotel Lexington with the Cotton, Orange, Sugar, Gator and Liberty Bowl Queens serving as hostesses.

The official banquet was held in the Serf Room of the Waldorf Astoria and was broadcast by the National Broadcasting Company and the Armed Forces Radio Network. The All-America members also received watches and a football autographed by the team.

An All-American Career

With two games left in his college career, UNC All-America Bob Lacey has put together a fabulous record. He set Atlantic Coast Conference season records last year with 668 yards gained by receiving and five TD passes, and is expected to break two league career marks for an end by the end of this season—most passes caught and most yardage.

| | Games | Receptions | Yards | Touchdowns |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1961 | 10 | 10 | 161 | 0 |
| 1962 | 10 | 44 | 668 | 5 |
| 1963 | 10 | 32 | 341 | 1 |
| Totals | 30 | 86 | 1170 | 6 |

The Fans Go Wild Over Julie

Julie London

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Julie London, "The Marlboro girl," was not smoking a Marlboro.

Instead, she settled back and lit up a full-flavored menthol cigarette.

"I've got a slight cold," she said, "and I enjoy the menthol flavor of a Paxton."

Everyone thought she was going to break into song any minute.

Julie ("Please don't call me Miss London, it's too formal") was backstage in Memorial Hall. She had just wowed over a thousand UNC students and about half that number were backstage trying to get a closer look at the sultry songstress.

She was dressed in a simple orange dress, unlike the pink and black one she wore during the concert. Her light brown hair fell loosely over her blue-green eyes. She propped herself up on a long table as she began to recount some of her experiences since she started singing professionally some 10 years ago.

"The worst experience I ever had was during a premier of the movie 'The Girl Can't Help It' in Los Angeles," she said. "We were mobbed. We were holding records and people started pushing and pulling . . . they just about pulled our thumbs off trying to get the records."

Julie said her jobs as a mother and entertainer don't conflict too much. Her present concert tour is the first time that she has had to leave her five little ones.

"I usually take them with me when I can," she said. "This will be the only time this year that I will be away from them.

"Have you seen the twins?" she asked. She reached in her husband's coat pocket and produced a picture of the twins.

Everyone around oohed and aaahed.

Julie said she preferred to do a concert tour rather than do nightclub work.

"People come to listen at a concert, not to drink like they do in a nightclub," she said. "I really like the concert audience much more."

Julie can sing a variety of song styles, but she is famous for her sultry, torch singing.

"I love to sing ballads more than anything else," she said. "I don't like Rock n' Roll music at all, but my favorite singer is Ray Charles. I love the way he does a ballad."

Julie says her main hobby is keeping up with her five kids, ranging in age from 14 years to five months.

"But," she added, "I love to play bridge. I would play 24 hours a day if I could."

A prognosticator as well as balladeer, Julie thinks that President Kennedy will be re-elected in the '64 elections.

"I voted for him in 1960," she said "and I think he will win again, mainly because the Republicans don't have anyone who can give him a real fight."

Julie breathed a long sigh, and her low, smooth voice went even lower and smoother.

"These concerts really wear us out," she said as she lit up a fresh cigarette.

"People think that an entertainer works about two hours a day and that's it. What they don't realize is the preparation, rehearsal, warming up, anticipation and then the concert itself.

"Another thing that drains you out is trying to please the audience. And the more they react the harder we try."

Hello Out There In Televisionland . . .

Following is the transcript of a television program mailed to us by one of our agents in the hinterlands. It is dated, appropriately-enough, Halloween, but due to a mix-up in ZIP codes, was inadvertently sent to our Ambassador to India, Chester Bowles, who could not be located. The transcript was eventually re-addressed to us. We apologize to our readers for the delay.

Announcer: Hi out there friends and neighbors! Welcome to another edition of "The Hour of Americanism." My name is Billy Gingham, and this week it is my pleasant duty to give out our monthly "Defenders of The Republic" award.

As you know, recipients are chosen on the basis of their cogently-reasoned public stands on important issues. Judges include such notables as "Strum" Thurmond, Gen. "Whitehouse" Walker, H. L. "Gusher" Hunt and Leander "Swamprat" Perez.

As usual, there was hot competition for all our awards . . . but, after much irrationalizing, we were finally able to narrow the candidates down to two "Winners of The Week."

Before presenting the awards, let's all rise and join in singing our National Anthem. . . .

(Music up full)

Announcer: What a Minute! Wait a Minute! Stop The Music! Strum . . . Whitehorse . . . Gusher . . Swamprat—the National Anthem is NOT Dixie! How many damn times do I gotta tell you that?

* * *

Okay, let's take it from the top one more time . . .

. . . Ah yes, now, let's get on with the awards. Maestro, a little background music, please.

(Soft music, under announcer's voice)

Our first award this week goes to a man who stands up for what he thinks, even when it's hardly worth that much effort.

A bitter foe of coexistence, this man champions our only real alternative: multilateral nonexistence. He made headlines last week with his notable statement to the effect that 'the time has come for a showdown with international gangsterism — Communism—and any other course will lead to atomic war.'

To him goes our 'Policy of The Week' award. Here he is . . . Mr. Doublethink himself—South Carolina Rep. William Jennings Bryan Dorn! Let's hear it friends and neighbors!

(Wild applause, cheering, sounds of atom bombs going off, Mushroom-cloud smoke fills the amphitheatre.)

Announcer: Yes indeed, friends and neighbors, there goes a grrrrr—rrrr-eat American.

Our second award this week goes to a man who has been a member of the North Carolina State Senate since 1949. A staunch defender of freedom, he recently warned University of North Carolina officials that he won't tolerate any more criticism from them. Who do they think they are, anyway—responsible educators or something? Criticizing the legislature indeed. Why they act like they were citizens; "The legislature has the authority to direct how state institutions are to be run," said this courageous man, "and we need no assistance from Mr. Aycock or other university officials."

Here he is, friends and neighbors, a man who knows that there's no difference between running a farm and running a university, Sen. Adam Whitley of Smithfield!

(Loud cheers, shouts of 'let's get the educators out of education.')

Announcer: Well, friends and neighbors, that wraps up our awards session for another week. Be sure to be tuned in next week when we'll present our 'Messiah of The Month' award, along with a report on who's leading in the competition for our annual 'Defender of The Plantation' hating cup.

So, until next week at this same time, this is Billy Gingham saying 'So Long' for, "The Hour of Americanism."

(Music up full, hold, and cut)

Voice: The preceding program has been a non-political, public service presentation of the Kook Broadcasting Company. This is WRUT Television, the Voice of Free Whitemen, Raleigh, N. C.

Judge Phipps

We carried an editorial last Sunday on the background of the Gag Law, as related to a Raleigh Times reporter last Friday by Secretary of State Thad Eure. Judge L. J. Phipps figured in what Eure told the reporter, causing the mis-impression to get abroad that Mr. Phipps—then Orange County's Representative—had prior knowledge of the Gag Law.

Yesterday Phipps told us he doesn't recall Eure talking to him about the matter at all. "I won't say for certain that he didn't," Phipps said, "but if he did, I don't remember it. However, I certainly never had any conversation with him or anyone else about the bill. The first I knew of it was when it was introduced in the House."

We are glad to provide Judge Phipps with this opportunity to set the record straight.

It Sez Here . . .

UNC's Order of The Old Lampshades taps 21 new members. The order is characterized by its complete lack of organization, projects, goals and treasury. Members are tapped for their "do-nothing" spirit.

How about that, sports fans: An honest honorary.

* * * *

Catholics award St. Francis peace medal to integration leader Martin Luther King. Bet that made Bull connor see red.

Pres. Friday says N.C. college enrollment will reach 109,000-125,000 by 1970. Obviously, the Baby Boom is rapidly becoming the College Crush.

New contest: Who is the campus Chest?

For that matter, who is John Ulfelder?

Wake scores on Duke. Sort of like passing the quiz but flunking the course.

"I Don't Know If We've Ever Met Before"

Job Growth A Problem

By RALPH McGILL
(From The Atlanta Constitution)

Washington notes: After a pleasant preamble we get down to a trio of tough texts. America the Beautiful still is beautiful. The sweep and majesty of its plains, the rolling terrain of the piedmont, the ruggedness of hill and escarpment, and the sinuous curve of river and lake remain to stir the heart and please the eye.

But, America is changing—because the world is changing. Not all of it is beautiful. The nation, for all its present prosperity and dynamic drive, has a nagging sense of concern. We are caught in the gathering forces of a complex revolution and some of the portents are ominous.

The three tough texts are these:

1—In 10 years U.S. manufacturing has not added—net—one new job.

2—In transportation not one new job—net—has been added since 1929.

3—In the 10 years from 1950 to 1960 seven of eight new jobs added to the economy were outside the profit economy.

Job Growth, as economists and union leaders know better than anyone else, is in the "service" category. The fact that this area is large, that it may mean one job or several hundred, has caused many of labor's leaders to become irascible and unreasonable in seeking to protect their own declining membership and jobs. The New York newspaper strike was an example of this, and the lesson learned (if one was learned) is that blind intransigence does not protect jobs.

The 37- or 35-hour week cannot make jobs except temporarily. The new technology, designed to enable producers to compete with rising costs and world competitors, eliminate more jobs than a shortened work-week can provide. Indeed, the shorter work period, at the same wages, adds to costs and stimulates the search for technical means to reduce the increases so added.

More and more economists strongly are opposing the proposed tax decrease on the grounds that lowering taxes cannot possibly, as claimed, stimulate new investment in areas that will provide new net employment.

Space Expenditure and defense needs now engage at least half the nation's scientists and engineers in what is non-profit employment—they work at government contracts paid for by tax money. The nation's economy could survive a substantial decrease in defense spending but not without severe dislocations across a presently immeasurable period of time. A leading economist asked, as an example, how the profit sector could absorb a mere 1,500 or 2,000 scientists and engineers if they suddenly were released from space or missile projects.

We are seeing, too, an increasing feeling of alienation from their country's future on the part of some of the more extremist and depressed, or disadvantaged, groups. The young storm-trooper types who spat and cursed Adlai Stevenson in Dallas after a UN speech; the black-leather-jacketed young toughs who turn up at racial riots and in outright Nazi meetings, obviously have disassociated themselves from their country.

More than 30 per cent of our young men, called up in a universal military service act, are rejected because of educational, emotional or moral deficiencies. What becomes of the dismaying number of rejects and the dropouts who can't get jobs? How much share do they feel they have in the future of the country that can't use them?

Dr. Eli Ginzberg, one of the nation's foremost economists and chairman of the National Manpower Council, is deeply concerned about the lack of planning to use human resources. Our slums now overflow with persons whose educational and training lack make most of them unemployable. These are Negro and white. In the decades from 1870 to 1914 the American slums was merely a stopping place on the way to a job and a future. Today the slums fester with a frightening sort of permanence.

We stockpile metals, rare minerals, ores, and various other materials. What about human resources?

Dr. Ginzberg reminds us that the unemployed and the unemployable will be fed and housed either by wages or by relief funds out of taxes.

Can we do research and provide the new type of education and training to provide jobs and to help Americans linked with their country?

Musical Favorite

Johannes Brahms: Concerto No. 2 in B-Flat, for Pianoforte, Op. 83 RCA Victor LM 2466 (monaural), LSC stereo) Sviatoslav Richter, Erich Leinsdorf, Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

By JEFF BYRUM

Though it was received coolly at first, Brahms' second piano concerto is now considered one of his greatest works. Indeed, with the possible exceptions of the fourth symphony and the violin concerto, it is the favorite of most music lovers today. The concerto was sketched in 1878 after an early summer trip to Italy and completed three years later.

The French horn opens the first movement in a peaceful mood with a fragment of the main theme. First the orchestra, and then the piano pick up the theme and explore it thoroughly, displaying the piani in a springlike, lyrical mood. The second movement becomes at once more tense and violent. Although lacking all the flash and brilliance of the fourth movement, it is probably the most severe test of the pianist of the four movements. The third movement is complete peace and tranquility. The 'cello leads the development of the theme, the piano takes over, the 'cello returns, and the movement ends as they made into quiescence together. The light, gay, almost humorous fourth movement serves as the perfect ending for Brahms' masterpiece.

Sviatoslav Richter, one of the all-time greats, executes the entire concerto with faultless precision. It is as though he were a machine, yet surpassing a mere machine with the extremely expressive feeling he imparts through his instrument. He works beautifully with the orchestra throughout the first movement, maintaining an artful balance. He carries off the difficult second movement with seeming great ease. His expressive treatment of the third movement evokes visions of summer sunsets in Italy, which are said to have inspired Brahms to write the work. Richter plays the scherzo just as Brahms himself must have played it at the first performance. One can almost see the glint in his eye.

The technical aspects of the recording are excellent. The piano is never overpowered by the orchstra, nor does it seem too prominent. As befits the work, the piano has a large concert stage sound. The full range of both piano and orchestra come through well, and the stereo balance is quite adequate.

RCA Victor has produced the definitive recording of Brahm's second concerto. This exceptional piece of music and outstanding performance combine in an above average listening experience.

Fuzzy-Minded Liberals

We Conservatives sometimes accuse Liberals of being fuzzy-minded. To our own hurt we do not always explain what we mean.

Liberals always accuse Conservatives of being crazy. They never explain what they mean.

This is generally what we mean:

That Liberals pursue broad goals without much regard for direct consequence. (Does Social Security destroy the religious freedom of the Amish? Damn the Amish full speed ahead to Medicare!)

They profess to love democracy but when the people don't go along they resort to undemocratic methods like executive order and Supreme Court decree.

They refuse to admit obvious failures.

Foreign aid has accomplished few of its intended purposes. Send more, say the Liberals.

They grow irrationally frantic about right-wing extremism and ignore Communism. (Most of them say that the John Birch Society, a candy manufacturer with a million bonbons, is a greater menace than the Communist Party, a hardened band of fanatic revolutionaries backed up by the military power of a gigantic foreign state.)

Conservatives are blessed with the supernatural ability of William F. Buckley to take a prominent Liberal and with a combination of logic, common sense and the Liberal's own words, send him away looking like the gibbering idiot he often is.

However, for lack of a better champion, I now essay to joust with that great sacred cow of Carolina Liberal mythology, Dr. Frank P. Graham.

"Frank P. Graham—he's the most charming man you could ever meet. While he is speaking you are completely charmed," I once heard an apolitical instructor say, "Then after he gets through you realize he didn't say anything."

There is little doubt that Graham is a very charming gentleman. I heard him last summer speaking to the Governor's school for talented students in Winston-Salem. He had the audience in his vest pocket in a matter of minutes.

Those qualities may very well make him a great diplomatic negotiator. What I am intrigued by is his reputation as an all-wise seer.

His topic was how he, as a UN negotiator, helped bring "democracy" to Indonesia (meaning that he got the Dutch to evacuate so Sukarno could take over).

Graham is a passed master of the clever phrase which allows a questionable conjecture to slide into the unwary mind as an accepted fact.

"My American predecessors were more pro-Dutch than the Dutch," he says. Under rational examination this statement does not make sense. It doesn't have to. It's said in such a charming way that the listener is already sure that America was helping the wicked colonialists (shudder) until the all-wise Dr. Graham arrived on the scene to aid the cause of "democracy." Nowhere does he allow the slightest hint that it is even thinkable that the Indonesia which he helped create is not a democracy.

Yet the plain fact is that the Indonesia which has come into existence since Dr. Graham persuaded the Dutch to give up the civil war and leave the country to Sukarno is not a democracy.

Does democracy mean free elections and republican institutions? Sukarno has made himself dictator for life. The opposition is thrown in jail. The government stays in power by means of the army.

Does democracy mean self-determination for nationalists? The Indonesians refused to allow West New Guiena, whose people are culturally unrelated to them, to hold a plebiscite on whether they wished to be independent or ruled by Indonesia.

Does democracy mean alliance with the free nations against Communist imperialism? Indonesia votes the Communist line in the UN.

Graham, then, is a man who pursues broad and high-minded goals without regard to the direct consequences. He is unable to admit that his actions have failed of their goals.

He is a man who has not re-examined his basic convictions in 30 years to bring them into line with a changed reality.

That is what we mean by fuzzy-minded .

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

No Brickbats!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In the DTH of Saturday, 9 Nov., our eminent reporter of all that matters, Fred Seely, wrote a short piece that was brought to my attention many times. The item I refer to was an account of a DTH staff resolution abolishing the Di-Phi.

Although the item was an obvious attempt at humour, it nevertheless illustrated a basic lacking on this campus. Through a lack of informative publicity we have allowed students to gain an impression of the Di-Phi as an abolitionist society. We are subject to many jibes; we deserve many of them. The abolitionist jokes began last year when we called into question the benefits of an organized student government. Our criticism of the lack of communications between students and faculty is even more valid this year. But the first real, intense attacks on the societies began in the 19th century, when the societies no longer had the entire student body on their membership rolls. Much of this criticism came from the medical students and was directed against the amassed power of the societies.

When the societies began to establish organs to take over many projects extraneous to debating (athletics, student govt., dorm organization, newspaper, etc), the amassed power decreased and could no longer be the butt of criticism. A new line of attack had to be found. In the forties debating itself was attacked, but students today know too little of debating to express a well thought out opinion on the subject. In the fifties the lack of membership was the butt of attack, but today the membership is growing.

Now a new criticism has emerged, that of the issues debated. This is facet easily criticized, but not effectively so. for it is impossible that the societies should ever debate an issue which is paramount with every student. The next, for example, concerns flying saucers. Few would insist that this is the most important issue of today, but the bill's author, Mr. Wade Wellman, feels that the issue is debatable and that an evening can well be spent on it with some benefit. Sen. Pebley Barrow, who opposes Mr. Wellman's position, and myself also consider the issue worthwhile.

We are criticized for being abolitionist, perhaps some of us are, but not the whole Senate. I have visited the student legislature; not all the members of that organization have the preservation of student autonomy uppermost in their thoughts. I have read the DTH; not all of its staff workers are bad journalists. During the years I have been on this campus I have observed that all students are not pink. No group can be judged solely on the basis of part of its members or on the basis of one issue.

We are open to criticism; we always have been. We shall, however, outlast our critics by learning from them; we have for 168 years. This in itself destroys the idea that we are abolitionist. Observe the lack of structural change in the societies throughout their long history.

Much of the criticism seems to be founded on fear. We are nothing to be feared. It is true that we may be more devoted to intellectual pursuits than to social affairs. We may be more inclined toward discussion than action, but we look much like the rest of the human race. (Even our cute president.) If you want to know what we really do, or if you want to formulate a really valid criticism, come to a session. If you are nice and will not throw brickbats at the speakers, we promise not to abolish you at least during the meeting!.

Chicago Artist 'Painting Town'

Francis Chapin intends to own Chapel Hill when he leaves.

He intends to paint the town, but not all red.

In honor of this special occasion the Jane Haslem Gallery invites you to meet Francis Chapin at a reception in his honor today from 8 until 10 p.m. at the gallery. This special showing of Mr. Chapin's oils and watercolors will include scenes of Chapel Hill and surrounding area and a collection of his work done in Rome, Paris, Spain and various parts of the world.

This noted Chicago artist is fascinated by man's architecture and has rendered cityscapes and individual structures in many countries of the world. Francis Chapin was born in Bristol, Ohio, at the turn of the century. He received a Science Degree at Washington & Jefferson and studied art for six years are the Art Institute of Chicago He also studied under a traveling fellowship in Europe.

Until 1950 Mr. Chapin taught painting and lithography at the Art Institute of Chicago. Since that time he has been painting in Europe, Spain, Portugal, Italy, France and in the summers at Martha's Vineyard, Cape Cod. He was a artist in residence for two years at the University of Georgia. He will be resident artist at Stetson University this spring and also resident artist under the American Federation of Arts in 1964-65. He has also received a Ford Foundation Grant to various smaller museums.

Ready Speaks Up

By SUZY STERLING

There is a new type of higher education being proposed and oriented throughout North Carolina according to Dr I. C. Ready, Head of the Community College movement in this state.

"The community college will be neither a stretched-out high school nor a decapitated college," said Dr. Ready.

Speaking to the State Affairs Committee of Student Government yesterday afternoon, Dr. Ready outlined the four-way provisions of the proposed college system.

He noted that the program will be a vertical extension of high school in that it will go beyond the level of high school work, and a horizontal extension in that there will be a broader curriculum than in high school.

The first department of the two-year college program is the college parallel. This department is for the student who is not ready to enter a university but should go on beyond high school. Some of the advantages mentioned were "more individual attention, better chance to get adjusted, low tuition, and the opportunity to stay at home."

The second area is the Technician program, designed for the student who plans to transfer after two years in the fields of Math, Science, and Medicine.

For the student who must depend more on the skill of eye memory (in the fields of mechanics, practical nursing, etc.) rather than mental ability, there is the Trade Program.

And finally there is the area of General Adult and Community Training set up for adults who are "functionally illiterate, no education above 6th grade." This area will offer a broad program of learning to adults in an adult setting and at a rapid pace.

"Two such colleges are in existence now in Charlotte and Elizabeth City. Nineteen other communities throughout the state are in the process of voting on the predominantly state-supported institutions at this time," Dr. Ready said.

The proposed colleges will have an "open door admission policy in order to extend opportunity to anybody." He added, "It is hoped that by establishing these schools, the load on the larger colleges and universities will be relieved to some extent."

Kitty Visits Students

By PAT ROGERS

Dean of Women Katherine K. Carmichael is visiting the women's residence halls to speak with the new women students.

Her talks are being made to each of the women's dorms at 11 p.m. over a two-week period.

Addressing the new Alderman students attired in pajamas and curlers, Miss Carmichael urged them to come to her office any time a problem arose.

"That's what I am being paid for," she said. "I cannot read crystal balls or tea leaves, but perhaps I can help or channel an approach for solving the problem."

She said she didn't want to be thought of in an administrative capacity which is so far removed from the students.

She expressed confidence in the "above average" Carolina co-eds saying that she felt the criticism of the liberal regulations for women students was unwarranted.

"UNC screens its women students more thoroughly than any other state-supported school in the country," she added.

She emphasized to the girls the importance of establishing high standards "which will remain with you the rest of your life."

A student in Spencer Dorm described her talk as much less formal and 'peachy' than I expected."

Kay Childers of McIver said "I think it was very considerate of Miss Carmichael to come to speak with us since few have much contact with her office."

Miss Carmichael's visits are replacing the teas held at her apartment in the past for small groups of students. These teas were eliminated because of the additional work created by the increasing enrollment of women students.

FRESHMAN CLASS MEETS

A freshman class weekend and a freshman merchants sale week were discussed at the first meeting of the freshman class officers Monday.

The officers are inquiring about the possible entertainers for freshman social functions and are talking with merchants to set up the sale in an effort to make money.

The officers attending were President Jim Brame, Vice-President John Hedrick, Secretary Mary King, Treasurer Jim Hubbard and Social Chairman Maureen Shannon.

RADIO CLUB

The UNC Amateur Radio Club will make an all-out bid for the southern regional championship of the American Radio Relay League (ARRL) Sweepstakes during the next two weekends.

WHWE, located in Caldwell Annex, will try to make 1,000 contacts in 74 sections of the country to win the award.

Alexander Poobahs Win Championship

By AL KAPLAN

The Alexander Poobahs rallied from a first half TD deficit and scored two touchdowns to defeat the Aycock Aardvarks 20-12 in the Dorm Football Championship Wednesday.

Pacing the Poobah attack was Tom Wright, who was a standout on offense and defense. In the first half, Wright caught a TD pass from Alexander quarterback Jim Hardison for the Poobahs' only score in the first half.

In the second half, Wright intercepted a pass by Aycock QB Spencer Willard and passed to Charley Hanchey for the touchdown. Wright also scored a very important PAT following John Burton's TD.

Aycock scored first, early in the first half on a long punt return and pass to Aardvark Willard. The conversion failed.

The Poobahs came right back with a score of their own. During the series, the Poobahs had two touchdowns called back because of penalties. Alexander also failed to convert.

The Aardvarks took the lead again on an interception. Spencer Willard scored the TD and at the end of the first half, Aycock held a 12-6 advantage.

The Aardvarks were held in check all during the second half and yielded a TD on an interception, with Burton going over for the score. Wright converted.

In the semifinal game the Poobahs upset the undefeated Emerson Cardplayers 19-6 and earned the right to play Aycock for the dorm title.

The Cardplayers were completely overwhelmed by the strong Alexander attack, and fell behind 13-0 at halftime. Poobah TDs were scored by Burton and Felda Hightower.

Med School, paced on offense by the scoring of Howie Homesly and Joe McLamb shut out Law School II 13-0 to cop the Grad Tag Football Championships Wednesday.

The two teams battled to a scoreless tie through the first half. During the second half it was all Med School. The Docs allowed no serious Law School threat to materialize while they themselves scored two TDs.

By winning yesterday, Med School plays the Poobahs, dorm champs, in the All-Campus semi-finals today.

Phi Delt, Blue champs, and Phi Delt, White champs, clash in the other All-Campus game this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The Phi Delts, who defeated SAE for the title, are paced on offense by the high scoring duo of Erskine Duff and O. H. Parrish, sure members of the All-Campus Team. In the SAE game the combo came up with four touchdowns.

Also a great help is quarterback Charlie Jonas. Jonas has had great success in running the team and at passing.

Standouts on the Med School team are Joe McLamb and end Bill Jarman, who resembles R. C. "Alley Oop" Owens, with his jumping pass catching.

The winning teams in each division, except Frat White, receive 160 points. The point breakdown includes 50 participation points, 100 points for becoming champs and 10 place points.

Laszlo Birinyi

ERNIE WILLIAMSON is a big man, and it's only fitting that he has a big job recruiting athletes for Carolina's football forces.

Technically, his position is assistant coach and Executive Secretary of the Educational Foundation. It's a job which takes a lot of time and hard work.

I happened to come across Williamson when I was searching for some answers to an important question. It seems that one of my close friends was playing a lot of football for another southern team and I wondered why he wasn't on Carolina's roster, since he had wanted to come here.

After seeing Williamson, I found out why he's not at Carolina—he didn't have the grades, but even more important I gained a better understanding of the situation which faces the Education Foundation and Williams.

To begin with, every year the school receives hundreds of clippings, letters, calls and personal visits from prospective players or persons who wish to recommend outstanding prospects.

Do You Know A Prospect?

MANY OF THESE players are brought to the Foundation's attention by students, so if any of you know of an outstanding prospect in your area, feel free to drop into the office behind Woollen Gym and tell Mr. Williamson about him.

Each and every name is recorded and letters are sent out to the boys. These letters merely mention that someone has recommended the individual as a prospect, and, if interested, please return the enclosed card.

The card which is sent along with each letter gives the boy an opportunity to list his size, position, grades and the other pertinent information which is needed.

Out of the hundreds of letters sent every year, only half of the prospects return their cards. But this is enough to keep Williamson plenty busy.

The Foundation looks through the cards and immediately rejects many of the applicants. This is done because a football player cannot be offered a contract until he has been accepted by the admissions board.

'Boards' Are A Stumbling Block

OUT OF STATE students must have a minimum of 1100 in college board scores, while in-state applicants must score 800.

As a result, the Foundation has to eliminate many would-be players because of their "boards." I looked at some of the scores myself and was amazed at some of the totals.

Unfortunately, many of the out of state students don't stand a chance. The college board scale is set up so that a person receives 200 points for recording their name, or 400 total in math and English. Believe me, some of the students must have mis-spelled their names.

Some of these boys will end up at other schools and in many cases will play against Carolina. The athletic department then receives a great deal of criticism and questions asking why in the world Carolina missed him.

But "boards" and grades are not the only factor which hamper our recruiting system.

Another area of limitation is that UNC is restricted to 14 scholarship athletes in football per year from out of the ACC area. This means that UNC, along with the other ACC schools, can give only 14 scholarships every year to players outside of the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas.

In many cases the Foundation and Williamson will pass up a prospect because we already have several good players at a certain position.

Williamson said this was the case in a situaion involving an outstanding quarterback from Tennessee who applied last year. Since we already had Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver, the coaches felt that we should recruit freshmen at other positions from out of state—positions where we did not have depth and quality.

After these eliminations take place, the battle is on. The various coaches secure films of the players. After looking at them in action, they will entirely forget the boy or try to get him.

Selling UNC Over A Dinner

They will visit the prospect, take him out to dinner and talk to him about the virtues of Carolina. Of course, the competition is keen and fast and some schools will often play "dirty" and offer students more than the rules allow—more than room, board, tuition and $15 per month laundry.

If a boy does decide on UNC and is accepted by the Admissions Board, he is given a grant-in-aid contract.

Williamson explained that Carolina has one of the toughest recruiting set-ups in the ACC. First, for North Carolina boys, there is competition with 3 other ACC schools.

In the bidding for out-of-state students, Duke and Wake Forest have a decided edge, for they, unlike UNC and State, do not have the fifteen percent rule.

So the next time you see a newspaper headline charging that such-and-such a school has out-recruited Carolina or the "Big Four" bear in mind that a great many factors must be considered in recruiting and that often Carolina passes up outstanding prospects because of one or more of the aforementioned reasons.

Shiner, Wilkinson ACC Pacesetters

Maryland's Dick Shiner and Duke's Jay Wilkinson are the names at the top of the ACC's major individual statistical lists as the conference heads into the final two weeks of its season.

Shiner, the dandy Terp quarterback, paces the field in both total offense and passing, but is being pressed hard by Duke's soph sensation Scotty Glacken in both departments. In passing, Shiner has 970 yards on 87 for 180. Glacken has hit on 76 of 158 for 932 yards.

In total offense Shiner's lead is even slimmer. He has rolled up 1001 yards to Glacken's 980. N. C. State's Jim Rossi (969) and North Carolina's Junior Edge (946) are also in contention.

Wilkinson is being challenged by UNC's Ken Willard for the rushing crown. The fleet Blue Devil halfback has gained 498 yards in 92 carries while Willard has hauled 128 times for 471 yards.

Lacey's Honor Lauded By All

By JOEL BULKLEY and CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Reactions were sweet, short and sentimental yesterday as football players, coaches and University officials joined to congratulate end Bob Lacey.

The Daily Tar Heel revealed Thursday that Lacey had been named along with 21 other collegiate football stars to the 1963 Look Magazine All-America team. Official announcement of the honor is expected in early December.

Four varsity players sat around a makeshift table playing cards yesterday afternoon. They were discussing the controversial issue of whether or not a bid of four spades could be contracted by the team of tackle John Hill and guard Loren Wells. The opposing player—center Chris Hanburger and Lacey—claimed the bid couldn't possibly be made because the deck was stacked by Wells."

After the hand was over and the score tallied (they didn't make it) the topic of conversation switched to Carolina football and Lacey's All-America selection. The players offered comments ranging from "We're very, very proud of Bob" to a humorous reply that "Lacey deserved a full-page story."

Over in the corner quarterback Junior Edge replied that "indeed it was an honor to be on the team with Lacey. He's a great player."

A hand of hearts followed before the group split up to head off to the afternoon practice session.

Lacey returned to his room and relaxed on his bed, saying "I felt I haven't contributed that much to the team this year because we aren't throwing as much."

He added that he was very surprised Wednesday to hear (from Coach Hickey) that he had been chosen by Look.

"The thing is," Lacey said, "I wasn't supposed to tell anyone about it. I was advised not to mention it to the team and not to say anything to any reporters. It sure was a surprise to read it in the paper yesterday."

He indicated his teammates had showered him with congratulations.

Across the hall, halfback Dave Braine added, "It's not everyone who can say he's played with an All-American. It's great for the team to have one of its players honored in this matter."

Quarterback Gary Black noted that "Lacey is well-deserving of it because of his ability as a ballplayer and a leader. When we need a first down we look to Bob for the necessary yardage. We expect him to be out there for a pass and he is . . ."

Athletic Director Charles P. Erickson said "Lacey is a tremendous end and a great team player who has done an outstanding job for us for three years."

In the field house dressing room, the varsity coaches smiled and added their praise for UNC's first All-America selection in five years.

Head coach Jim Hickey said "I am really tickled that Lacey had been chosen. Bob is a great player and it's a real honor for all of us."

Vito Ragazzo, Lacey's football adviser, offered his views, saying, "The team is really thrilled about it because it is an honor for both Bob and the squad."

Another coach noted that he had been awakened early Thursday morning by some of the exuberant players who were shouting about Lacey's award.

Ragazzo added that "Bob is just as valuable to us as a decoy as a pass receiver. He's the best end around and perhaps one of the most unselfish. He's always congratulating the guy who catches the pass. He has what is called 'deceptive speed' . . . and has great ability as a runner as well as a receiver."

Youth Caught Slashing Pews

A 14-year-old Chapel Hill youth was apprehended early Thursday morning as he started to slash some pew cushions in the Chapel of the Cross, a Catholic church on E. Franklin St.

Spokesmen reported that the slashings had been going on for several nights both in the Chapel of the Cross and in the Morehead Planetarium. They said the youth used a six-inch knife to cut up the cushions.

A policeman was stationed outside the Chapel in an attempt to catch the offender. The boy appeared at the church around 5:40 a.m. Thursday, spokesmen said. The policeman apprehended him on the scene. The youth readily confessed to being involved in the previousl slashings, spokesmen said.

They said they could find no apparent motive behind the slashings. Because of the youth's age, the youth was remanded to his parents.

NAMED TO COMMITTEE

A national committee which will take a serious look at some of the social problems of health care in the U. S. is seeking membership among some of the top business and professional leaders.

Dr. Robert N. Wilson, professor of sociology in the Department of Epidemiology at the University of North Carolina School of Public Health, has accepted an invitation to join the committee, to be known as the Committee on Social Policy for Health Care.

STUDENT ZAPPED FOR $5

A student was given a Court Reprimand and fined five dollars in a Men's Residence Council Court trial this week.

The Court accepted the defendant's plea of guilty to charges of breaking a beer bottle in his residence hall and violating Quiet Hours.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

First In GOP Governor Race

RALEIGH (UPI) — State Rep. Donald Badgley paid his $250 filing fee today to seek the Republican nomination for governor.

Badgley, from Greensboro, was the first announced Republican in the race, said that he had campaigned in 60 of the 100 counties and had talked to more than 2,000 registered Republicans.

Second In GOP Governor Race?

CHARLOTTE (UPI)—A registered Democrat says here he might seek the Republican gubernatorial nomination.

John L. Stickley, a prominent Charlotte businessman and a former president of Lions International, announced Wednesday the seriousness of his consideration would depend on the reaction and advice from friends across the state.

4 More 'CIA Agents' Shot In Cuba

HAVANA (UPI) — The Castro regime Thursday executed four more Cubans charged with being "CIA agents."

The executions brought to 13 the number of Cubans put before firing squads in Havana's Cabana fortress in the past six days.

A "people's court" in Havana ordered the latest executions.

DeGaulle To Seek New Term

It is now all but official. French President Charles de Gaulle, who will turn 73 this Nov. 22, will seek another term as president to carry him at least through 1970.

The word comes from sources close to De Gaulle and is significant for two reasons.

—De Gaulle sees no one capable of succeeding him in the years which he regards as crucial for France and Europe.

—The North Atlantic Treaty, signed in 1949, expires in 1969 and must be renegotiated.

Negroes Must Cut Birth Rate?

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Negroes must seek a diminished birth rate for their civil rights gains to have lasting value, the chairman of the University of California sociology depar ment said Thursday.

Dr. Philip M. Hauser spo e to more than 1,000 delegates om family service agencies in he United States and Canada ga. ered here to discuss family lit. and community needs.

He suggested that while the Negroes' legal rights may be advanced, many will remain unequipped to take their place in a technologically advanced economy until Americans "have the courage to face up to the problems created by incontrolled fertility among both our white and Negro poor and uneducated groups."

East Germans Claim Traffic Rights

BERLIN (UPI) — Two East German Communist leaders Thursday claimed jurisdiction over all Western Allied traffic to Berlin and said they will not tolerate Western "provocations" in East Berlin and on the highway to the city.

The attacks on Western Allied traffic were made at a meeting of the East German Volkskammer parliament by Acting Premier Willi Stoph and East Berlin Mayor Friedrich Ebert.

A small U. S. Army convoy reached Berlin from West Germany without mishap while the parliament was in session.

U.S. Tells Russia To Loose Prof

MOSCOW (UPI) — The U. S. Embassy for the sixth time in 72 hours Thursday demanded the immediate release of Yale University Professor Frederick C. Barghoorn, held incommunicado by the Soviets on spy charges though defended by President Kennedy as an "innocent man."

Kennedy anounced in Washington he was postponing the start of scheduled U. S.-Soviet cultural exchange talks and said the United States is deeply concerned over what he called Russia's unwarranted and unjust action.

Travel Ban Effect On UNC Unclear

Consolidated University President William C. Friday said Wednesday that he was not sure how the Raleigh and Chapel Hill branches of UNC would be affected by the recent U.S. ban against Soviet officials traveling in certain N. C. counties.

Wake and Orange counties, in which the two branches are located, were listed among 27 counties in North Carolina declared out of bounds to Soviet diplomatic, consular and UN officials.

Guilford County, site of the Greensboro branch of UNC, is not included on the off-limits list.

Assistant Secretary of Defense Arthur Sylvester said the action was prompted by a "very serious" incident, occurring early this year when a foreign diplomat picked up unauthorized information about a U.S. military installation.

Other U.S. officials said no action was taken against the diplomat because he was entitled to be in a sensitive area under travel regulations in effect then.

There was no explanation as to how he obtained the information.

Friday said of the travel ban, "Personally, I do not know of its import for us but we shall await State Department instructions on it."

According to the State Department, the travel ban, a revision of existing restrictions, does not apply to all Russian citizens.

Ben Thirkfield, press officer at the State Department in Washington, said Wednesday that the embargo on Russian diplomats in Orange county was "nothing to be miffed at, and nothing to crow about either."

He said some of the nation's counties put on the restricted list were chosen for security reasons, some were added to the list "simply to bring our restricted areas into line with Russia's."

This would supposedly maintain a percentage of restricted territory equivalent to that in the five European Communist countries.

The State Department ruling came some four months after the so-called gag-law which also places restrictions on visitors who are "known Communists," prohibiting them from speaking on state-supported campuses. Certain pleaders of the Fifth Amendment also are barred from speaking.

Placard: 'College For Sale'

The campus of Wake Forest College was quiet and deserted for one hour yesterday morning as the student body, faculty and owners of nearby businesses mourned in silence the refusal of the State Baptist Convention to modify the qualifications for college trustees.

Students made no effort to disguise their feelings toward the convention for voting down the proposals, one to permit election of up to 16 non-Baptist or out-of-state people to the board; the other, up to 12.

A telegram from the student body was read to the convention by Charles Wineberry of Statesville, senior editor of the campus newspaper. In part, the telegram read:

"We will not attempt to conceal from you our sincere and heartfelt sorrow at the defeat yesterday of the amended proposal to broaden the composition of the board of trustees . . . We did honestly think it a reasonable way to broaden the base of the support for the college . . ."

Wednesday night a protest rally found some 1,500 students protesting the convention's action. Some carried a large sign which read: "Thou shalt not kill Wake Forest."

College Chaplain L. H. Hollingsworth told demonstrators, "We did not lose today. We simply did not win. I pledge to you that Wake Forest will not die."

Minutes after the news was broadcast from Wilmington Wednesday, a group of students assembled on the plaza and erected a sign that read, in bold letters: "College For Sale." But if the message of the sign was bantering, the reactions of Wake Forest students were serious.

Student Body President William Constangy of Atlanta, Ga., mourned the Convention's decision as he watched other students put up their signs.

"It is beyond my comprehension how the proposals could fail," he said, "and these people (the Convention) still say they are acting in the best interest of the college."

Larry James of Elkin, a law student, predicted that when the news of what happened was more generally known, students would react with more demonstrations.

Pep Rally

A gigantic pep rally, featuring a torch parade, the UNC Pep Band and a bevy of cheerleaders, is in store for campus tonight.

Newly-elected head cheerleader Tom Gruehn, a senior from Greensboro, announced yesterday that if the student body gets behind the rally, it should be the wildest show of enthusiasm this town has seen in many a year.

And the importance of giving the team a big boost now could not be more obvious.

The fiery parade will get under way at Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories at 8 o'clock. The cheerleaders will circulate around the campus between 7 and 8, distributing torch poles and fuel. Several cheerleaders will stay in each place to help students make the torches. Students are asked to supply old T-shirts, towels, etc.

From Craige and Ehringhaus, the parade will move to Parker, Teague and Avery, then down to Woollen Gym and up Raleigh St., past Winston, Conner, Alexander and Joyner dorms. A large delegation from the Upper and Lower quads will then join the march, which will continue up Raleigh Street, past the girls dorms to Franklin Street.

All traffic will be blocked off Franklin Street as the march moves up the street to the Carolina Theatre. At 9:10, the football team will emerge from the movies and the pep rally will go into full gear. Everything will end about 9:30.

Gruehn urges all to participate as many things hinge on this game. Students are asked to bring the noisest noisemakers they can get their hands on to the game Saturday. Tin lids, bugles, drums, whatever can be dug up.

A Man's A Man, Says Poet Mark Van Doren

By FRED SEELY

Mark Van Doren, Pulitzer Prize-winning poet, spoke on man and humility Wednesday night in the annual Weil Citizenship Lecture here.

Reading from his poetry and commenting on each selection, Van Doren emphasized the fact that ". . . . man must have humility, and he must realize that the world was not made just to be his plaything." Approximately 600 people attended the reading in Hill Hall.

"?All members of our species are very much alike," he said. "No man has ever been mistaken for something else.

"Man must realize that he is two things — himself and a member of the human race, and the resemblances between men are far more important that the differences.

"It isn't easy to be human — we are just animals plus, and in animals the soul and body are equal. No man knows more about the future than an ordinary housefly, and we all have to exist in order to show what man is."

The Weil lectures are endowed by the late Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro. Chancellor William B. Aycock, introducing the program, said, "The Weil Lectures have brought many great speakers to the university, including William Howard Taft, Eleanor Roosevelt, Sen. William Fulbright and Christian Herter. The Weil family has become a part of the history of the university."

Aycock lauded the Weil family's participation in the active administration of the university, citing the fact that three generations of the family had served on the Board of Trustees.

Van Doren, whose "Collected Poems" won international honors in 1939, read 10 poems, including "The Little Creature", "The Double Life", Humanity Unlimited" and "Undersong."

"The era of kings has passed —we are now ruling ourselves", he commented after reading "The Case in New". "If we are all to be kings, we must first be kings to ourselves, but we must remember that those of the highest aristocracy do not know they are aristocrats."

Born in Hope, Ill., the 69-year-old Van Doren was educated at the University of Illinois and Columbia University. As a faculty member at Columbia, he taught English for nearly 40 years. He is a former literary critic and movie critic of The Nation magizine.

His first volume of verse was published in 1924 and he ventured into the field of writing novels in 1935.

Dr. George Harper, chairman of the UNC faculty, introduced Van Doren, lauding him for being ". . . such a perfect speciman of a complete academic All-American and citing his "many volumes of profound and moving poetry."

Van Doren commented later that he was "so enthralled by that introduction that I could have gone on listening for hours."

Crew Cuts Out, Mops On Way

By JOHN GREENBACKER

Whether you will attribute the influence to William Buckley or JFK, long hair styles for men are on the upswing in Chapel Hill and other college towns around the country.

The marked decline in the popularity of the flat-top and the crew-cut was first noticed locally by GM barbers Pitman Culbreath and Aubrey Key, who brought it to the attention of the DTH.

They report that although short hair cuts were in demand by almost 90 per cent of their customers last year, this figure dropped to less than 25 per cent at the beginning of fall term. With the increase of the "Ivy League" and longer cuts around campus, suppliers of hair dressings have reported a great increase in business.

"Crew-cuts and flat-tops are not really going out, but they are taking their place among other styles selected to fit the individual needs," contends Y. Z. Cannon, a local barber and Public Relations Chairman for the Barbers of North Carolina. He feels that the popularity of short haircuts during the last 20 years is because of World War II. "Hair was cut short during the war for hygenic purposes, and this continued as the style after the war," he said. Customers are finding that "longer hair is more adaptable, more creative," he added.

Whether this change of style will last through the year or not is debatable, but it is an accepted fact among barbers that men of college age set the style for men of the 15-30 age group, and the change should become more pronounced.

Ulfelder Resigns SL Post

John C. Ulfelder (UP), minority floor leader of the Student Legislature, has resigned his legislative post.

His resignation will take effect at the end of the 35th assembly next week.

A new floor leader will be chosen after Thanksgiving by the UP legislators, according to Bob Spearman, speaker of the legislature.

In a formal note to Spearman, Ulfelder said he was resigning because of a lack of time for his legislative work.

"Because of the continued responsibility of other positions in Student Government, my fraternity, and most important, my studies, I do not think that I will be able to carry out my duties as a legislator to their fullest extent," the note said.

Ulfelder is in the middle of his second term as a legislator and has been floor leader since last April.

He is currently chairman of the Carolina Forum and is on the Toronto Exchange Committee.

He is studying for honors in history and is president of his fraternity, Pi Lambda Phi.

Federal Dollars Needed By Negro

By DAVID NORDAN

A Northwestern University sociologist has said that the racial problems in the South will never be solved until increased Federal aid to education brings better formal schooling to southern whites. A UNC professor of political science says its just not that simple.

Raymond W. Mack, chairman of the sociology dept. of Northwestern University, said in a social science periodical that neither civil rights legislation nor court decisions will be effective in reducing racial prejudice in the south as long as the educational system remains in its present low state. Dr. James W. Prothro of the UNC political science dept. agrees with this theory in the broad sense but contends that even if southern educational standards were greatly raised there would be no overnight enlightenment of southern racial attitudes.

Mack said that providing equal opportunities for Negroes would be expedited by moving at the same time to educate another minority, the Southern Whites.

According to a research study made by Prothro and Dr. Donald R. Matthews, also of the UNC Political Science dept., only 41% of white Southerners who graduate from college are strict integrationists. However, a large number of these graduates are thrown into the in-between (moderate) column, and these moderates tend to side more with the integrationists than with the strict segregationists.

According to statistics gathered from every county in the 11 southern states by Matthews and Prothro, as the level of white education goes up through high-school graduation, the number of Negroes registered to vote decreases proportionally. This phenomenon, according to Prothro, is due to white southerners becoming educated enough to form organized resistance to integration, but not educated enough to develop liberal ideas about it.

Prothro said that he does not disagree with Mack's views but feels that he is too optimistic in his faith in the power of formal education to cure all racial ills.

Prothro and Matthew's findings were compiled last fall in an essay entitled, Southern Racial Attitudes: Conflict, Awareness, and Political Change.

Time For A Second Look At Principles

The one right that fraternities cherish most is the freedom to choose their own members.

Indeed this is the right of any private social organization, and restrictions upon this freedom are rightfully assumed to be against God, mother and the Constitution. It's a freedom which is basic to the American way of life, the freedom to associate with whom we please.

Americans reserve the right to think as they please. They reserve the right to be bigoted. From the stubborn New England Yankee to the proud Southern gentleman to the rugged frontiersmen, America's history has been and hopefully will continue to be one of individualism.

If fraternities are attempting to uphold this tradition, then more power to them.

However, fraternities and sororities are in a particular environment, that being dependent on the University. They are subservient not only to civil law, but also administrative and student government rules. Their membership is dependent on the student body here.

Therefore, can fraternities ligitimately claim the exclusive rights which accrue to the bulk of private social organizations?

Americans reserve the right to think as they please, but why, we wonder, do they allow the somewhat nebulous national organization to dictate restrictions on this basic right of free choice?

We are speaking, completely aside from the morality of discrimination itself, of the discriminatory clauses against races and religious groups that are written into the national constitution of nearly half the fraternities on this campus. Why should there be a rule written by people who have nothing to do with an individual chapter except in name which tells that chapter whom it can take in? Why should other chapters have a say in the membership of a chapter thousands of miles away as they do under "socially acceptable" clauses?

Besides these clauses there are the so-called gentleman's aggreements that national fraternities hold over their local chapters. These have the same effect as written "white Christian" or "socially acceptable" clauses.

Different chapters of a national fraternity have little in common in their standards of membership. A chapter on one campus may be highly respected for its athletes, scholars and leaders. On another campus the chapter of the same fraternity may be on social probation and on the road to bankruptcy. What common bond is there between these chapters and their members?

The answer most often given is that all members of a national fraternity have undergone the same initiation, the same secret ceremonies. Yet not even this is valid. For although the ceremonies may be similar, the attitudes and methods under which they are administered differ widely. And many of the ceremonies of one national fraternity are very similar to the ceremonies of others.

Thus the basic sort of person who makes a DKE or a Sigma Chi on one campus is not even close to the basic type at chapters somewhere else. Even on the same campus, membership standards will change drastically over the years.

We don't anticipate that many chapters on this campus, with their blackball system, will consider admitting Negroes in the near future. But we see no reason why they should try to limit or why they should want the responsibility of limiting membership in other chapters related in name only.

There are plenty of non-Christians considered for membership on this campus and some have become members of houses that had a Christian clause. Certainly this religious clause is outmoded and superfluous.

Fraternities, if they really believe in freedom of associations, in free choice of membership, should not need the national clauses to protect their membership. And it is completely inconsistent to want to protect the membership of other chapters.

The time has come to take a second look at the consistency of our basic principles.

Help Stamp Out Academic Drag

Academic Drag is the name we give to this time of year, when the semester is well along and those promises we made to ourselves in the fall about studying more and partying less have almost all been broken.

Academic Drag is a disease of the Large Intention, and the only good thing about it is that it is not necessarily fatal. If caught in time, it can be cured. If allowed to continue unhindered, however, no degree of intellectual or moral medicine can prevent it from causing its owner many headaches and lost oppportunities.

The symptoms of this insidious sickness are manifold. They include increasing absences from classes; failure to complete assignments on time; lack of desire to do more than make a C; excessive rationalization about how there's always tomorrow and studying can wait one more day . . . even though days have already become weeks, and weeks threaten to become months, and still the subject matter lies unplumbed and uncomprehended.

". . . Carolina can — and unhappily often does short-change the students," wrote John Justice in an enduring introduction to last year's Yackety Yack yearbook.

"But," he added, "one-sided wrongs are rare in this world of complex compromises and adjustment, and we students have failed the University. Most of us realize at isolated moments that we could have drawn more from this place's inexhaustible resources than we have done.

"The number of books we have not read dwarfs those that we have scanned, but it is not merely the unread volumes which bespeak our negligence; rather, it is the casual way with which we have rejected the new, the unknown, the challenge, and have held fast to the familiar.

"We were either fearful of, or we yawned at, the challenges that were daily laid before us . . ."

Come now, be honest. Do those words amount to a verbal mirror?

If so, take heart. Academic Drag can be cured. All it takes is an increased dosage of Effort applied directly to the books. And remember — Effort leaves no unpleasant after-effects, as excessive Partying certainly will if not the morning after, then in the years to come.

"Just A Few More, To Make Sure You Don't Get Carried Away"

Robinson's Ramblings

Disarmament And Industry

(Ed.'s Note: An occasional column by Mike Robinson, UNC Journalism School graduate now working for a national business publication in New York.)

By MIKE ROBINSON

The often maligned "eggheads" in the Pentagon are engaged in a concert effort to try to prevent industrial chaos in the face of creeping disarmament. And, oddly enough, these much-scorned intellectuals are doing a job that industry itself so far has pretty much ignored.

The problem is a real one. The cold war thaw, the prospect of leveling or even declining defense spending, shifts in military spending are causing significant changes in the impact of the defense dollar. More and more, the Administration and Congress are turning their worried attention to who will get hurt, and what can be done to ease the impact.

What they are trying to do is prevent another Wichita, Kan. (A few years ago, aircraft production was virtually shut down throwing 25% of Wichita's working population out of jobs.)

Right now, the Defense Dept.'s Office of Economic Adjustment is working with local leaders from Roswell, N. M., to avoid a similar situation. Half of Roswell's economy is tied to Walker Air Force Base. Federal and local officials, in an effort to diversify Roswell's economy, are (1) trying to attract ceramic industries to take advantage of the local clay deposits, (2) seeking to get refineries to move in instead of shipping crude oil elsewhere, and (3) planning to develop the sugar beet industry.

In addition, Defense Secretary Robert McNamara has named special assistant Adam Yarmolinsky to head a committee that will try to work out an early warning system for industry. This group, of course, will be restricted by secrecy and unpredictable defense planning.

The Yarmolinsky committee is just beginning to feeil its way. But advanced thinking is that it will have to avoid any formalized system, relying instead on consultations with industries and communities to point out anticipated problems.

For the moment, Pentagon groups are concentrating on industries that do a high percentage of defense business: aircraft 94%, shipbuilding 60%, electronics 38%. These are particulary vulnerable to declines or shifts in military procurement plans.

Last week, a Senate subcommittee on manpower and employment began checking such questions as where the defense dollar is going in terms of money and geography, where it will be going two or five years hence, how much less manpower and material it will use, who will suffer, and what can be done to minimize hardship.

(This type of investigation has volatile political overtones due to the great importance a congressman places on getting government contracts for his area. In a recent column, Scotty Reston pointed out that many men in the House depend on large campaign contributions from companies in their districts that need government contracts.)

Very little preparation for defense spending cutbacks is going on in private industry. A spokesman for the Electronic Industries Assn. says very few companies are doing any planning on their own. As he puts it: Private industry is "just not facing the music."

A Westinghouse vice president notes that "a lot more thought is being given to this in intellectual circles in Washington. . . . By next spring a lot of companies will be devoting more attention to planning the convention because of the attention being focused on it in Washington."

The upcoming shift government spending will be certain to have many ramifications for all industries including those who are not now engaged in any defense work at all:

—Companies raking in "nice profits" in a particular product area are sure to find new competition from defense contractors trying to diversify.

—Defense firms, once known for large college recruitment programs, are very likely to want to hold on their trained and tried employees, rather than going out and finding new ones. And a corollary to this will a new interest among college graduates for secure government jobs.

—With a shifting of work forces and plant sites, unions will probably lose their hold in some areas. And increasing general unemployment—not related to defense plants—will add to a reduction in labor bargaining power.

—New emphasis will be placed on research and development efforts to create new consumer products that must replace defense hardware for some companies.

—More government spending on space projects, instead of defense, is likely to concentrate the number of firms doing business with the government. Reason: Space hardware is many times more sophisticated than what most of the armed forces require. And these sophisticated items more often than not stem form large and elaborate facilities than can only be found in affluent and "suave" outfits.

—Getting or not getting a defense contract is often the difference for many firms of "going under" or "staying afloat." Thus a cutback will accelerate the trend to mergers and liquidations.

Security

By BILL McALLISTER

(Editors note: Security, to Charlie Brown and company, may have one meaning. But to the Carolina Gentleman and the flippant UNC coed, security is a many-sided thing. The author wrote last year's Carolina's Coloring Book.")

Security is:

—no eight o'clock classes.

—a ten-point grading scale.

—a 2.0001 average.

—an old but current quiz file.

—not having any required library reading.

—walking past a stadium cop with a Thermos bottle.

—enough Bourbon to last through the second half.

—a 14 point lead over state in the third quarter.

—a two-man room.

—Dr. Harland's Archaeology course.

—Finley Golf Couse at 10:15 p.m.

—a girdle.

—no morning sickness.

—a Deke pin.

—a church-key in the glove compartment.

—a door on the John.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Victims!

Editors, The Tar Heel,

We, the above captioned victims, would like to know if the University "workers" who scrub down Woollen Gym every night, beginning sometime around 6:00 p.m., charge the University extra for spraying water into the lockers, thereby saturating the contents, and even any immediate by-stander who is not agile enough to avoid the "hoser's" vindictive aim. If this extra-curricular effort of the above mentioned "workers" is not a necessary requirement or prerequisite for University employment, then we respectfully submit that it would be in order for their immediate "superior" to impress upon them the fact that this "above-and-beyond-the-call-of duty" they are performing is not really or essentially in the best interest of the University Laundry who is burdened with a heavy work load by virtue of the subject activity; nor is this activity of the "hose squad" in the best interest of the University Infirmary since it precipitates colds, and the like, even though the Infirmary Staff needs all the extra sickness they can muster up to train the new interns.

But, we, the unfortunate victims of subject heroic and sacrificing efforts of the Woollen Gym Hose Squad feel that our own personal claim for relief is too insignificant to warrant such extreme disciplinary action when considered alone, especially when one realizes that we, the students of the University, are only the meagre "ENDS" of the functions performed by the most benevolent University Administrative Departments aforementioned. Thus for the sake of the burden placed upon these most glorious "MEANS" functionaries of the University, we, the hose victims, bring this prayer for injunctive relief.

Justice?

Editors, The Tar Heel,

A student was arrested shortly after the Georgia game on a charge of disorderly conduct. It seems that he was crossing a street in Carrboro at an intersection opposite a grocery store from which he had come. He started across in the cross-walk walking with the light. When he was partially across the street, the light changed to caution, and he looked to the right to check traffic and saw a police car going about 30 mph in his direction. This particular student is somewhat idealistic in believing that pedestrians have the right-of-way over vehicles, and expected the patrol car to slow enough to enable him to cross. But the driver of the police car was in fact anticipating the change to green and had no intention of slowing. He crossed the intersection just as the light changed to green, missing the student by a matter of inches. Although this student is aware of the fact that all policement are always shining examples of safety and courtesy, he could not see any such virtues at that time. In fact, he was rather shocked and uttered, or moreover shouted, a condemnation at the officer, whom he considered too far away to hear. But the officer heard the blasphemy and promptly arrested the lad, who was rather bewildered to find himself on the defensive when it occurred to him that he should be on the offensive.

He attended the renowned "kangaroo court" of Chapel Hill recently, pleaded and was found guilty, and was charged over $15. The $15 is not of much lasting consequence (although the student claims that he cannot eat a meal for a week), but the fact remains that he now has a record for an arrest (and conviction). Henceforth, when this student applies to a graduate school or for a job, he must admit that he was arrested and convicted. Needless to say, it will certainly be detrimental to his career—it is a mar, a mote in his eye. Of course he can do nothing except feel sorry for himself and vent his profane emotions on his friends; it is a sad situation. The mighty arm of the law and the "justice" behind it have struck another blow for law and order.

More Censorship Could Be Coming

From The Raleigh Times

"Political tampering with the educational process can, over a relatively brief period, drastically lower the quality of the higher education affected. Legislative censorship, once begun, carries an invidious threat of future proscriptions, and inevitably stirs fear in the minds of both of both faculty and students that expression of unpopular sentiments may produce reprisals against them . . .

"If an author is dangerous as a speaker, he is more dangerous as an author, for his printed words are more permanently available. Is there not danger that the General Assembly, once embarked on this course, will ban books from libraries and otherwise undertake to police the ideas to which a student may be exposed? Indeed, a ban which operates only against speakers on the campus is so clearly inadequate as a device for insulating the student mind (assumed by the banners to ve naively susceptible that, rationally, it must be either abandoned or extended."

Those quotations are from the statement unanimously adopted by the Faculty Council of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill recently, and presented to the UNC Trustees. Those are measured words, spoken calmly but in great determination, and from an academic background of freedom which is rooted deep in North Carolina's tradition. The Faculty Council was talking about the speech-ban law adopted so hastily and so unwisely by the 1963 legislature.

Unfortunately, everything the Council said in the two paragraphs quoted here must be accepted as the gospel truth. Political tampering can in short order lower the quality of higher education. And, once censorship is begun, there is the very threat of future censorship. Censorship is sort of like taking dope. Once you start it, you have to keep taking larger and larger doses. And, there is no doubt but that threats of legislative censorship would lead professors and students to fear reprisals if they voiced unpopular sentiments.

There are politicians in this state who would be willing to hand out muzzles at Chapel Hill. Not many years ago, for example, a leading supporter of a candidate for Governor promised that his candidate would see to it that no more Negro poets spoke at Chapel Hill.

There is danger, too, that those who are for gagging speech also would want to get rid of books they consider dangerous. That would mean banning books from the libraries of our state-supported campuses. Don't think this is far fetched. It isn't. The book burners come close behind the enemies of freedom of speech and usually the book burners are the same poeple who like to gag speakers.

It is wonderful that the Trustees of the Consolidated University have moved against the speech-gag law. Some of the finest and most patriotic and most sensible people of North Carolina are Trustees of the University. The fact that they oppose the speech-gag law speaks volumes.

Chances are that the speech-ban law will become an issue in the next gubernatorial primary. If that is the case, those who speak out against it will be called by some communists, and by some others as being soft on communism. Such name calling will be false, and those who hear those charges with even average common sense will recognize their falsity.

Those patriotic citizens who oppose this evil speech-ban law must speak out their opposition, even though they know that they will be unjustly smeared for doing so. This law can be repealed by the 1965 legislature, and the more who speak out against it, the easier its repeal will be.

Men's Council Gives Minataurs Probation

One Minataur was acquitted and 18 were put on definite probation of one full academic semester in trials by the Men's Council Thursday night.

All 19 were charged with:

1) Abusive language in Y-Court the morning of the Georgia game.

2) Ungentlemanly conduct during the game.

All 19 were acquitted of the second charge because of insufficient evidence.

On the first charge, only 18 were found guilty. One of the boys was not present when the Y-Court incident occurred.

The boys were treated as individuals in the deliberation of the case, according to Chairman Whitney Durand. The Council was not trying the Minataurs as a group.

The 18 involved in the Y-Court incident were considered guilty of a very serious violation of the Campus Code, Durand said.

The action itself was serious apart from the attention it drew, he said.

The defendants called attention to the fact that their actions have been carried on annually without reprimand from Student Government or Administration officials.

Many felt that Student Government had clamped down on them without sufficent warning.

The Council felt, however, that this did not absolve the Minataurs of their actions.

In two other cases before the Council, two students were put on definite probation for lying offenses.

A senior pleaded guilty to lying when charged with writing a false sign-out slip for his date.

The couple drove with another couple to Virginia Beach in the middle of the week after signing out for Durham.

The girls were reported missing from their residence that night and called in later from Virginia Beach.

The two girls were suspended for one full academic semster by the Women's Council in a separate trial Wednesday night.

They had been charged with falsifying their sign-out slips, driving in an automobile after closing hours without special permission and drinking to the extent that their judgment was impaired.

The other boy, a graduate student, was not charged.

In the last Men's Council trial, a sophomore was placed on probation for the rest of this semester after being found guilty of lying to a police officer while drunk.

The student turned himself in without prompting from the police officer or anyone else.

The Council considered this an extenuating circumstance and gave the probation sentence instead of suspension.

A PARKING PROBLEM in Chapel Hill, well not exactly, only a five-car accident. Police said an estimated $12000 damage was done yesterday afternoon when a car driven by Mary Moon, 41, of Route 1, Snow Camp apparently swerved out of control on E. Franklin St. and struck a parked car starting a chain reaction. Her car struck a parked car owned by Joe Dorsett of Chapel Hill, striking one owned by Lavan Tyson Betty, hitting another owned by Herman M. Parker of Charlottesville, Va., colliding with another owned by Harold Lancaster of Goldsboro. Moon was released from Memorial Hospital after being treated for abrasions on the head which required about 10 stitches. Police said no charges had been brought against Moon.

Dook Parade Clean-Up Committee Ready To Go

By JIM NEAL

Preparations for student review of the "Beat Dook Parade" have been completed, it was announced this week.

Student Body President Mike Lawler said a review procedure, brought on by state-wide protests which followed last year's parade, has been set up by Tom Harris, chairman of the sponsoring PiKA fraternity's parade committee.

Review of the floats by a student committee before the parade begins is designed to head off "some aspects" of previous parades which have "reflected adversely" on the University, Lawler said.

Last year's parade drew heavy criticism from across the state. The University administration received phone calls and letters complaining that some floats in the parade went beyond the bounds of good taste.

When students returned from Thanksgiving vacation last year, the administration announced that this year's floats would be subject to review by a faculty committee.

The student review procedure set up for this year would remove the need for faculty superhoped.

The floats for the parade will be reviewed twice, according to Harris — once Friday morning and again just before the parade begins. Any floats the committee considers objectionable will be asked to leave the parade.

If an objectionable float does parade after having been asked whether dormitory fraternity or sorority, will face "judicial action by the proper council," Lawler said.

Harris said in a note to Lawler on the reviewing procedure that letters would be sent to the president of each living unit warning, "Ungentlemanly - like actions by individuals would be campus code offenses and dealt with by the Honor Council."

The reviewing committee will consist of Charles Battle, of the IFC; Jerry Good, MRC; Peggy Anne Harris, Pan-Hellenic Council; the president of a girl's dormitory, to be chosen; and Harris.

Celeste Holm Comes Tues.

Celeste Holm, Academy Award winner, will appear in the musical, "With Love and Laughter," Tuesday night at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The program, sponsored by GM, is free to UNC students. Spouse tickets are one dollar each and the general public will be admitted for $1.50 at 7:45 p.m. if space is available.

In the musical Miss Holm will pursue the answer to "Has the relationship between men and women changed," It will contain writings of Saroyan, Shaw, Shakespeare, O'Neill, Laurents, Tennessee Williams and Rodgers and Hammerstein.

CELESTE HOLM

She will appear in scenes containing song and comment relevant to the question with Wesley Addy.

Miss Holm has appeared in such films as "Tender Trap," "All About Eve." and "High Society." She appeared in the stage production "Invitation to a March" last season.

Coppers Chase Paper Pullers

Campus Safety Officer Arthur J Beaumont said yesterday his office is investigating recent reports of newspaper thefts from campus racks. He warned that persons guilty of such thefts are subject to Honor Council and criminal court proceedings.

Beaumont said the investigation was prompted by reports from area newspaper distributors that newspapers have been disappearing from racks in Lenoir Hall, Ehringhaus and several other campus residence halls.

Distributors said that the loss of several papers a day from several locations rapidly mounts to losses of a hundred dollars a month or more.

Phipps Confirms One But Nixes The Other

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

L. J. Phipps, state commander of the N. C. Dept. of the American Legion yesterday confirmed one quotation attributed to him but disavowed another.

Phipps confirmed reports of a speech in Lillington Thursday in which he reportedly said that UNC officials are not enforcing the so-called gag-law.

However, Phipps disavowed as "incorrect" a report in yesterday's Raleigh News and Observer quoting him as saying that retired Army Colonel Henry Royall was the real "father" of the controversial law.

"I did not make that statement," Phipps said.

"I stated that Colonel Royall of Chapel Hill Post No. 6 of the American Legion, was the author of the resolution passed on June 22, 1963, by the State Convention of the American Legion requesting an investigation by the State Legislature of certain activities on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, particularly the New Left Club and the Progressive Labor Club.'

It is my understanding that Secretary of State Thad Eure has since stated that he wrote the law, Phipps said. "I would not want to take any credit away from him."

To substantiate his charge that UNC officials are not enforcing the gag-law, Phipps cited the appearance of Larry Phelps, a spring graduate of UNC, who spoke in Everett dormitory Oct. 30 as the basis for his allegation.

Phelps was among 59 Americans who went to Cuba during the summer. He later appeared before a House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) where he took the Fifth Amendment four times. Phelps took the Fifth in answer to questions concerning his association with Jacob Rosen and John Salter.

Thus whether Phelps is covered under the Fifth Amendment section depends on a legal decision as to whether Phelps' refusal to answer any HUAC questions about his associations is the same thing as "refusing to answer any question, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities," which the law specifies.

Phipps thinks the law covers Phelps.

"By permitting Larry Phelps to speak after they (University officials) had been advised that he would speak, was a violation of this particular act," Phipps said.

"This talk by Phelps went beyond an informal bull session," Phipps charged especially since it was advertised on the same afternoon that Phelps spoke.

Phelps spoke along with John Salter, who also made the summer Cuban visit.

Phipps charged that the two spoke with the approval of the University administration, which held that Phelps' visit was of an informal nature.

UNC chancellor William Aycock has repeatedly said that the University is enforcing the law, but he adds the law is so full of ambiguities that it is hard to interpret.

Sophs Plan Info Booklet

Sophomore class officers are planning a booklet of information on major courses of study for junior and senior years.

The booklet will be designed to give an insight into the various fields available and what careers they might lead to, according to class president Larry Ehrhart.

"Freshmen and sophomores will be able to use the booklet to plan their majors in terms of what work will be expected of them and what qualifications are required," Ehrhart said.

"It will also emphasize the necessity of planning a major."

The booklet is not intended to be an evaluation of the courses in a major, but an attempt to find the purpose behind these courses, Ehrhart said.

"By presenting an outline of the various majors, it is hoped that the students will follow through on their own to seek answers to any personal questions from department instructors.

"Hopefully the students will choose a major in which they are interested and which is suitable for them.

"This would cut down on the changing of majors because of lack of pre-knowledge."

Members of the sophomore class will conduct interviews from a questionnaire of faculty members and students who have done well in the various departments.

A report will be drawn up and published around February, Ehrhart said.

"We will need full support and cooperation from the faculty as well as the sophomores in these interviews."

FOOTBALL DANCE

The Mens' Residence Council is sponsoring its last football dance of the year today from 8 to 12:30 p.m. at the American Legion Hut, next to Eastgate Shopping Center.

Admission will be free to students and friends and refreshments will be available.

The Continentals combo will provide the music and a large turn-out is expected, according to MRC Vice-President Gordon Appell.

Hickey Is Hopeful After Tiger Loss

By JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

Once again we are on the spot. We know we have a good football team. We've known that all year. Yet, after last week's loss to Clemson, we are in the position where we have to come back today against Miami in order to convince a lot of people.

You know, after losing to Clemson, I was worried. I worried all Saturday night and all Sunday. I wondered just how the team would do in these last two games. I saw how hard the boys took that loss, and I wondered whether or not they'd be able to snap out of it and play football like they're capable of playing it.

I'm not worried any more. When we held practice Monday, team spirit was as high as it's been since I've been here. We had two of the best practice sessions we've ever had this week, and I know we are ready, in more ways than one, for the game today.

I'd have to say that we are in great physical condition for Miami. Of course we lost second-team center Glenn Ogburn in the Clemson game, but his replacement, Ed Stringer, will do a good job. Everyone else is ready to go, with the exception of those we have lost for the season—Hank Barden and Jimmy Eason.

Miami is bringing a real good football team up here. You can't say enough about a guy like George Mira. He is impossible to catch in his own backfield. He doesn't run the ball much, but he can always wiggle and get the pass off. He'll throw any kind of pass at any time. He'll throw on first-and-ten or third-and-two. He'll throw long ones, short ones, up the middle, at the sidelines, screen passes and what have you. He has no favorite pass—he just throws everything.

So far his favorite receiver has been his flanker back, Nick Spinelli. We expect he might throw some (especially on the screen) to his halfback, Russell Smith, who'll be in action for the first time since he was injured in their game with Purdue. Also, there are the ends—John Weisacosky and Hoyt Sparks.

Smith may be their best running back, though fullback Pete Banaszak has come around real well in recent games. I would compare their ground game to that of Georgia. But, Mira will rely on it even less than Rakestraw did. They'll pass almost three times as much as they'll

Discriminatory Practices Committee Formed In SL

A special committee to investigate discriminatory practices involving the use of student funds was set up by Bob Spearman, vice-president of the student body, in Thursday night's session of Student Legislature.

The committee, composed of Neal Jackson, Judy Freider, Linda Simpson and Mal King, will investigate possible discriminatory practices in any field where student activities funds may be involved.

"The committee will take testimony from anyone on the matter," said Spearman. "Before Student Legislature considers its budget for next year, we must be sure that no student funds, which are paid by every student, are used to finance banquets or parties in establishments which will not serve every student." He added that he would release a full statement next week.

SL passed four bills and saw four more introduced.

The University Abroad Committee received a $550 appropriation to finance the transportation and living expenses of a University representative to finalize arrangements for a junior years abroad. Pete Range, chairman of the committee, said that further details would be released later.

In other action the body voted $20 to the Co-op Committee for expenses, passed a resolution commending the Playmakers for the Student Night performance and urging the student body to support the program and passed a bill making it illegal for a member of the Men's or Women's Council to act as defense counsel.

Bills introduced included an appropriation of $2,460 for additional Yackety-Yacks, an appropriation of $150 for the Carolina Quarterly to improve circulation, a bill to release all graduate students, except medical, dental and law, from compulsory purchase of yearbooks and a bill to establish a revolving television fund, which would allow for the replacement of all dorm TV sets within four years.

Football Horrorscope

Katherine Carmichael, the Kitty that keeps the cats away, could not get out of it this week. Though she tried hard enough, the Dean of Women could not escape the clutches of the Horrorscope which always gets its man, er Woman, er Kitty.

Carmichael

First she wanted Director of Admission Charlie Bernard to do it; then she wanted Mrs. Hickey to do it. (Who?). Then she started talking, and talking, and talking and . . . But Kitty finally came around after (1) going to a concert the night before and thinking of ways to get out of the "poll;" (2) Crying "unfair" about the whole thing and comparing it to her asking the Horrorscope about Far Eastern affairs (But we know all about Christine Keeler, Kitty); and (3) saying she'd fall flat on her face with something like this but she'd try it anyway.

By the looks of her picks, Kitty isn't going to fall as flat as Kemp did last week (9-11), but the Apartment Rule was never like this as she went at it with some help on a few of the selections.

Kitty was sure of the first three games, but the Georgia-Auburn game was a guess and the West Virginia-VPI one might as well have been.

"I hear from the men folk around here that Notre Dame isn't as strong as it used to be," she said as she marked the Irish off quickly.

She also said Oklahoma and Ohio State usually have good football teams an dthat she'd stick with the Big Ten on the Indiana-Oregon contest.

As for Texas, "They're usually pretty good, too," she said. We'll go along with that.

Horrorscope had, percentage-wise, one of their finest weeks last time. As a group, the five regulars and Kemp came out 83-37 for .692 as four men tied for the top with 15-5.

The record for eight weeks now totals 589-309 with 42 ties. That percentage is .655. Curry Kirkpatrick retained his two-up margin on Al Kaplan for the top spot, and is now at 107-41-7. Kaplan (105-43-7) and Ron Logan (103-45-7) are also over the 100-win mark while Friedman is on down at 99-49-7 and John Montague is at 97-53-7.

The guest total is now at 78-70-7 with only four of the eight having hit over half the games—Journalism Dean Luxon, Chief Beaumont, Billy Cunningham and Spero Dorton.

Booters End Season Against Duke Today

By RON LOGAN

North Carolina's soccer team winds up its season this afternoon at three on Fetzer Field. The opponent — the slightly tarnished Iron Dukes of Duke University.

The Big Blue of Carolina has fought its way to an impressive 5-3-1 mark against a tough schedule, and the invaders from Duke sport a 3-6 log against an equally rough slate of opponents.

This battle will be more than a matter of pride and the satisfaction of whipping a bitter rival — it will decide the final standngs of the ACC.

UNC stands to gain a second place tie with Virginia if the Tar Heels pull out a victory today, but, if the Heels lose, last place will swallow them up. Duke is in much the same plight. A win means sole poession of third and a loss means the cellar.

The Tar Heels have been plagued by injuries for the past two weeks, and two players, goalie Buddy Siegel and linside right Drew Murphy, are finished for the season. Now an added name to the list is Siegel's replacement Tom Roberts.

"Roberts has a bruised eye and might not be able to play for us Friday," said Coach Marvin Allen. "In case he isn't ready to start, Jim Green will take over at goalie.

"Jim played behind Siegel last year and did a good job for us, but he has been bothered by a knee injury most of the season," he continued. "We're sure he can do a good job against Duke."

The Duke squad is coached by Jim Bly and it has been sparked by the play of tri-captains Davie Jones, Jim Boericke and Alex Epanchin. Right wing Colt Hough has also been a sparkplug in the Blue Devil attack.

The two teams have played five common opponents and, in each instance, UNC has had the most impressive performance. Duke has beaten N.C. State and lost to Virginia and Maryland in league play. The Heels tripped State, tied Virginia, and came SO close to the Terps before losing.

Seniors George Blem, Bill Haywood, Steve Painter, Pete Blake, Charlie Battle, Frank Lankford are starters who will be playing their final game for Carolina, and they are bound and determined to make this finale a successful one.

Sports Courier

OUT OF THE Florida eys he came, to capture the hearts of football fans and publicity men everywhere.

His middle name is Ignacio.
His nickname is "The Matador."
His hometown is Key West, Fla.
His major is Education.
His age is 21.
His height is six feet.
His weight is 180 pounds.
His position is quarterback.
His letters earned at Miami are two.
He throws right-handed.
His mother's name is Dolores.
His father's name is James.
His brothers are Joe and James.
His sisters are Sylvia and Rose.
His home address is 1011 Packer Street, Key West, Fla.
His high school coach was Harold Allen.
His high school honors were MVP of team; little All-State; All-Gold Coast Conference; team captain.
His hobbies are water skiing, hunting, golf.
He is the greatest thing since sex.

George Mira is treated well by Miami Sports Publicists George Gallet and Wilbert Bach, so it was not surprising to find a 14-page booklet on the amazing Senor on a desk in the DTH office even before school started.

In it, Gallet and Bach have listed everything about Mira except his social security number, and if you believe it all, the guy's got to be able to walk on water—with boots on—and cleanse the blind as well.

Miami's "Conch" And The Records

BEFORE THE CURRENT season began, Mira held virtually all records at Miami except most water-ski classes cut. Last year he was named to seven All-America teams, was the runner-up for the national passing championshiup, was the outstanding amateur athlete in the state of Florida and finished fifth in the voting for the Heisman Trophy.

In a private poll of 22 head scouts of the American and National football leagues, 13 selected him as the college quarterback they would draft No. 1 among those playing this year. He has made every magazine cover except Playboy and Time, and the only reason he was left off the latter is that Roger Staubach plays with a winner, Mira plays with less.

This has all come about because of some mathematicians' errors which say in his first two years Mira completed 227 passes for 2,893 yards and 20 touchdowns.

This year he has, if anything, enhanced the reputation. The 1963 record shows 93 of 176 through the air for a .528 percentage, 1,076 yards and two TDs. They are statistics that place him fourth in the country in passing and 15th in total offense—behind many glamorous quarterbacks. But, without exception, Mira is probably the most exciting of them all.

Besides "El Matador"—the sportswriters' term—there have been many other names attached to the incomparable star.

A "Conch" is a tropical shell fish prevalent in the Key West area, and this is what the natives call their brethren. George Mira is the Chief Conch.

A "Didapper" is defined in the dictionary as "a dapchick or other small grebe." If it never applied to Mira before, it does now, for that's the term UNC scout Emmett Cheek used in a press conference earlier this week.

Whatever they call him and however much they do it, PR men Gallet and Bach will keep on letting you know about it. Further on in their manuscript from Miami, the two list a page under "Unusual Feats Accomplish By Mira."

This includes:

"Threw left-handed pass for winning touchdown against Florida in 1961." (The Hurricanes and Gators were deadlocked 6-6 in the third period with Miami on the opponent's seven-yard line. Mira, going down on a tackle, shifted the ball into his left hand and tossed the game-winner to Nick Spinelli).

"Caught his own forward pass against TCU in 1962." (Mira's pass was batted by a tall TCU player, but the Miami QB grabbed the rebound and made a four-yard gain.He was credited y the NCAA with a pass reception.

"Threw a side arm pass when tacklel by three men in Pittsburgh game of 1962."

"His side arm pass produced the winning touchdown against Kentucky in 1961." (He was badly injured in the pening half of the game and was unable to throw normally overhand in the final half.)

The Guy's Publicity Floors You

THE GLOWING PUBLICATION goes on to say "Mira is of Spanish ancestry . . . has licorice-black eyebrows and eyes, his darkness contrasting handsomely with even white teeth." Sounds like a spider monkey.

"He has the thick-yet-supple shoulders and narrow waist of a bull-fighter. His hands are immense. He throws a pass which in its low, flat trajectory almost resembles a tank shell that will surely enter the receiver's belly and come out the other side." Or be dropped.

"The light-footed Mira treats onrushing linemen as the famous Spanish matadors side-step and dance away from wild bulls." ZOWEE!

"Immaculately polite and high-humored off the field, Mira shows no symptoms of conceit." Amazing when you read in a national magazine that Mira once told Bill Miller (the professional AFL's finest pass receiver) to shut up in the huddle or he'd run him off the field.

No one complains about Mira's brashness and ego, however, because you can't blame a guy too much for it when his own coach tells him before he even plays a varsity game that "You can throw the ball whenever you like. I don't care if you're on the goal line. And don't worry about a thing, George, because you're the greatest."

Andy Gustafson was the speaker, and he is said to have stayed on one more year as coach at Miami just so he could get a good enough seat to watch Mira.

Gustafson has since become a little more reserved about his quarterback and now calls him "the greatest single contribution to a football team I've witnessed in all my years in the sport."

Due to one of those real gems of scheduling, Staubach of Navy and Mira will be appearing within 10 miles of each other at the same time on the same day this Saturday. That means four All-Americans (and what's this about the pillar not knowing that a Duke halfback hs been named by Look Magazine). And I'd suggest you bring a TV set to the Miami game.

Post-Season Game Ban Is Slammed

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (UPI) — The President of the sponsoring Lions club said Wednesday that the television ban slapped on the annual Blue-Gray football game because Negro players are barred "is tragic injustice to those in whose name the action is taken."

Proceeds from the 26-year-old bowl classic between college all-stars from the North and South go to the local Lions' blind and needy children program "without regard to race, color or creed," Harris Dawson said.

The National Broadcasting Co. (NBC) notified Blue-Gray officials last week the game would not be televised this year because Negro players do not participate. It has been televised nationally since 1954.

In a prepared statement, Dawson said this year 59.2 per cent of persons receiving aid under the Lions program were Negroes.

Phi Delt Blues Win

By AL KAPLAN

It'll be the Blues of Phi Delt and the Alexander Poobahs in the All-Campus Finals next week.

Phi Delt had little trouble with their junior team, the Whites, in beating them 22-0. The Poobahs edged out Med School 7-2, in the other semi-final game.

Phi Delt star Erskine Duff was just too much for the Whites. Duff scored two touchdowns and a safety in pacing the Blues attack. Also scoring for Phi Delt was Bud Winstead, with a TD, while Joe Winstead added two conversions.

The Alexander Poobahs scored the only TD of the game, on the second play from scrimmage and added a PAT in their 7-2 win.

After a fine kickoff by Jim Hardison, Med School was inside their own 10 yard line, Felda Hightower intercepted a pass and literally walked in for the score. Tom Wright scored the PAT.

During the first half neither team moved the ball with any great success, but Med School kept Alexander deep in their own territory.

Twice during the first half Med School had serious drives going. A- tight Poobah defense stopone surge on an intercepted pass, and the other drive was stopped when Med School was forced to punt.

Men's Council Gives Minataurs Probation

One Minataur was acquitted and 18 were put on definite probation of one full academic semester in trials by the Men's Council Thursday night.

All 19 were charged with:

1) Abusive language in Y-Court the morning of the Georgia game.

2) Ungentlemanly conduct during the game.

All 19 were acquitted of the second charge because of insufficient evidence.

On the first charge, only 18 were found guilty. One of the boys was not present when the Y-Court incident occurred.

The boys were treated as individuals in the deliberation of the case, according to Chairman Whitney Durand. The Council was not trying the Minataurs as a group.

The 18 involved in the Y-Court incident were considered guilty of a very serious violation of the Campus Code, Durand said.

The action itself was serious apart from the attention it drew, he said.

The defendants called attention to the fact that their actions have been carried on annually without reprimand from Student Government or Administration officials.

Many felt that Student Government had clamped down on them without sufficent warning.

The Council felt, however, that this did not absolve the Minataurs of their actions.

In two other cases before the Council, two students were put on definite probation for lying offenses.

A senior pleaded guilty to lying when charged with writing a false sign-out slip for his date.

The couple drove with another couple to Virginia Beach in the middle of the week after signing out for Durham.

The girls were reported missing from their residence that night and called in later from Virginia Beach.

The two girls were suspended for one full academic semster by the Women's Council in a separate trial Wednesday night.

They had been charged with falsifying their sign-out slips, driving in an automobile after closing hours without special permission and drinking to the extent that their judgment was impaired.

The other boy, a graduate student, was not charged.

In the last Men's Council trial, a sophomore was placed on probation for the rest of this semester after being found guilty of lying to a police officer while drunk.

The student turned himself in without prompting from the police officer or anyone else.

The Council considered this an extenuating circumstance and gave the probation sentence instead of suspension.

A PARKING PROBLEM in Chapel Hill, well not exactly, only a five-car accident. Police said an estimated $12000 damage was done yesterday afternoon when a car driven by Mary Moon, 41, of Route 1, Snow Camp apparently swerved out of control on E. Franklin St. and struck a parked car starting a chain reaction. Her car struck a parked car owned by Joe Dorsett of Chapel Hill, striking one owned by Lavan Tyson Betty, hitting another owned by Herman M. Parker of Charlottesville, Va., colliding with another owned by Harold Lancaster of Goldsboro. Moon was released from Memorial Hospital after being treated for abrasions on the head which required about 10 stitches. Police said no charges had been brought against Moon.

Coppers Chase Paper Pullers

Campus Safety Officer Arthur J Beaumont said yesterday his office is investigating recent reports of newspaper thefts from campus racks. He warned that persons guilty of such thefts are subject to Honor Council and criminal court proceedings.

Beaumont said the investigation was prompted by reports from area newspaper distributors that newspapers have been disappearing from racks in Lenoir Hall, Ehringhaus and several other campus residence halls.

Distributors said that the loss of several papers a day from several locations rapidly mounts to losses of a hundred dollars a month or more.

Dook Parade Clean-Up Committee Ready To Go

By JIM NEAL

Preparations for student review of the "Beat Dook Parade" have been completed, it was announced this week.

Student Body President Mike Lawler said a review procedure, brought on by state-wide protests which followed last year's parade, has been set up by Tom Harris, chairman of the sponsoring PiKA fraternity's parade committee.

Review of the floats by a student committee before the parade begins is designed to head off "some aspects" of previous parades which have "reflected adversely" on the University, Lawler said.

Last year's parade drew heavy criticism from across the state. The University administration received phone calls and letters complaining that some floats in the parade went beyond the bounds of good taste.

When students returned from Thanksgiving vacation last year, the administration announced that this year's floats would be subject to review by a faculty committee.

The student review procedure set up for this year would remove the need for faculty superhoped.

The floats for the parade will be reviewed twice, according to Harris — once Friday morning and again just before the parade begins. Any floats the committee considers objectionable will be asked to leave the parade.

If an objectionable float does parade after having been asked whether dormitory fraternity or sorority, will face "judicial action by the proper council," Lawler said.

Harris said in a note to Lawler on the reviewing procedure that letters would be sent to the president of each living unit warning, "Ungentlemanly - like actions by individuals would be campus code offenses and dealt with by the Honor Council."

The reviewing committee will consist of Charles Battle, of the IFC; Jerry Good, MRC; Peggy Anne Harris, Pan-Hellenic Council; the president of a girl's dormitory, to be chosen; and Harris.

Celeste Holm Comes Tues.

Celeste Holm, Academy Award winner, will appear in the musical, "With Love and Laughter," Tuesday night at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The program, sponsored by GM, is free to UNC students. Spouse tickets are one dollar each and the general public will be admitted for $1.50 at 7:45 p.m. if space is available.

In the musical Miss Holm will pursue the answer to "Has the relationship between men and women changed," It will contain writings of Saroyan, Shaw, Shakespeare, O'Neill, Laurents, Tennessee Williams and Rodgers and Hammerstein.

CELESTE HOLM

She will appear in scenes containing song and comment relevant to the question with Wesley Addy.

Miss Holm has appeared in such films as "Tender Trap," "All About Eve." and "High Society." She appeared in the stage production "Invitation to a March" last season.

Phipps Confirms One But Nixes The Other

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

L. J. Phipps, state commander of the N. C. Dept. of the American Legion yesterday confirmed one quotation attributed to him but disavowed another.

Phipps confirmed reports of a speech in Lillington Thursday in which he reportedly said that UNC officials are not enforcing the so-called gag-law.

However, Phipps disavowed as "incorrect" a report in yesterday's Raleigh News and Observer quoting him as saying that retired Army Colonel Henry Royall was the real "father" of the controversial law.

"I did not make that statement," Phipps said.

"I stated that Colonel Royall of Chapel Hill Post No. 6 of the American Legion, was the author of the resolution passed on June 22, 1963, by the State Convention of the American Legion requesting an investigation by the State Legislature of certain activities on the campus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, particularly the New Left Club and the Progressive Labor Club.'

It is my understanding that Secretary of State Thad Eure has since stated that he wrote the law, Phipps said. "I would not want to take any credit away from him."

To substantiate his charge that UNC officials are not enforcing the gag-law, Phipps cited the appearance of Larry Phelps, a spring graduate of UNC, who spoke in Everett dormitory Oct. 30 as the basis for his allegation.

Phelps was among 59 Americans who went to Cuba during the summer. He later appeared before a House Committee on Un-American Activities (HUAC) where he took the Fifth Amendment four times. Phelps took the Fifth in answer to questions concerning his association with Jacob Rosen and John Salter.

Thus whether Phelps is covered under the Fifth Amendment section depends on a legal decision as to whether Phelps' refusal to answer any HUAC questions about his associations is the same thing as "refusing to answer any question, with respect to communist or subversive connections, or activities," which the law specifies.

Phipps thinks the law covers Phelps.

"By permitting Larry Phelps to speak after they (University officials) had been advised that he would speak, was a violation of this particular act," Phipps said.

"This talk by Phelps went beyond an informal bull session," Phipps charged especially since it was advertised on the same afternoon that Phelps spoke.

Phelps spoke along with John Salter, who also made the summer Cuban visit.

Phipps charged that the two spoke with the approval of the University administration, which held that Phelps' visit was of an informal nature.

UNC chancellor William Aycock has repeatedly said that the University is enforcing the law, but he adds the law is so full of ambiguities that it is hard to interpret.

Sophs Plan Info Booklet

Sophomore class officers are planning a booklet of information on major courses of study for junior and senior years.

The booklet will be designed to give an insight into the various fields available and what careers they might lead to, according to class president Larry Ehrhart.

"Freshmen and sophomores will be able to use the booklet to plan their majors in terms of what work will be expected of them and what qualifications are required," Ehrhart said.

"It will also emphasize the necessity of planning a major."

The booklet is not intended to be an evaluation of the courses in a major, but an attempt to find the purpose behind these courses, Ehrhart said.

"By presenting an outline of the various majors, it is hoped that the students will follow through on their own to seek answers to any personal questions from department instructors.

"Hopefully the students will choose a major in which they are interested and which is suitable for them.

"This would cut down on the changing of majors because of lack of pre-knowledge."

Members of the sophomore class will conduct interviews from a questionnaire of faculty members and students who have done well in the various departments.

A report will be drawn up and published around February, Ehrhart said.

"We will need full support and cooperation from the faculty as well as the sophomores in these interviews."

FOOTBALL DANCE

The Mens' Residence Council is sponsoring its last football dance of the year today from 8 to 12:30 p.m. at the American Legion Hut, next to Eastgate Shopping Center.

Admission will be free to students and friends and refreshments will be available.

The Continentals combo will provide the music and a large turn-out is expected, according to MRC Vice-President Gordon Appell.

Hickey Is Hopeful After Tiger Loss

By JIM HICKEY
UNC Head Coach

Once again we are on the spot. We know we have a good football team. We've known that all year. Yet, after last week's loss to Clemson, we are in the position where we have to come back today against Miami in order to convince a lot of people.

You know, after losing to Clemson, I was worried. I worried all Saturday night and all Sunday. I wondered just how the team would do in these last two games. I saw how hard the boys took that loss, and I wondered whether or not they'd be able to snap out of it and play football like they're capable of playing it.

I'm not worried any more. When we held practice Monday, team spirit was as high as it's been since I've been here. We had two of the best practice sessions we've ever had this week, and I know we are ready, in more ways than one, for the game today.

I'd have to say that we are in great physical condition for Miami. Of course we lost second-team center Glenn Ogburn in the Clemson game, but his replacement, Ed Stringer, will do a good job. Everyone else is ready to go, with the exception of those we have lost for the season—Hank Barden and Jimmy Eason.

Miami is bringing a real good football team up here. You can't say enough about a guy like George Mira. He is impossible to catch in his own backfield. He doesn't run the ball much, but he can always wiggle and get the pass off. He'll throw any kind of pass at any time. He'll throw on first-and-ten or third-and-two. He'll throw long ones, short ones, up the middle, at the sidelines, screen passes and what have you. He has no favorite pass—he just throws everything.

So far his favorite receiver has been his flanker back, Nick Spinelli. We expect he might throw some (especially on the screen) to his halfback, Russell Smith, who'll be in action for the first time since he was injured in their game with Purdue. Also, there are the ends—John Weisacosky and Hoyt Sparks.

Smith may be their best running back, though fullback Pete Banaszak has come around real well in recent games. I would compare their ground game to that of Georgia. But, Mira will rely on it even less than Rakestraw did. They'll pass almost three times as much as they'll

Discriminatory Practices Committee Formed In SL

A special committee to investigate discriminatory practices involving the use of student funds was set up by Bob Spearman, vice-president of the student body, in Thursday night's session of Student Legislature.

The committee, composed of Neal Jackson, Judy Freider, Linda Simpson and Mal King, will investigate possible discriminatory practices in any field where student activities funds may be involved.

"The committee will take testimony from anyone on the matter," said Spearman. "Before Student Legislature considers its budget for next year, we must be sure that no student funds, which are paid by every student, are used to finance banquets or parties in establishments which will not serve every student." He added that he would release a full statement next week.

SL passed four bills and saw four more introduced.

The University Abroad Committee received a $550 appropriation to finance the transportation and living expenses of a University representative to finalize arrangements for a junior years abroad. Pete Range, chairman of the committee, said that further details would be released later.

In other action the body voted $20 to the Co-op Committee for expenses, passed a resolution commending the Playmakers for the Student Night performance and urging the student body to support the program and passed a bill making it illegal for a member of the Men's or Women's Council to act as defense counsel.

Bills introduced included an appropriation of $2,460 for additional Yackety-Yacks, an appropriation of $150 for the Carolina Quarterly to improve circulation, a bill to release all graduate students, except medical, dental and law, from compulsory purchase of yearbooks and a bill to establish a revolving television fund, which would allow for the replacement of all dorm TV sets within four years.

Football Horrorscope

Carmichael

First she wanted Director of Admission Charlie Bernard to do it; then she wanted Mrs. Hickey to do it. (Who?). Then she started talking, and talking, and talking and . . . But Kitty finally came around after (1) going to a concert the night before and thinking of ways to get out of the "poll;" (2) Crying "unfair" about the whole thing and comparing it to her asking the Horrorscope about Far Eastern affairs (But we know all about Christine Keeler, Kitty); and (3) saying she'd fall flat on her face with something like this but she'd try it anyway.

By the looks of her picks, Kitty isn't going to fall as flat as Kemp did last week (9-11), but the Apartment Rule was never like this as she went at it with some help on a few of the selections.

Kitty was sure of the first three games, but the Georgia-Auburn game was a guess and the West Virginia-VPI one might as well have been.

"I hear from the men folk around here that Notre Dame isn't as strong as it used to be," she said as she marked the Irish off quickly.

She also said Oklahoma and Ohio State usually have good football teams an dthat she'd stick with the Big Ten on the Indiana-Oregon contest.

As for Texas, "They're usually pretty good, too," she said. We'll go along with that.

Horrorscope had, percentage-wise, one of their finest weeks last time. As a group, the five regulars and Kemp came out 83-37 for .692 as four men tied for the top with 15-5.

The record for eight weeks now totals 589-309 with 42 ties. That percentage is .655. Curry Kirkpatrick retained his two-up margin on Al Kaplan for the top spot, and is now at 107-41-7. Kaplan (105-43-7) and Ron Logan (103-45-7) are also over the 100-win mark while Friedman is on down at 99-49-7 and John Montague is at 97-53-7.

The guest total is now at 78-70-7 with only four of the eight having hit over half the games—Journalism Dean Luxon, Chief Beaumont, Billy Cunningham and Spero Dorton.

Expulsion? There's A Better Answer

Whitney Durand and Carolyn Pinion, Chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils, have asked the Student Legislature to approve a bill which would give the councils the power to expel a student. Currently, the most stringent sentence the councils can mete out is indefinite suspension with the recommendation that the student never be readmitted to the University.

The bill is being held in the Judicial Committee of the Legislature until next Thursday's session when both Durand and Miss Pinion will appear in its defense.

We are basically opposed to the bill for several reasons.

The two chairmen have given several reasons for the requested penalty, but none seem to justify the harsh finality that explusion carries with it. They say they need the penalty to adequately deal with the great variety of situations that crop up, and that expulsion would aid in the process of self-correction. They also say that suspension with the recommendation of never readmitting the student is unfair to the student since it gives him a glimmer of hope of getting re-instated while his chances remain very slim.

Maybe this is all true, but we have many doubts. On a basic philosophic level we somehow feel that in many, many cases, morality is often related to, but not dependent upon, one's sense of purpose in life and sense of immediacy about about that purpose. This sounds like a rather cynical view of morality, but it is often difficult for a young, directionless person to apply the presently accepted moral standards to himself and recognize what importance they may ultimately have.

We would agree with the idea that there are violations of the Honor Code which seem to indicate explusion as the only possible penalty which fits the crime. But it should also be remembered that even criminals sentenced to prison for the most heinous crimes by civil courts are able to win parole after 25 or 30 years if they have demonstrated that they can be of use or service to the community. Isn't it also possible for a 19-year-old boy to commit a grave violation of the codes, join the Army for four years where he will receive a fair amout of discipline, possibly hit on what he wants to do in the future, and experience some feeling of immediacy about his purpose in life?

Obviously this often is the case, and this person usually becomes a useful member of the university community upon his return.

Are the Honor Councils ready to submit that they are able to distinguish between those who will never develop a personal morality compatible with what is generally accepted, and those who will be able to? Surely no one is that presumptuous.

What seems to be lacking here is not a stringent and irrevocable penalty, but a variety of penalties to meet the various contingencies. There is a great gap between probation and suspension. What is needed is a set of meaningful penalties which can be applied separately or together to meet the varying shades of guilt. These could range anywhere from revocation of the athletic pass, suspension of automobile privileges for a specified time, to the disheartening and bothersome penalty that all class cuts must be justified to each teacher by a note from the student's advisor or dean. Any one of these could be given out alone, or any one or all could be added to the probation penalty.

The list of possibilities is almost endless, and it should only take a little time and imagination to come up with a good comprehensive set which are easily enforceable.

The major purpose of penalties under the Honor System, after all, is correction and rehabilitation, not punishment.

Shades Of Charley Brown — This Is Even Better Than A Blanket!

In this age of uncertainty it is indeed refreshing to run up against something absolute now and then. Yesterday was one of those occasions. It was a release from Motor Vehicle Research, a Lee, N.H., organization which describes itself as "a non-profit organization in the interest of automotive safety and research."

"The problem of preventing unauthorized use and theft of automobiles," the release began, "is now solved."

How about that? No qualifications, no hedging nothing. The problem "is now solved," period.

Intrigued, we read on.

"There is now developed and ready for market a relatively simple but theft-proof device that prevents thieves from stealing cars. . . ."

A recent test of the system in New Hampshire "revealed that qualified mechanics were unable to drive the car even after 30 minutes of work. The same mechanics were able to start the motor of a modern vehicle without the ignition key and drive off in 16 seconds.

"The device incorporates 3 separate cross operating electrical circuits and solenoid valves in the brake and fuel systems. Without the key for the ignition lock, any tampering with the ignition wires locks the brakes. Should the brakes be released, the fuel supply is cut-off. Should the fuel supply system be then adjusted to allow to flow, the brakes will again lock and the ignition is grounded.

"All in all, a car thief would be faced with a never-ending problem which would end in frustration."

Or, we would hasten to add, still overjoyed at this burst of certainty, a mental breakdown.

The Freedom To Speak

(From The Raleigh Times)

The real danger of the speech-gag law was made clear in an interview by Senator Adam Whitley of Smithfield. In that speech, Senator Whitley served notice that he, as a legislator, might be willing to deprive education officials of their right to freedom of speech if education officials continue to criticize the legislature for passing the speech-gag law.

Senator Whitley, according to the United Press International, said that continued criticism of the law by UNC officials could result in the election of only those trustees and University officials "willing to carry out legislative policy."

Actually, University officials have carried out legislative policy on all matters, including the speech-gag law. University officials have been very careful to say that they will obey this law, that they will enforce it to the best of their ability. At the same time, they have excerised their very clear right and duty to oppose the law on grounds that they feel it is harmful to the University. University officials, though Senator Whitley singled them out for attack, haven't been alone in their opposition to this law. The heads of other State institutions of higher education have opposed it. So have the heads of virtually all private institutions of higher learning in North Carolina. So have the Young Democratic Clubs of North Carolina. So has the State Board of Higher Education.

If North Carolina ever reaches the point where the officials of its University are afraid to speak as their consciences tell them to speak, North Carolina should close its University, level the buildings, and sow the land with salt. A University dominated by fear, run by frightened men, censored by legislators is worse than no University at all.

When the speech-gag law was sped through the 1963 legislature without any hearings, without giving any opponent any chance to be heard, this newspaper pointed out that this could well be the first step in censorship of the University. The next stop could well be a legislature telling University professors and administrators what they could say and what they couldn't say.

The United Press International story on Senator Whitley's speech stated:

"I'm sick of hearing University officials praise the Legislature on one side of their mouth for giving them they money they asked for and out of the other side of their mouth, criticize us for passing a law approved by the great majority of the people."

"Senator Whitley said UNC officials continued to talk about academic freedom 'but I haven't heard a single one of them say a word about the responsibilities that go with academic freedom.'

"The Senator said he had heard much praise of the law and that 'not one single person in my district has ever told me that he's against it.'

"Taking note of a speech last weekend by North Carolina Chancellor William Aycock criticizing the law, Whitley said the Chancellor's remarks were 'just big talk.'

"'The Legislature has the authority to direct how state institutions are to be run and we need no assistance from Mr. Aycock or other University officials,' Whitley said."

The legislature does indeed have the authority to direct how state institutions shall be run. No one has questioned that. But, the legislature does need the assistance of Chancellor Aycock, of other University officials, of University trustees in how best to direct state institutions. If University officials and University trustees don't speak out on matters affecting the University, they are not doing their jobs, and they are not serving the people, the University or the legislature.

A man who would sit quietly because of fear when his conscience tells him he should speak out is not a man fit to be connected with a university, especially not a University such as ours, which has such a heritage of freedom and service to all the people.

It has been entirely proper for the officials of our University to speak out against the speech-gag law. They should continue to speak out against it, and against all other things which harm our University.

We cannot ever afford to have a University run in fear by frightened men.

Book Review

Noble Undertaking

By B. KEATING

Contrasts in Modern Writers by William W. Seward, Jr., Frederick Fell Inc., $5.00.

Contrasts in Modern Writers is a collection of book reviews and radio discussions by William W. Seward, Jr. It is a noble undertaking including criticism of James Joyce, Henry Miller, William Faulkner, Ernest Hemingway, Mary McCarthy and others. Mr. Seward is head of the Department of English, Old Dominion College at Norfolk, Virginia.

The reviews that are published in this compilation of "some aspects of recent British and American fiction" appeared originally in the Norfolk Virginian Pilot. One can only say they must be better out of context. Taken as a cross-section of modern literature in review, the book falls miserably short. Mr. Seward writes in a style that one usually reserves for the advertising blurbs that are printed on the dust jacket. There are no original ideas presented in dealing with established writers and Mr. Seward's treatment of some of the more recent novelists leaves much to be desired for anyone seriously reading the book.

Walker Perry, author of The Moviegoer and former student of the University of North Carolina, is described as "honest and unsentimental. His narrative presentation, however, is clumsy, unsure, and ultimately ambiguous." This combined with what Mr. Seward calls a "faulty ear for dialogue" is the extent of any criticism of style in the entire review. The majority is given over to plot summary.

Mary McCarthy is brushed aside as being tedious and uninteresting, thereby becoming a woman of remarkably small scope. Possibly Miss McCarthy has gotten off to the "fence with her typewriter" and still has not produced a "literary phenobarbital" in her latest novel The Group as Mr. Seward says she did earlier in A Charmed Life.

William Seward says that he would rather write than do anything else except teach, and nothing can make him so happy as the knowledge that he has done both well. Good luck to his students.

Currently by Fred Seely

The other evening I was sitting at my desk in the DTH office writing a story, and one of the recently-elected class officers dropped by. We talked for several minutes about the campaign, the elections and the year ahead and then out of the blue, he asked, "Fred, what's the Gag Law you people are always talking about?"

Needless to say, I was dumbfounded. I patiently explained the bill which passed the General Assembly this summer, he asked a few more questions about it and left.

And I sat there thinking. Where in the world did we fail? The DTH has attempted to give this issue every bit of space it has deserved. It has been the lead story at least 40 per cent of the time, and we covered the speeches of its supporters as well as its opponents. The editors and most columnists have attacked it editorially, but news coverage has remained fair and objective.

And a student government figure didn't know the first thing about it. And there is the reason why the law will, in all probability, never be repealed.

The people of this state are strongly anti-Communist. Good. But they are uninformed as to state issues which do not directly affect them. They are all for education, even though it means more taxation. They are all for industry, even though it means that some will receive special favors. They are all for fighting communism, too, but this can be done without much effort on their part—they just vote for the right man, the man who calls "a spade a spade", i.e., every leftist a pinko.

The Gag Law controversy is more than just a liberal-conservative argument. It affects you and I as surely as any University decree, and you and I are the people who must lead the fight against it.

The anticipated rush for seats at the Julie London show never happened. As you may remember, there was a lot of grumbling in these pages after the Homecoming a month ago when several girls fainted when the race to get in the doors ended in a 200 man tie. Apparently the sponsors (Graham Memorial) decided to open the doors two hours earlier this time around.

In any case, I propose several possible solutions to this happening in the future. The first is that couples could enter through a separate door—perhaps the side door on the east side. This would alleviate the rush as well as save the young ladies, who, as we all know are scarce enough now.

Another idea would be to have tickets printed for the performance and charge a normal fee, say 10 cents, for the cost of distribution. These tickets could be picked up at the GM Information Desk or a special desk, upon presentation of an ID cent card and the dime would cover the expense of printing as well as paying the person at the desk. And anyone who wouldn't pay 10 cents to see Julie London wouldn't go to see her anyway.

John Ulleider, chairman of the Carolina Forum, has been getting more criticism than he deserves. John has had extremely bad luck in getting speakers for the first part of the year, but wait until spring semester. He has some excellent people lined up, and we should be in for quite a semester. The Carolina Symposium is also due then, and the campus will undoubtedly be full of controversy.

By the way, where's Dick Hesse?

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Surprised

Editors, The Tar Heel,

I was surprised by your article on the events in Mississippi during the Vote For Freedom Campaign, especially your reports of Al Lowenstein jumping bail in Clarksdale. Evidently you did not bother to inquire into the reports you received, for if you had, I think your article would have been phrased in a different manner and tone.

Al's decision to post bond and forfeit it was made on the advice and insistence of the NAACP lawyers and advisors to the campaign. However, he did not forfeit the right to appeal his case. Al's participation and advice in the campaign were indispensable—both the campaign planners and the police who arrested him were aware of this. Al could not afford to waste time in a Clarksdale jail. And this was not his only trip to a Mississippi police station. He was constantly followed, his phone was tapped, he was arrested for running nonexistant stoplights, and he was stopped, questioned and warned regularly. The Clarksdale harassment was only one in a long string of intimidations.

The nature of the offense and the punishment were typical examples of the flagrant abuse in Mississippi of the rights guaranteed by the first amendment of the Constitution. Al was arrested at 1 a.m. while walking across a street from his car to his hotel room for violating a curfew. It is difficult for the American citizen who is not acquainted with the Magnolia State to comprehend the nature and extent of the police intimidation, harassment and brutality which has been directed at the campaign workers, both Negroes and whites. At times the police and white segregationist efforts seem ludicrous and rediculous, but when, as occured several nights ago, a policeman cocks a pistol and holds the barrel against the temple of a campaign worker and says: "Nigger, I think I'm going to kill you right now" and when two campaign workers barely manage to escape two white antagonists with only three bullet holes in their car—and this is due only to superior driving skill at 105 mph chase, it is when these and numerous other similar incidents occur that one is reminded of the dangerous conditions under which everyone involved in the civil rights movement in Mississippi is working.

I do not question the fact that your symptahies lie with the freedom movement, I only question the reportorial responsibility and judgment you exercised or failed to exercise. If you would have looked into the report and inquired further, as did Yale, Stanford, Iowa, University of the Pacific, Mills College, and numerous other colleges across the country, not only would you have been given a startling picture of the conditions in Mississippi but you probably would have been moved to something besides a headline saying Al Lowenstein jumps bail. I should think you would have inquired into the conditions which made his jumping bail necessary: the status of Mississippi today.

Those of us who knew Al during his year on the Campus gratefully remember what he did for us. He was known not only as an outstanding teacher but also as one who awakened the students to their responsibility in the world in which they lived; possibly these two roles are synonymous. And we find it difficult to understand how it is that the newspaper from his alma mater reacted to his efforts in the way it did.

I am enclosing a few of the press releases and statements issued during the campaign to help convey the atmosphere under which the Freedom Vote was conducted.

Miami And George Mira Are Kenan Feature

CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Sports Courier

AND NOW BACK to the George Mira show. And here's George.

Thank you, Loretta. Right now, I'd like to introduce some coaches and players, etc. who have seen me and think I'm great, etc. First, Coach Ben Martin (Air Force). "You are as great as they say. A fine strategist."

Coach Tom Nugent (Maryland). "You are a gifted football player. The most dangerous man in college football today when you're trapped. You are as electric as Willie Mays."

Coach Charlie McClendon (LSU). "You are a pacer. You're fantastic." Dick Shiner (Maryland QB). "You are every bit as good as they think. You are worth three touchdowns to Miami."

Coach Charley Bradshaw (Kentucky). "You are as fine a passer as I've seen this season. You have great initiative." Jerry Stovall (former LSU halfback). "You are fantastic." Gene Sykes (former LSU end). "You are like quicksilver." Coach Bear Bryant (Alabama). "You do everything well. Your accuracy is amazing." Coach Ara Parseghian (Northwestern). "You are incredible." Announcer Paul Christman (former Missouri QB). "You are tremendous A truly all-time great." Dennis Gaubatz (LSU center). "You must have eyes not only in the back of your head, but in both ears."

Uh, Dennis, get outa here. Uh, thanks guys. 'Preciate it. Now here's a word from Marlboro. Julie?

By popular demand, I am sitting in for Julie London today. Youuuu Gett AAaaaa Lottt To Likkkeee With A Marlborooo. Filterrrr, Flavorrrr, Top Flix Bop. Uh, Flip Box Tos. Uh, Bix Tox Flop. Uhhhh NUTS.

I think I'd better stick to this bit, especially since one of the all-time greatest, best, most terrific, fantastical all-time tremendous records in all-time history was turned in by me last week.

A 20-5 was soiled only by Harvard over Princeton (21-7), NC State over VPI (13-7), Michigan over Illinois (14-8), Pittsburgh over Notre Dame (27-7) and Penn State over Ohio State (10-7).

The mark for the year is now 142-52-11 for a percentage of .732. Onward!

NAVY AT DUKE. They're picking this close around the country. Why, you have to wonder. Probably the best Navy team of all time with probably the best junior of all time. I don't think Duke can touch them. Navy, by 15.

SOUTH CAROLINA AT WAKE FOREST. When it rains, it pours. Wake has been mourning many things all fall long. Now, the State Baptist Convention won't modify the qualifications for college trustees. We all know they modified the qualifications for football players a long time ago. It would be nice if they could win this one. South Carolina, by 8.

NC STATE AT FLORIDA STATE. It's a long way from Raleigh to Tallahassee. I think the Wolfpack has had too big a share of the breaks to keep this stuff up. Here's hoping the Seminoles knock our pals right out of sight. Florida State, by 10.

GEORGIA TECH AT ALABAMA. Joe Namath and the Crimson Tide have built up a year of revenge for this one, which they lost by a point last year. Billy Lothridge notwithstanding, Alabama should get it. Alabama, by 6.

AUBURN AT GEORGIA. They've been waiting a long time for the dual between Rakestraw and Sidle. The Plainsmen's first loss last week should not keep the crowd back. Rakestraw may be better, but Sidle should win. Auburn, by 13.

MARYLAND AT CLEMSON. Nugent and Howard are the Hope and Crosby of the ACC. Only don't think they're as friendly. "The only thing colorful about Nugent is his shirt," says Howard. The only thing tactful about Howard is his stomach. Clemson, by 11.

LSU AT MISSISSIPPI STATE. The Thunder of the SEC gets louder every year from top to bottom. There aren't too many pushovers left, and these two teams, while only second rate in their conference, are still first rate in the country. LSU, by 5.

VIRGINIA TECH AT WEST VIRGINIA. The two Southern Conference powers have the title all to themselves as usual. Which one can make the most of it will be decided today. Better all-round, the Mountaineers will have to stop Bob Schweickert. They won't, but they will win. West Virginia, by 10.

ARMY AT PITTSBURGH. West Point's Cadets have an unfortunate situation when they have to meet the country's fifth and second-ranked teams to close out the season. They'll need the week they get between the two, believe me. Fred Mazurek should be the difference. Pittsburgh, by 14.

NOTRE DAME AT MICHIGAN STATE. Out of the league for what has to be a prep for the big one next week with Illinois, the Spartans should not have too much trouble with an Irish team that seems to have lost its fight of the early season. Michigan State, by 11.

IOWA AT MICHIGAN. The surprising Wolverines have knocked off Northwestern and Illinois in recent outings. Bob Timberlake, their quarterback, has a funny name, but Iowa isn't laughing. Michigan, by 6.

OKLAHOMA AT MISSOURI. Jimmy Grisham, Norman's All-America candidate at fullback, is on the doubtful list because of an injury. Missouri is always tough, and Sooner or later, Oklahoma's going to get beat. Probably later. Oklahoma, by 3.

NORTHWESTERN AT OHIO STATE. Yes, Northwestern, you have to have a line as well as a backfield to win in this game these days. Happiness is not having to play in November for these Wildcats. Ohio State, by 14.

KENTUCKY AT BAYLOR. They're singing "I get a Thrill out of Trull" these days. Considering Kentucky's many sophs, he and flanker back Larry Elkins (14 catches from a new world's record) should have a field day. Baylor, by 12.

ARKANSAS AT SMU. The Razorbacks have to be disappointed by what they figured would be a great season and a fight with Texas. Their losses, though, have been no fault of Billy Gray, who has admirably replaced Billy Moore at QB. A close one. Arkansas, by 6.

TCU AT TEXAS. Three times in the past few years, the Frogs have horned in and knocked Texas off its number one pedestal. The Longhorns are two games away from the brilliant 10-0. They're going to be after this one. Texas, by 17.

INDIANA AT OREGON. Two of the finest running backs around will match speed and feints in this intersectional match if Mel Renfro is okay. Marv Woodson will give the Ducks an equal to Renfro. But Oregon's quarterback Bob Berry makes the attack double-barreled. Oregon, by 8.

OTHERS:

Buffalo over Colgate.
Princeton over Yale.
Mississippi over Tennessee.
Nebraska over Oklahoma State.
Purdue over Minnesota.
Washington over UCLA.
Utah over California.
Illinois over Wisconsin.
Rice over Texas A&M.

And now back to the George Mira show.

Assistant Coach Ernie Hefferle (Pittsburgh) "You are a great one, George. Every time we got a man loose at you, you seemed to throw better." Sonny Gibbs (former TCU quarterback) "You are the greatest college quarterback I've ever seen." Coach Bob Devaney (Nebraska) "You are the greatest college passer I ever saw." Coach Bill Peterson (Florida) "You are the greatest . . . .

Chief Throwing Gun Will Test UNC's Vaunted Pass Defense

By JOHN MONTAGUE

George Mira is in town.

Before an expected crowd of 25,000, North Carolina will again put its football fortunes on the line in Kenan Stadium this afternoon, hoping to bounce back into the win column and onto the bowl trail against the visiting Miami Hurricanes and — George Mira.

They say you've got to see this fellow to believe how great he is, and you will definitely see him. He wears No. 10 on the front and back of his green jersey, and he plays quarterback. Oh, how he plays quarterback!

Kick-off time is 1:30, and right away, look for Mira to pass. In six games this year, "The Matador" has thrown the pigskin 176 times (almost 30 a game). He has completed 93 of these, good for a total of 1,076 yards. Statistically, he will probably end up as the third or fourth greatest passer in the history of college football. Financially, he will probably end up a millionaire, for, to bug-eyed pro scouts, the 6-0, 182 pound Key West native is "The Man With the Golden Arm."

Down in Miami, they're calling this game Mira's biggest test of the season. For, if we here in Chapel Hill are awed by Mr. Mira, those down in sunny Florida have the utmost respect for the Tar Heels' pass defense. UNC currently ranks fourth in the nation in this department, yielding the opposition only 54.5 air yards per game.

The Hurricanes of Miami enter this contest with two-weeks rest. An open date last Saturday followed Miami's win over Kentucky two weeks ago. Before that, Mira & Co. had defeated Purdue and Tulane, while losing to Florida State, LSU and Georgia.

The Miami pass offense is handled much the same way UNC handles its own. The Hurricanes usually split one end and flank one back wide to the other side. It is the flanker back that provides Mira with his favorite target, especially on the long tosses.

Nick Spinelli, a 5-11, 183-pound speedster from Caraopolis, Pa., is the flanker back. He has pulled in 20 of Mira's passes this year, good for 246 yards.

John Weisacosky (6-1, 201) and Bob Werl (6-3, 212) are the starting ends, with Weisacosky handling most of the split end assignments. He is the team's No. 2 pass receiver, catching 12 for 168 yards. His replacement, Hoyt Sparks (6-1, 211) has snared 11 for 128 yards.

Joining Mira and Spinelli in the Hurricane backfield are halfback Russell Smith (6-1, 186) and fullback Pete Banaszak (6-0, 203).

These two sophomores form the nucleus of the Miami running attack as Mira himself spurns the run. Smith injured his leg in the Purdue game (Sept. 28) and hasn't played since. But he is reportedly ready now for at least part time action and should be a boost to the Hurricane's outside running attack. Mira also likes to throw the screen to his halfback.

Banaszak is the team's leading ground gainer, having picked up 188 yards in 49 carries. The second team runners are halfback Bob Barth and fullback John Bennett, both netting more than 100 yards so far this season.

The Miami forward wall is massive—the biggest Carolina has faced this fall. The tackles are Dan Conners (6-2, 238) and Bob Brown (6-2, 227); the guards are Rowland Benson (6-3, 255) and Joe Smerdel (6-1, 229); and the center is Bob Hart (6-0, 193).

The North Carolina line-up remains the same as last week with the exception of second-team center, where soph Ed Sringer replaces the injured Glenn Ogburn.

The Tar Heels may have to throw their passing game into high gear against the Hurricanes, as it is tough to move against that gigantic Miami line. Aerial warfare will of course find quarterback Junior Edge looking for end Lacey, then to tight end John Hammett (or Joe Robinson) or to one of his backfield mates.

Cagers Play

Died in the wool Tar Heel fans can get a taste of the hoop as well as the gridiron today.

A half-hour after Mira and the the Hurricanes finish their pigskin clash in Kenan Stadium, the UNC basketball varsity squares off against the talent-loaded freshmen. About 2,000 seats will be available in Woollen Gym at no charge.

Soccer Team Closes Season On 1-1 Tie Match With Duke

By RON LOGAN

North Carolina and Duke struggled to a 1-1 two-overtime tie on Fetzer Field Friday afternoon as the cold weather, poor passing, and often brilliant defense stalemated the two teams.

Pete Blake of UNC and Steve Burgstahler of Duke booted in the only tallies of the contest. The Duke score came with 21:45 gone in the first period, and Carolina tied the game with 2:45 left in the third quarter.

Carolina went into the contest in the favorite's role, but someone neglected to tell Duke. The Durham crew quickly went to work on the Tar Heels, and, by the end of the first half, the Blue Devils were in the driver's seat.

Tremendous defensive play by fullbacks George Beim and Charlie Battle was all that prevented a rout in that half. Many times Duke was only a few yards from the Carolina net when Beim and Battle cleared the ball to midfield.

The Duke defense was outstanding too. The Blue Devil backs repeatedly took the ball away from the UNC line, and kept the ball on the Carolina side of the field a good part of the game.

UNC made a good comeback in the second half, but failed to close in for the kill in the fourth quarter and the two five-minute overtimes.

The Heels were much more aggressive in the final half, and Bill Haywood, Bill Wall, Pete Blake, Battle and Beim almost snatched a win out of the fire with their outstanding play.

The absence of starters Buddy Siegel and Drew Murphy was keenly felt, and an added blow was the loss of left wing Jim Talbot who was forced out of play in the third quarter with injuries to his left knee and ankle.

"Needless to say it was a close game," commented Coach Marvin Allen of UNC. "We had difficulty retaining possession of the ball, and our tackling was poor today, but the boys certainly put forth a good effort."

POOBAHS DEFEATED

LAURINBURG — UNC's dormitory intramural football champions, the Alexander Poobahs, were defeated here yesterday, 19-7, in their annual classic with St. Andrews Presbyterian College.

The Poobahs, who this week, won the University's dormitory championship with victories over Emerson and Aycock, got their lone touchdown on a 40-yard run with an intercepted pass by Bud Cohoon. Bobby Cox, a refugee from Emerson's Cardplayers, scored the extra point, but Alexander didn't have enough to duplicate its 12-6 win here last year.

run.

Though I would much rather run than pass, we might have to pass a lot more in this game than we've been doing. Miami has a real big line and nobody has had a great deal of success against it. We will try, of course, but we're ready to pass if we have to. I don't like passing battles, because every time you put the ball in the air, the other team has a chance to get it. But this game might be a passing battle.

That's about all I can say about the game. Now we have to play it. And I have a feeling we're going to look real good out there today. This is the best bunch of boys I've ever worked with. The seniors on this squad have been great leaders and this has really meant a lot. No team wants to win more than this one. I hope the final score will reflect the effort they're putting into this game.

want to drive the world's leading rally winner?

If you don't keep up with international rallies like England's RAC and the Classic Monte Carlo, you may not appreciate how solidly built a car must be to stand up to these tortuous endurance runs. SAAB does, year after year . . . and wins. Because of its unusual 2-stroke engine/front-wheel drive power system*, SAAB consistently beats larger, more powerful cars. SAAB — a 5-passenger family sedan, not a sports car — takes more rally wins than any car in the world.

Needless to say, it performs like nothing else on the road. So come on in and test-drive a 1964 SAAB. You just can't believe people still take the trouble to build a car as great as this one.

State Intern Program Set For Summer

The State of North Carolina will again in 1964 conduct its Summer Intern Program in Political Science.The program will last from June 15 through Aug. 21 and will allow twenty college students to work in some fifteen state agencies.

In the past, UNC has been well represented in the program.

In addition to their work, the interns will have intensive, coordinated discussion on governmental and related problems of the state in evening seminars to be held twice each week, and in weekly luncheons. These will be supervised by a political scientist and will have state officials, leaders and political scientists as guests, speakers and resource personnel.

All interns will live at one of the dormitories at North Carolina State, in order to share their experiences on an informal basis. Rent will be $6 per week without linen.

To qualify, an applicant must have completed two years of undergraduate work and be either a resident of North Carolina or enrolled in a North Carolina college. Graduate or professional students are also eligible.

Salary will be $75 per week.

Application and descriptive materials will be available shortly at the placement office, student government offices in GM, and from the chairmen of the political Science, History, Economics, Business Administration, Education and Sociology Departments, or may be requested from the Governor's office in Raleigh.

All applications must be returned to the Governor's Office by Dec. 15. Applicants will be notified of their acceptance or rejection by the last of February. Selectien is to be made by a committee which includes prominent political scientists teaching in North Carolina.

'NIGHT OF MODERN DANCE'

Graham Memorial will present "A Night of Modern Dance," featuring three film presentations, Monday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Roland Parker Lounges in GM.

The films include "Marceau's Pantomimes" in color: "A Dancer's World," starring Martha Graham and her company and "Lament" with Jose Limon.

Foster Fitz-Simons of the Drama Department will give a short lecture between films. A reception will follow.

RELIGIOUS GROUP

A group of students and faculty will meet tonight at 6 p.m. in upstairs Lenoir Hall to discuss possibilities of forming a religious group interested in developing religious insights on a non-denominational, non-dogmatic basis.

Judge Bounces Carter Case Back To Faculty Council

By JIM NEAL

The Anne Royal Carter case has been remanded to the Faculty Review Board, the Daily Tar Heel learned yesterday.

Superior Court Judge Clawson Williams, Sr., of Sanford, said in a telephone interview yesterday that, although it is not the policy of the court to disclose judgments until they are received by the Clerks of Court, the substance of his judgment ordered the Faculty Review Board to review the case.

The text of the judgment was not available from the Clerk of Wake County Superior Court Saturday.

Miss Carter was convicted of a charge of cheating on a make-up examination by the Women's Honor Council in 1961. Her appeal was denied, and she took the case to the Board of Trustees.

The Board appointed a special committee to investigate the case, and the committee reported back to the Board a recommendation that the "Board of Trustees take no action; that the question . . . should be left where it (had previously) been placed by the Trustees and where it properly belongs—with the Chancellor and faculty at Chapel Hill."

It was then that Miss Carter took the case to Wake County Superior Court, where it was heard by Judge Heman Clark. Judge Clark upheld the basis of the Honor System here, but ordered a review of the case by the then Student-Faculty Review Board.

According to Chancellor William B. Aycock, Miss Carter's lawyer took the case back to Wake County Superior Court when the Review Board offered a hearing. Judge Williams was then sitting on the Wake County bench.

Friday's judgment is the result of a hearing held at Williams' Sanford home, attended by Chapel Hill attorney John Manning, representing Miss Carter, and Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody, representing the University and the Board of Trustees.

Illegitimacy Not Short-Term Affair

North Carolina's illegitimate children are conceived by couples "going steady or with marriage plans" in 90 per cent of the cases, a University of North Carolina study showed this week.

Dr. Hallowell Pope of the UNC Department of Sociology and Anthropology said in a preliminary report of a study of unwed mothers in the state that "contrary to popular belief, illegitimate births usually do not result from fly-by-night sex affairs."

Dr. Pope said the relationships which generated illegitimate children in the state "are stable between the boy and the girl." He said 50 per cent of the 900 unwed mothers interviewed said they were in love with the man involved before they became pregnant. An even higher percentage said they were in love, "thought they were in love or liked him a lot," said Dr. Pope.

The study began in 1961 and will continue for another year. It involved white unwed mothers in 26 Piedmont and mountain counties and Negro unwed mothers in 20 counties in the Piedmont, the eastern tobacco area and the northeastern peanut section.

Dr. Pope said his study also indicated:

1. The Negro unwed mother was more likely to remain unmarried than the white unwed mother.
2. Broken homes are not the only reason why girls "get into trouble."
3. Most unwed mothers remain unmarried and keep their children.
4. The unwed mother and the father are usually of the same age and educational background.
5. Two of five unwed mothers have "gone steady" with the fathers for over six months before they became pregnant.
6. Two of every five white unmarried mothers said they and the fathers planned marriage before pregnancies.
7. The Negro fathers were twice as likely as the white fathers to provide support for the illegitimate child and its mother.

Recruiter Here

Lieutenant James G. Moore, USCGR, will be here from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Nov. 21 to explain the Coast Guard Officer Candidate Program to interested January graduates.

Lieutenant Moore will be prepared to administer Officer Qualification tests to qualified applicants.

The Coast Guard Officer Candidate School, located in Yorktown, Va., prepares officer candidates, through a four-month course, for positions of leadership and responsibility in today's Coast Guard. Upon graduation from the school, students are commissioned with the rank of Ensign in the United States Coast Guard Reserve.

Four plays for $3.50, is the deal currently being offered Carolina students by the Playmakers. Opening night performances for the four remaining productions of the season are reserved as Student Nights.

Season tickets at $3.50 or single tickets at one dollar per play are now on sale at Y-Court and GM. Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night" opens Tuesday night. Tickets will be on sale until curtain time.

If the special price on student tickets finds popular response, advantages for play-going students will be increased next year.

Folk Sing On 'Encounter'

"Encounter" will encounter folk music and students' addiction to it Monday night at 8:30 on WUNC-TV (Channel 4), according to Dr. John Clayton of the RTVMP department, moderator of the show.

Dr. Wilton Mason, director of the Folk Music Institute here, will join three students on the panel.

Dr. Clayton said the students will sing and play folk music, and then they will discuss it with Dr. Mason.

"Encounter" is a weekly panel show which discusses students' "Minds, Manners and Morals."

Dr. Clayton said the idea for the show grew out of a classroom demonstration planned by a graduate student. He said the graduate student found a girl folksinger, and brought her to the class one day to sing.

The girl sang so well and seemed so enthusiastic about folk music that Dr. Clayton decided to discuss folk music on one of his "Encounter" shows.

Two boys are scheduled to appear as well, Dr. Clayton said, and one of them may bring along another person.

Ken Willard Storms Miami Beach, 27-16

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

George Mira's first pass meant six points here yesterday, and some guys started cancelling holiday resevvations south. But Ken Willard, boy catastrophe, wasn't one of them.

With or without shoes, the big guy can roll and yesterday Willard picked up North Carolina and rolled it right past Miami, 27-16, and right back into the national bowl picture.

They call Miami the Hurricanes but Willard was the one who stormed Miami's beach in this one. He carried the ball 25 times, once with no shoes, gained 112 yards, continually got the Tar Heels the big gainer when it counted and scored the clinching TD as the final seconds expired into history.

For all the brilliance of Willard, Bob Lacey, Junior Edge and the rest of UNC's first unit, it was the second team, called on midway the third period to see what it could do, that gave Carolina a sorely-needed score and the lead for ever and ever.

Coming from the half on a 7-7 draw, UNC's first squad could get no further than the Miami 47 despite three six-yard thrusts by Willard and a beautiful shoetops catch by Lacey. Billy Edwards had to punt from that point, and the Hurricanes let it roll to their own one where Lacey controlled to put them in the hole.

Carolina has seen a lot of fine quarterbacks this season, but this Mira is somethin' else. Though the Tar Heels did contain him somewhat (11 for 25 and 191 yards), their defensive backfield got a lot of help from the Miami receivers who wince every time they have to go after one of their Matador's bullets.

But, from his one, Mira played "clutch performer," and this time his catchers decided to help him out. He took the club down the field to the UNC 11 in nine plays, before finally being stalled. He threw long (23 yards to fullback Pete Banaszak, 47 to end Hoyt Sparks), short (six yards to halfback John Bennett) and everywhere, before, with third and six from the 11, UNC center Chris Hanburger crashed through and hit him from the blind side for one of the biggest plays of the day.

For it meant the Hurricanes could only get three (which they did on Don Cifra's 32-yard field goal), not six or seven, and gave the Tar Heels a chance to come back and lead it.

The second unit took care of that detail, but it wasn't easy, and Gary Black, who in a football uniform resembles Mira anyway, had to steal some of the thunder of Miami's real George to bring it about.

Down 10-7, Black and the rest of his backfield mates scrambled their way to the lead TD with some plays that had to have an indelible impression on the color-minded post-season bird dogs.

From its own 29, UNC drove for three first downs featured brilliantly by a Black-to-Joe Robinson 12-yarder over the middle and a scatter run for 11 yards by Ron Tuthill. With the ball at the Miami 46 and a second-and-24 (due to a clip by Clint Eudy on the preceding play), Black called a tackle-eligible pass, and co-captain Gene Sigmon took it for a 17-yard gain to the Hurricane 29.

It took two plays for them to score, the first a 10-yard diving catch at the right sideline (first down) by Robinson, the second a play which made even Mira look on in awe.

Black faded back from the 19, was hit by three men and looked like a goner, but he shot-putted the ball 10 yards down field where Ron Tuthill leaped up and got it. Tuthill, too, looked trapped, but he, too, got away and scampered through several other sunshiners and into the end zone. It gave the Heels a 14-10 lead with 3:57 left in the third quarter when Dave Braine kicked good (his 17th straight and a tie for the conference record).

But a four-point lead on a George Mira is far short of enough, and an estimated 28,000 knew it.

The Hurricanes got the ball once more in the quarter, but Mira fumbled it away at the UNC 31 when Richy Zarro hit him and end Jerry Cage fell on the ball.

They got it again shortly after the final period had started when an Edge-to-Lacey deep pass was intercepted by Banaszak at the Miami 18. But a Hurricane drive once more was stopped after moving to the UNC 29 when Mira, on a fourth-and-eight, could get only seven with a sweep right to the 22.

Here, UNC took over and marched to a little more insurance with a 78-yard blitz. First downs were four in number and were handled by Willard and the Edge-to-Lacey dynamite.

After Edge's four-yard gain had been nullified by a 15-yard holding penalty, UNC found itself with a second-and-25 from its own 44 and decided this nonsense had gone on long enough.

This big meal ticket, Lacey, took a look-in pass down the left side lines from Edge and began to play the Big Cat to Miami defender Tom Coughlin's little mouse. The magnificent end, trapped by Coughlin, doubled back, gave Coughlin a feint and was off to the races for a 35-yard first-down gem to the Miami 21.

After Eddie Kesler could not gain on a tackle burst, Edge again called the pass play, only this tim Lacey went on another pattern, sucked two men short,

American Legion Calls NSA Pink

The American Legion National Convention opposed the U. S. National Student Association on the grounds that NSA policies and programs embrace the important line of the Communist Party.

In a resolution passed by the Legion's national convention at Miami Beach in September, NSA stands against communist speaker bans and against firing teachers who are members of the Communist Party as examples of "Communist infiltration" were given.

The resolution also stated that "adult leaders, speakers and advisors of the USNSA represent a high degree of left-wing and pro-Communist infiltration of this organization."

Jim Duerr, NSA national coordinator, said "NSA is not a voice for any one faction. . . . Opinions expressed are simply those of student leaders elected by student bodies and it is difficult to conceive of it being a tool of one set of influences."

USNSA is the chief sponsor of a world youth convention which rivals the World Youth Festivals held by the communist countries, according to Duerr.

Chairman of the national Americanism commission of the Legion, Daniel O'Conner, was recently asked what the NSA was. He replied he wasn't sure but thought it had something to do with the students who went to Cuba defying the State Department travel ban.

Let Us Go Forward To Where We Began

The judicial system of the United States and the systems of each state do, in most cases, closely parallel our own personal conceptualizations of what is just and what is unjust, or more simply and less philosophically, that which is fair and that which is not.

What we have, by virtue of our nature as a free republic and our English heritage, is a rather delicate balance between the rights of the individual and the welfare of the group. There are conflicts arising daily from this system and we tread a thin and much disputed line in our attempts to defend against either the rule of the minority or the tyranny of the majority. Most reasonable Americans would agree that our system is good and they would also assert that it is vital to our system of government that the balance between the whole and the part be maintained.

But this formulation of ideals is not what makes our system of justice strong. Ideals are much less important to us than our gut reactions, and our system is strong because Americans are somehow possessed of an overdeveloped, instinctive sense of fair play. Blatant miscarriages of justice anger us, and it doesn't really matter on what level the miscarriage occurs. It can be a bum decision by the judges in a prize fight or the obvious negation of a man's right by a judge in a traffic or police court. On any level, we are rankled by what we feel to be unfair.

But something seems to be happening to us, and it appears to be happening to us as Southerners especially. We suddenly seem to be willing to tolerate such gross perversions of the law that we mock our heritage as a free and just nation.

We watch four young men get thrown in jail in Americus, Georgia for participating in a civil rights demonstration. They are charged with "inciting insurrection," a capital crime in Georgia, and they remain in jail for three months without benefit of bail. After a federal court orders their release on bond, the Sumter County Prosecutor tells us jokingly that he really wasn't going to press for the death penalty which the charge carries.

But we wonder what happened to a nation during those three months? Where were the howls of indignation which have been raised in the past? Where is the national censure which descended on Little Rock and Oxford? An American professor gets arrested by the Russians and 24 hours later the entire country is up in arms. Is it because the Russians did it, or because the professor wasn't in a civil rights demonstration? Or is it just that we are so used to these breaches of justice in the South that we are weary and bored?

We watch while Leander Perez of Plaquemine Parish, Louisiana, gloats over the prison he is preparing for any demonstrators who might happen his way. He is converting the powder magazine of an old Civil War fort, nestled in the middle of a swamp, into Louisiana's first concentration camp. He says proudly, "I got two cattle boats to haul 'em out there and we're putting barbed wire all around it." The top strands of the wire are electrified. How much voltage? "As much as it takes to keep 'em in," he says. Perez also readily admits that the place is infested with snakes and that mosquitoes are a year-round problem.

And again we ask, Where are the cries of "no"? Where are the angry epithets that should be crashing around this man's head? Almost a hundred years ago we watched in shocked revulsion as the tales of Andersonville unfolded, and now we sit by and watch a political boss rebuild that horror in the middle of the 20th Century. Are we shocked into silence? Are we so shaken by disbelief that we can't find the words? Or don't we care?

We'd better care. For the problem has nothing to do with the way we feel about integration or demonstrations or civil disobedience. It has to do with our historic claim as a just nation. It has to do with our sense of fair play which has characterized this country since the first days of the Republic.

The South has already worked itself into the sterile position of allowing one issue to dominate all other considerations for the last ten years. Because many Southern legislators have become so completely belligerent on the race question, some Southern states can't even pass a road bond bill, and much federal legislation is needlessly killed by their spite voting.

Is it now conceivable that we shall quietly allow this geographic recalcitrance to engulf and destroy that sense of justice which is so precious to us?

Granted that most of these misdeeds are perpetrated against civil rights demonstrators, but we must lay our differences on this question aside and ally ourselves against the misdeeds alone. It was this recognition of priorities which led the NAACP to intercede in behalf of the Ku Klux Klan in Greensboro last month when the Klan was denied use of a public auditorium for a rally. Neither group was particularly comfortable being allied with the other, (the Klan was downright embarrassed by finding themselves with their unsolicited bedfellow). But the NAACP's commitment to the principle of equal application of this basic freedom, the right of assembly, was so strong that it was willing to ignore the differences between the groups and defend the rights of its bitterest enemy.

And as it was with them, so it must be with us. For if we permit the law to be unjustly applied to our enemies, we must do so with the full knowledge that we are increasing the chances of it being unjustly applied to us. We must ally, no matter how much discomfort it causes us. We must protest, and if that doesn't work we must howl bloody murder in order to stop this new brand of justice which ultimately threatens us all.

As Mr. Justice Schaefer of Illinois said in an Oliver Wendell Holmes Lecture in 1956, "The quality of a nation's civilization can be largely measured by the methods it uses in the enforcement of its criminal law. That measurement is not taken merely in retrospect by social historians of the future. It is taken from day to day by the peoples of the world, and to them the criminal procedure sanctioned by any of our states is the procedure sanctioned by the United States."

It is our duty to prove to the people of the world and to ourselves that the United States is better than her Sumter Counties and Plaquemine Parishes, by protesting passionately and at length the prostitution of justice that characterizes these areas.

Bang! Another Professor Falls

Ed. Note—The following is a short history of student Government at the University compiled on the request of the editors.

Bitterness, strife, animosity, distrust and conflict characterized the nature of student-faculty-administrative relations in the early history of the University. Higher and external pressures were first used in an attempt to control the situation.

In 1805, the Trustees passed strict, puritanical and censorial laws relating to student life in an attempt to quell the chaos and strife. The faculty, responsible statutorily for the enforcement, tried to delegate the onus to the students.

President Battle (History of the University, p. 200) described the laws and reaction as ". . . of such inquisitorial severity as outraged the sense of justice among the students . . . If our students had been a colony of wax-dolls they might have submitted . . . without a murmur . . . but being American boys with independence of thought and abundance of pluck, they received the ordinance with angry disgust and determination not to submit."

"The Great Rebellion" followed. Forty-five students, a majority of those enrolled, refused to act as monitors enforcing the code and withdrew in protest from the University. These men later rose to positions of influence and power in the State. They proudly refused to participate in government by fiat, suspicion and reporting to faculty tribunals.

Resentment was strong. Each student's day was planned in detail, beginning with morning prayer, supervised recitation, monitored sleeping hours so that they could be reproved for not studying or keeping strong drink in their rooms. Association with evil company, especially lewd women, gaming or betting were grievous sins. Cheating was a game of wits between the instructors and students. One writer records the existence of a cheating hole in the floor of second floor South Building through which questions were lowered into a closet on the first floor. Tutors could order students to their rooms after 8:00 p.m. if found visiting.

The faculty was federalist and Calvinist. Censorship in writing and speech prevailed, especially in politics and religion. Jeffersonian Republicanism inspired the students to harass the Federalist faculty often in forbidden speeches in the Di and Phi, forerunners of today's Student Government organization.

Students would actually waylay professors and beat them. One professor's room was "flooded with toad frogs and terrapins." More common pranks included stealing the President's carriage (while he secretly hid in it), burning certain faculty barns, cutting down cornfields, exploding gunpowder at the tutors' doors or firing pistols over their heads in the halls of Old East.

In 1808 students protested the presence of vermin in the Steward's hall. In 1819 a student and a tutor fought over the charms of a young lady whom they had simultaneously escorted for a Sunday afternoon stroll. The student charged that the tutor had defamed him in the girl's presence. In 1824 two students attacked a faculty member with sticks and a gun. Tradition records that one faculty member was actually shot as he passed the Old Well.

University government was autocratic and harsh. The more enlightened and democratic concept of student self-control was not yet instilled. Gradually the Di and Phi through the office of Censor morum came to impose a student system of discipline and government that in the early days was only slightly less stringent than that of the faculty. In 1807 President Caldwell guaranteed the right of the Di-Phi Societies to prohibit faculty attendance at their meetings and trials. Student Government began and was nurtured in the halls and influence of the Societies.

When the University re-opened in 1875, President Battle prudently and wisely refused to reprint the harsh administrative) code for student conduct. He pragmatically (and truthfully) argued that the University did not have the money. Students would simply behave as gentlemen.

At the same time, the faculty had voted to expel a student for public drunkenness. The leaders of his society approached the President with a petition to readmit him and a promise that they would assume responsibility for his conduct since he had promised them to behave himself. Student leaders also assumed responsibility to curb cheating and inculcate an honor system on examinations. Albert Coates called this incident a "government by compact." (See his speech "Out of a Classroom in Chapel Hill," delivered to the Societies in 1951.) Students requested and were granted control over their activities outside the classroom.

Essentially and basically, the organic and dynamic growth of student self-government since 1875, created by student initiative and oath, constitutes "The Carolina way of life". The uniqueness of Chapel Hill has been the historical recognition of student government as a valuable, vital and integral part of the educative process, academically and democratically.

Through the Honor and Campus Codes, equally vital and student administered, Carolina men (and women) have participated in their own control and University administration. For these privileges, they have been responsible for their own honesty, integrity and personal behavior when it becomes a matter of valid public concern. External force was gone; in a maturing stage of life they have been taught to rely and build on their inner resources and insights for action and conduct. This is really the basis of Western democracy.

By 1900, the Honor system needed a wider structure of administration since membership in the societies was no longer mandatory. Consequently, in 1904, at President Venable's suggestion, the class presidents formed the "University Council" (later the Student Council) to punish hazing and violations of the Honor Code, on a campus-wide basis.

This Student Council resigned in protest in 1910 when a faculty vote overruled its expulsion of a student for public drunkenness (again!) Student Frank P. Graham appealed to the Trustees who upheld the student court's right and decision. R. Mayne Albright claimed that this official recognition of an organic development at Chapel Hill constituted the first legal recognition of student self-government anywhere in the world.

For statutory purposes, a compromise was reached with the faculty. A faculty ad hoc appeals group was structured with the students having the right to name the three faculty members for each case appealed. This board fell into disuse and disappeared.

In the early twentieth century, liberal democratic ideas permeated the air of Chapel Hill. Horace Williams, the gadfly, strolled the gravel walks establishing rapport and parity with the young men enrolled. Eben Alexander, Edward Kidder Graham and others generated and promoted mutual trust, confidence and respect for student and older opinion alike. The Order of the Grail was formed because a faculty member strongly believed the opportunity to brush a young lady's skirt should be part of a young man's education (The faculty had abolished campus dances after they had devolved into rowdiness.)

In the early 1920's President Chase created the office of the Dean of Students Affairs to undergird and provide administrative enhancement and encouragement of student government that had faltered immediately following the First World War.

By the mid-twenties, student government had proliferated into many of the areas that we now know. The YWCA was an integral part of the system. Graham Memorial was opened.

At this time appeals from the Student Council followed one of two routes. A student could appeal his verdict to the student body at large (or "student union," the term used then). The famous "Magazine Case" (1926) was heard by the students in Gerrard in this manner. The more frequent method was appeal to an ad hoc committee of equal representation appointed by the President (now read Chancellor), the Student Council and the person appealing.

Custom and precedent often decreed that appeal was of no avail and also that the faculty refrain from involvement in the student system. Student freedom was corroded only in cases of more excessive incidents like the gambling scandal of 1927 and the cheating one of 1936. Students always rallied after each setback and became stronger in their control.

In 1930, recognizing student accomplishment, the Faculty Executive Committee (Now Committee on Student Discipline) recommended to the faculty "... that all cases arising under the honor system be handled by the student council. The Chairman explained . . . that (this) represented a desire to give unqualified support to a new and spontaneous movement in the student body toward more responsible and effective self-government." (Coates speech, p. 30). The faculty approved without an audible dissenting vote!

The exact constitution of an appeals board has fluctuated many times since the original one in 1910 to the one used in the 1920's to an all faculty board in the early 1950's.

The Student Legislature of 1945-46 involved itself with the formulation and student approval of a formal constitution. (The Legislature itself had been established only in 1938). There was strong opposition from some students and faculty members who felt an unwritten law to be more adaptable to changing student life. Finally, in May, 1946 the constitution was adopted by the students in campus-wide elections.

Tom Eller reports that administrative approval was not immediately forth-coming and that a year of "turbulence and friction" followed. "During this period only those powers not involving conflicts of faculty-student authority were in effect. The president of the student body appointed a five-member student committee which studied the document in cooperation with the Administration and which secured its approval unamended in early 1947." Since 1947 student government has had official recognition in written form.

In 1956, the White case, similar to the Carter case in many respects, generated a formal structuring of the appeals process. The Board of Trustees, sitting in the Governor's office, heard the final appeal in the White case. Later in the academic year, the Trustees decided never to allow cases of student conduct to pass beyond the confines of each component institution again. Among the duties of the faculty and Chancellor of each institution, it defined " . . . the duty to excerise full and final authority in the regulation of student conduct . . . and in the discharge of this duty, delegation of such authority may be made to the established agencies of student government . . ." This phrasing is legalese for statutory requirements and official recognition of existing student governmental structures at Chapel Hill. A full statement of this action was added to the University Administrative Code in 1962.

In 1956-57, following the Trustees' resolution in the White case, student leaders, after consultation and discussion on a basis of party and mutual respect with the administration and representatives of the Faculty Executive Committee inserted a formal appeals procedure into the Student Constitution. This procedure provided for a joint Student-Faculty Review Board comprising three members of the Faculty Executive Committee and the chairmen of the three student councils at the time. In 1957-58 this board heard one case on appeal and remanded it to the student court of original jurisdiction on grounds of procedural irregularities. (Annual Report of the Executive Committee, 1957-58, p. 2). There were six appeal cases in 1956-57, ten in 1955-56, two in 1954-55, and one in 1953-54.

It must be noted that no formal appeals procedure was ever adopted until 1957 and that administrative and faculty representatives fully participated in the action to incorporate the board into the Student Constitution.

Repercussions from the infamous Carter case are probably responsible for the recent arbitrary and unilateral action by the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline (so-designated since 1961). Why could not students have been told the real reasons for the summary action removing them from the Board?! Dr. Cleveland's (and those to whom he is responsible) answers have not been satisfying or to the point. Has the faculty committee generated basic distrust and disdain by its action that departs from the precedents and traditions of Chapel Hill?

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Rights Abused!

Editors, The Tar Heel

What would be your reaction if it were announced that Billy Cunningham could no longer represent our university on the basketball court because he had fallen below a C or 2.0 overall average? He was told that he could no longer eat at Lenoir Hall with his former teammates; Billy could not go to parties anymore with the likes of Bryan McSweeny, Charlie Shaffer or Mike Cooke who do have C averages. The "kid" could not reside in the same dorm with these students or participate on an intramural squad with them. Your reaction? "Absurd, ridiculous, assinine!" Well actually it is not so unthinkable. In fact there are well over two hundred students living in our community with these very restrictions hanging over them and limiting their inherent rights to associate with whomever they wish.

This is another instance of a lack of real student autonomy on our campus. The I.F.C., after bargaining with the administration (in good faith) was compelled to rule that inactives and bullpledges would be restricted thusly. The I.F.C. passed this under the definite impression that if they did not, the administration would place much harsher restrictions on the entire system. Student autonomy? The fraternities are willing to discuss the problems and complications yet it all seems to fall on deaf ears. At this time there are bills before the student legislature and I.F.C. concerning these blatant abuses of students' rights but apparently the outcome will have no effect unless approved and/or accepted by higher authorities.

Just what is student government? Is it a process by which our administration decrees what is acceptable to them and then the various student organizations follow suit by enacting legislation just to please? In other words the administration makes the rules and the students are compelled to enforce them since we do proclaim to be self-governed Government, in the past, in a democracy such as America, has been by the people and for the people with elected legislative, judicial, and executive branches.) Or are we, after all, simply puppets!

Uh, Yes

Editors, The Tar Heel:

Now that the children have all grown up, my husband and I are doing a lot more traveling than we ever thought possible. This was my first visit to Chapel Hill, and I was truly impressed—especially with your cute little paper, the Daily Tar Heel. It seems that you cover everything. The real reasons we came here were to speak to a ladies club on the Gag Law and to pick up a copy of Sarah Watson Emery's little book, Blood on the Old Well. Bull's Head, The Booketeria, nor the intimate had it—all the more shame upon them. This book exposes some of the most recent and vital things that have been turned up in Chapel Hill: Mrs. Emery is a true scholar in the solid sense of the word. The book links up the three things that in our time are surely most related—suicide, homosexuality, and communism. Not that either of these is bad within itself—but they are facts, and my old Prof. Dr. D—— left with us, if nothing else, the wisdom that we should search for the facts even if we must tear down the bowels of the earth and slit half the throats in the kingdom to do so.

I like to be dramatic, but I couldn't, like Isiah or Jeremiah, strip my self naked and walk the streets—not for your life in Chapel Hill, this is a decent town. So I went in to speak to those sweet ladies wearing a gag—just an old scarf I happened to have in my purse. Since I am a DAR, I am interested in all the support your paper can give the law. It is much more civilized than cutting out the togues of people, as we used to do.

and left Ronnie Jackson all alone deep. Deep in this case meant the end zone, and Edge hit him perfectly for a 21-yard TD play.

Braine's kick, for the first time this year, was false. UNC led 20-10, and 9:27 was left for Mira to do something about it.

He gave it a H of a try, and, indeed, got back six points, but that was all,brother.

The Hurricane's injured soph star, Russ Smith, returned the kickoff to his 30, and Mira went to work quickly producing a TD in just seven plays. The big gainer was a keep by the Miami phenom which went from the Hurricane 39 to the UNC 24-37 yards.

From there, Banaszak, another soph, gained three, and a pass interference call on Ron Tuthill gained 14 to the Carolina 7. Mira rolled right, pulled in UNC's John Hammett and then threw a screen over him to Bennett going away for the easy touchdown and a 16-20 deficit.

The Hurricanes went for two, forseeing a possible win on a field goal but that was defeated when Mira's pitch was a ball—high—to Sparks deep over the goal.

Carolina came right back to put it away, taking up the next six minutes, three seconds with Willard's one-yard dive to cap it coming just 30 seconds from the final whistle.

Big Ken gained 42 of the 73 yards, but the second time he carried in the drive, UNC hearts leaped into mouths when a Willard fumble was recovered by Miami on the Carolina 36. However, the whistle had apparently blown the play dead before the fumble, and UNC maintained possession apparently.

The Heels also maintained composure and went on to score. Mira got just one more chance to do damage, and all he made of it was to throw an illegal pass underhand to an illegal receiver illegally.

Nothing was illegal, however, in the first quarter when the "Conch" took the Hurricanes from their 22 to the UNC 23 the first time he got the ball.

He didn't pass once in that time, but the next play he did, and when Edge failed to cover Nick Spinelli deep, Miami had the first touchdown, an easy one after only five minutes of play.

Punt-Punt they went to the middle of the second period when UNC finally got a chance to even it up.

Carolina took the ball on its 28 and got four first downs on the way to score. Lacey, (who on the day who) caught eight for 108, took a sideline for 17 yards and an over-the-middle for another 19. Willard pounded 17 for a third first-and-ten, and Hammett caught a second quick-middle (13 yards) for the fourth

They all got the ball to the four where Willard went two, one, and then Edge went another one —touchdown.

Edge was 13 for 21 through the air for 174 yards while Black went seven for 10 and 70—a combined 244 total to Mira's 191.

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C. (UPI) —Wake Forest overcame a 12-point deficit to upset South Carolina 20-19 Saturday and snap the current longest losing streak in major college circles at 18 games.

Quarterback Karl Sweetan scored from four yards out to tie the score midway in the final period and fullback Brian Piccolo, co-hero of the electrifying comeback, kicked the winning extra point.

It Was Cat's Meow— Hickey Looked Part

By JOHN MONTAGUE

North Carolina's football team bounced back twice Saturday afternoon and Jim Hickey was all smiles because of it. First of all, the Tar Heels' 27-16 taming of Miami represented a heart-warming comeback from last week's upset loss to Clemson. Secondly, the Heels had to come from behind in order to do it.

"When you come back like we did, it is really satisfying," Hickey said, grinning like a Cheshire cat. "Miami took it right in for the score at the start and we had our work cut out for us. The boys really came through, didn't they?"

The coach, whose team has now won more games (seven) than any Carolina team since 1949, is always sparing with his praise, criticism and smiles at the press conference which follows every game. But this time, the smile of satisfaction could not be contained.

"We were a little mixed up in our defensive secondary there early in the game," explained Hickey, who also felt his team was a little flat in the opening quarter.

"On their first touchdown, Braine (left corner back) was made to look like a fool, but it wasn't his fault. We had called a double-team on Spinelli on that play, with Braine taking him short and the safety taking him long. Well, Braine took him short all right, but the safety never showed up. It was just a mix-up on the defensive assignments."

Hickey felt that George Mira was executing the play-action pass to perfection. He explained that when a quarterback fakes the run as well as Mira did on what would normally be a running situation, it is almost impossible to get a good rush on the passer.

"That Mira was really great," said Hickey. "I guess we caught him today about as much as he's been caught all season. He's so hard to catch back there that often it's better not to put too much of a rush on him."

Hickey said that Miami changed its defense for the first time all year (from a 6-1 to an "I" defense with a five man line), and that it took UNC a while to get adjusted to it.

Needless to say, Carolina did get adjusted to it, and the interior line had a lot to do with it.

"I would say we blocked Miami as well as anybody has all year. In the second half, we got real hot running Willard off right tackle. We stuck with it—the blocking made it go."

Hickey shook his head and laughed when someone asked him about the Tar Heels' second touchdown—the one which came on a lob pass from Gary Black to Ron Tuthill.

"That was something wasn't it? I don't see how Gary ever got the pass off.

"I also thought Junior Edge played a great game. And that Lacey! You know, Bob never ceases to amaze me. He's always got a different fake."

The Tar Heels came out of the game without any serious injuries, though Hickey admitted they had one big scare when Chris Hanburger came off the field.

"He got the wind knocked out of him and cut his tongue at the same time. Came off the field spitting blood and worried to death. Thought he had punctured a lung. But he's all right. And it's a good thing too. We're short on centers having lost Ogburn last Saturday."

VARSITY WINS

The UNC Varsity Basketeers, led by the all-round play of Bill Cunningham and Ray Respess trounced the Carolina Frosh 94-76, yesterday.

Cunningham led all scorers with 36 points, followed by freshmen Bob Lewis and Ian Morrison with 25 and 23 points, respectively.

Commenting on the game, Coach Dean Smith said, "The Varsity played well during the second half, the type of ball they are capable of playing."

Staubach Is Leader In Tough Duke Win

By MAT FRIEDMAN

DURHAM — The good ship Jolly Roger, led by courageous Captain Staubach, weathered a wild first half storm and dropped the anchor in the second half as Navy beat Duke 38-25 here yesterday.

It looked at first as if the second ranked Middies and the Blue Devils would run one of the most fantastic scores in history. The teams went to the dressing room with Navy ahead 31-25 and there had not been a single punt.

But the Middie defense dug in after the intermission and though Duke was in Navy territory seven times, they did not come close to scoring. With about two minutes to go, Navy halfback John Sai cracked off right guard for a 93-yard touchdown which finally broke the Blue Devils' backs. It was the only second-half score.

Sai's run was the lonegst from scrimmage in Navy history, bettering Joe Bellino's 90-yard scamper against Virginia in 1960.

But for the 41,000 fans on hand at Duke Stadium, it was that crazy first half that will probably stick in their minds forever.

They had heard many things about Roger Staubach — and found out they all were true. They saw the fantastic quarterback shatter two all-time Navy season records, for total number of pass completions and total passing yardage. And he is only a junior.

They saw him fade back to pass in the second quarter, watched as he bounced off a Duke tackler in mid-air, elude two others and then put on a dazzling 44-yard open field running exhibition to set up Navy's second score.

They saw him dodge tacklers all over the field in the first half when he passed and ran for 182 yards. But somehow Duke found the answer in the second half and as the Navy attack sputtered it was a rugged defense which preserved the victory over a very determined Blue Devil club.

Navy opened the scoring at 5:34 of the first period when Staubach capped a 68-yard drive by running the keeper into the end zone from the five. Fred Marlin converted.

But Duke came storming back with Rich Kraft going up the middle for 16 and Bracy sweeping right end for 19 more to the Navy 30. All-American Jay Wilkenson went 11 yards to the 16 two plays later with Bracy cracking over from the three. The kick was deflected and it was 7-6 Navy, but Staubach's run highlighted a 72-yard drive to make it 14-6 after the first frame.

Duke made it 14-12 with Scotty Glacken throwing to Stan Crisson and Bill Bracy powering through the line. Bracy gained 59 yards on his first six carries and 72 on the day.

Marlin then made it 17-12 Navy with a 31-yard field goal. But with the help of a 46-yard pass interference call, Duke took the lead, 19-17 on an 11-yard toss from Glacken to Bracy.

But Navy could not be stopped. Staubach threw 40 yards to Neil Henderson who made a great catch to surpass George Walsh's 1955 total passing yardage record for a season. He also passed Walsh's season mark of 94 completions.

Four plays later, Nick Markoff, playing for injured Mike Curtis, plunged over for the touchdown and a 24-19 lead.

Then, on the Blue Devils' first play from scrimmage after the kickoff, Navy end Dave Sjuggerud picked off a Glacken screen pass on Duke's 36 and ran untouched for the score, and a 31-19 advantage.

With time running out in the half, Glacken hit end Chuck Drulis with a 44-yard bomb. Drulis went out on the two but four plays later and with two seconds left, Wilkenson cracked over from one to make it 31-26.

But that was as close as Duke ever got.

Stauback finished the day with 122 yards for 7 completions in 14 throws and 72 yards on 12 rushes. He was seemingly uncatchable in the first half but was snowed under for three losses by an aroused second-half Duke defense.

Navy is now 8-1, with only a team called Army remaining on the schedule. A victory over the Cadets would guarantee them a bowl bid, possibly against the first-ranked Texas Longhorns in the Cotton Bowl on New Year's Day. Unless one of the teams is beaten, it would be a battle for the unofficial national championship.

Duke also has only one game to go. Guess who they play.

Playmakers Present 'Journey'

O'Neill Drama Is Feature Of Second 'Student Night'

Tickets Sell At Reduced Rate Tonight

Neal Chaffin, a native of Richmond, Va., now residing in Chapel Hill, will play the role of Cathleen in the Eugene O'Neill drama, "Long Day's Journey Into Night." There is a performance for UNC students only tonight at 7:30.

The second "Student Night" production of the season, Eugene O'Neill's drama "Long Day's Journey Into Night," will take place tonight in the Playmaker's theater at 7:30.

The opening performance will be for UNC students only, and tickets for this show will be reduced to $1.00. The production will continue through Sunday evening, with the earlier curtain time being continued for these performances also.

Directed by Thomas M. Patterson of the Carolina Playmakers staff, "Long Day's Journey" features Marion Fitz-Simons, Earl Wynn, Frank McDonald, and Richard Parks as the four members of the Tyrone family, and Neal Chaffin as a maid in the Tyrone household.

Admittedly autobiographical, O-'Neill's play concerns itself with one day in the lives of the four haunted Tyrones, the dramatic counterparts of the playwright's own family. Produced in New York in 1956, over fifteen yaers after it was written, "Long Day's Journey Into Night" has been cited by critics the world over as one of the finest dramas ever penned by America's greatest playwright.

Tickets for tonight's performance for UNC students and their dates remain on sale today at Y-Court and G.M. Information Desk. Students may have their choice of a season ticket for the four remaining Playmakers shows at $3.50 each, or a single ticket for "Long Day's Journey" at $1.00 each. In the event that tickets are still available tonight, they will be sold at the theatre box office which opens at six o'clock.

Celeste Holm Appears Here

Celeste Holm, Academy Award winner, will appear in the musical, "With Love and Laughter," tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The program, sponsored by GM, is free to UNC students. Spouse tickets are one dollar each and the general public will be admitted for $1.50 at 7:45 p.m. if space is available.

In the musical Miss Holm will pursue the answer to "Has the relationship between men and women changed?" It will contain writings of Saroyan, Shaw, Shakespeare, O'Neill, Laurents, Tennessee Williams and Rodgers and Hammerstein.

Miss Holm has appeared in such films as "Tender Trap," "All About Eve," and "High Society." She appeared in the stage production "Invitation to a March" last season.

CHAIRSIDE BEHAVIOR

An efficiency expert and a federal official with research responsibilities will share the program here on Dec. 4 at the ninth annual Postgraduate Dental Seminar.

Dentists, dental hygienists and dental assistants are being issued invitations to attend the day-long seminar sponsored by the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry. Sessions will be conducted in the Carol Hall auditorium on the campus.

Guilford Senator Charles Strong Speaks Tonight

By SAM BOBSOT

State Senator Charles Strong will address UNC Young Republicans tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Howell Hall.

The Guilford County Republican is expected to discuss Governor Sanford's "Little Federal" plan of legislative redistricting as well as comment upon the gag law and other current controversial issues.

Strong is serving a freshman term in the state senate. He defeated Senate Speaker Joe Hunt of Greensboro in the 1962 Republican sweep of Guilford County.

The 43 proposals which he introduced in the General Assembly included the abolition of capital punishment, repeal of the food tax, establishment of a separate budget for education and a plan of reorganization of the North Carolina School system.

Strong has been mentioned across the state as a likely Republican gubernatorial candidate for the 1964 campaign. He is also considered as a top contender for the 6th district Congressional seat.

In a story last week, the Daily Tar Heel revealed that Strong would announce his candidacy for the GOP gubernatorial nomination on December 1. Rep. Donald K. Badgley, also of Guilford County, is the only announced GOP candidate.

DI PHI TO DEBATE

The Di Phi will meet tonight to debate a resolution calling for the endowment of teaching professorships by the Student Government.

Holds Weekend Meet In Raleigh

Gag, Co-op, CR Top NSA Meeting

By PETE WALES

Two student welfare resolutions and a resolution urging repeal of the Speaker Ban were passed at the Carolinas-Virginia fall regional conference of the National Students Association in Raleigh last Saturday.

The resolutions were introduced in an afternoon plenary session following three discussion groups during the morning.

"The interests and resolutions of the delegates reflected the new emphasis of NSA on campus and student welfare issues with the exception, of course, of the speaker ban."

The speaker ban resolution was introduced by region chairman Harry DeLung of UNC and Sue Bailey of Duke. It supported "the efforts of responsible citizens to repeal or in other ways make invalid, H.B. 1395 the speaker ban."

The other three resolutions passed were:

1) A resolution to establish a commission investigating the feasibility of a USNSA Book Cooperative in the Carolinas-Virginia region.

2) A resolution to establish a commission investigating student physical and mental health facilities in the region.

3) A resolution urging Davidson College to vote for a one-year trial period of affiliation with USNSA.

A fifth resolution was introduced by Clark Compton and Armistead Maupin of UNC opposing the civil rights bill now in Congress. The resolution failed.

National Affairs Vice-President Joel Sharkey gave the keynote address at a banquet Friday night in N.C. State's Leazer Hall. His topic was "The Community: It's Influence on Higher Education."

Sharkey spoke of three general inflence groups: the federal government, the state government and non-government groups.

In the first group, Sharkey mentioned the House Un-American Activities Committee and the apportionment of government research fellowships as influences and limiting factors on higher education.

He referred to the speaker ban and the repressive policies in the deep South concerning integration as instances of state governments infringing upon the free process of learning.

Talking about private groups, Sharkey charged the American Legion, the National Education Association, and other interest groups as exercising their influence in areas where they "don't possess the basis of judgment." He referred to teacher accreditation requirements, approved book lists and curriculum planning.

After the banquet, Bob Spearman of UNC made a report on the progress of the Student Government Study Commission of which he is chairman.

The commission was created at last spring's regional conference in Greensboro. Questionnaires have been prepared here and were sent out last week to Student Body presidents and the Deans of Men and Women of 50 schools in the region.

A report on the results of these forms will be compiled in Chapel Hill this winter.

The six voting delegates from UNC were Jim Fullwood, Lanny Shuff, Ken Shepsle, Juan Carvajal, Doug Lawson and Armistead Maupin.

BULLETIN

Mike Chanin last night resigned as chairman of the University Party.

Speaking at a meeting of the party, Chanin cited his obligations to the National Student Association and the local student government as the reasons for his withdrawal.

A full report on the meeting will be carried in tomorrow's Daily Tar Heel.

Mock Political Meet Is Here April 16-18

Big-time politics is coming to UNC.

On April 16-18, Carolina students will have the opportunity to participate in a mock political convention which will be bi-partisan in nature. Sponsored by the YM-YWCA Public Affairs Committee, the convention will embrace all political factions on campus. Dave Sheps and Chris Waterman are co-chairmen.

In the spring of 1960, 1500 Carolina students nominated Adlai E. Stevenson for President and John F. Kennedy for Vice President in a mock Democratic Convention held in Woollen Gym. Before the convention, the campus was divided into fifty-three separate districts which were representative of the fifty states, two territories, and the District of Columbia. Each dormitory, fraternity, and sorority was a separate district and each represented specific units on the basis of size and political awareness.

The students nominated Stevenson and Kennedy in accordance with the rules of the National Democratic Committee. Because men such as Senator Carl Albert and Secretary of Commerce Luther Hodges were able to speak, the Convention received statewide radio, TV, and press coverage.

Because of this year's political developments, especially in North Carolina, a bi-partisan format for the Convention has been selected. However, this will be similar to the previous one in all respects except that it will be, in effect, a mock election of President and Vice President of the U.S., since all parties will be represented.

Interviews for the Executive Committee positions of Treasurer, Speakers Chairman, Secretary, Physical Arrangements Chairman, Operations Chairman, and Public Relations Chairman will be held upstairs in the Y building from 3-5 Tuesday, 4-5 Wednesday and 1-3 Thursday of this week.

The Carter Case: Confused

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

A News Analysis

Monday's ruling by Judge Clawson Williams in the Ann Royal Carter case was another chapter in a long book that is yet to be completed.

Williams ruled that Miss Carter's case will be tried before the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline. So, now, after two and a half years of legal tangles and an open court battle, the Ann Carter case winds up essentially where it began.

The case has dragged out over such a long period of time that many people have forgotten the original charge against Miss Carter — cheating on a Latin examination.

She took a make-up exam and was alleged to have written down the answers to the original exam (which she didn't take).

She was convicted of the cheating charge by the Women's Honor Council. Miss Carter then began her lengthy battle to clear herself of the charge.

She appealed directly to Chancellor William B. Aycock, who said he did not find grounds for review at that stage.

The appeal for review then went to Consolidated University President William C. Friday, who upheld Aycock's ruling. The next step was to present an appeal for review to the Board of Trustees. They in turn appointed a special committee to study the matter. When the committee reported back to the Board, they said they could not find any grounds for review.

Normally, this would be the final step in review. But in the meantime, the Carter family had hired legal counsel, lawyer John Manning of Chapel Hill.

The case was tried in Wake County Superior Court in Raleigh, Manning representing Miss Carter and state Assistant Attorney General Ralph Moody representing the University. Judge Heman Clark presided.

In the first of the hearings which was held in September of 1962 Manning challenged the legality of the decision of the Board on two grounds.

—That the Trustees could not lawfully delegate final authority in matters of suspension of students properly enrolled in the University, and therefore recognition of suspension of a student council is unconstitutional.

—That in this case there was no evidence to support a finding that Miss Carter was guilty of the charge of cheating, and therefore the Board of Trustees acted arbitrarily in approving the decision of the Women's Honor Council suspending her from the University on these grounds.

Concerning Manning's second challenge, Judge Clark ruled there was too little evidence to make a decision on the charge. So a new hearing was held in November.

It was at this hearing taht new evidence cropped up which had not been presented previous to that time, and which eventually led to the case being moved out of the courts and back to the campus.

Among those appearing at the hearing were Miss Carter and her Latin professor John Gatlin.

A quote from an order issued from Judge Clark presents the new evidence:

"Mr. Gatlin identified the writing on the paper on which the original examination questions appeared. These were the questions which Miss Carter answered on the make-up quiz. On the back of this paper appears the name 'Mr. Catlin' in handwriting of obvious similarity to that of Miss Carter. This evidence tends to corroborate Miss Carter's statement to the effect that she returned the examination questions which she had answered to the desk in Mr. Catlin's outer office and wrote her name on the top."

Judge Clark then said that in light of this new evidence, the case would be remanded to the Board of Trustees and they in turn would direct the matter to the proper administrative authority for a review of the proceeding.

However, Judge Clark said in his order that Miss Carter should be exonerated from the charge of cheating by the proper administrative agency of the University.

He said that all of the evidence offered against Miss Carter had failed to rebut the presumption of innocence. He said that her conviction "was not in accordance with due process under the Resolution of the Board or provision of the Student Constitution."

Following this hearing, the Trustees suggested that the Ann Carter case be remanded to the University for further consideration in view of the evidence about the handwriting not known during the original review.

Judge Clark's order granted that wish.

But his order didn't specify which administrative agency would handle the case, and again there was much talk from both sides as to who would handle the case.

Miss Carter was offered a hearing by Faculty Committee on Student Discipline, but she declined it.

This controversy necessitated yesterday's formal order from Judge Clawson Williams of Sanford. He stated that the proper administrative agency would be the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

Yesterday's decision by Judge Williams is the seventh chapter in the Ann Carter Case. There will surely be many more before a final decision is reached in the case.

By DAVID ETHRIDGE And GARY BLANCHARD

The Anne Royal Carter Case appears headed for the North Carolina Supreme Court.

Miss Carter's attorney, John T. Manning, of Chapel Hill, has given notice of appeal to the most recent court order issued in the protracted legal battle which stems from Miss Carter's suspension from the University on a cheating charge in 1961.

This latest order, issued by by Superior Court Judge Clawson Williams and filed yesterday in Wake County Superior Court, returns the case to the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline for a new hearing.

The Committee is to determine whether the suspension sentence is "valid, regular and proper, and should be sustained, or whether the suspension is improper, not supported by substantial evidence, or for any other legal and valid reason should be nullified, set aside and declared to be void and of no effect."

Judge Williams ruling, in effect, resolved a controversy over the meaning of a provious order by Judge Heman Clark in late 1962. Williams ordered the case be given an entirely new hearing by the Faculty Committee of Studen Discipline. But his order has been appealed, and it is this point —his interpretation of Clark's ruling—which the Supreme Court would be called on to resolve.

If the court rules in favor of Miss Carter the case would be settled and she would be completely exonerated, which her attorney alleges is the meaning of Judge Clark's earlier ruling.

If the Supreme Court were to uphold Judge Williams' order, the case, barring appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court, would then be heard anew by the Faculty Council—as Williams has ordered—and the Committee's new decision could then be appealed back through the courts.

In noting Judge Clark's decision, Judge Williams said until Miss Carter "exhauts the available hearing before the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline the Court holds as a matter of law that the Petitioner has not exhausted her administrative remedies."

In remanding the case, Williams also stayed the suspension sentence until the case is ultimately decided. Miss Carter's appeal bond was set at $200.00 and she was given 90 days in which to file her case on appeal.

GRANT AWARDED

A grant of $117,845 has been awarded to the University's School of Dentistry by the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, it was announced recently by Dr. J. C. Brauer, Dean of the School of Dentistry.

The grant will be used over a five-year period to train dental assistants through a correspondence-extension program. It is hoped that the program will bridge the gap between the supply and the demand of dental assistants who are fast becoming known as "the good right arm" of the dentist. Presently only one-third of the dental assistants needed are being trained in the one- and two-year curriculums.

DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTE

Instructors from UNC School of Business Administration will serve again this year as the faculty for the Hospital Executive Development Institute.

The four-day institute will begin on Dec. 8 at the Carolina Inn. It is designed for top-level management personnel in hospitals in both Carolinas.

The joint sponsors are the North Carolina Hospital Association and the South Carolina Hospital Association.

Committee Members Named By Juniors

The Junior Class has announced the selections for class committees for the coming school year.

Over 100 Juniors were interviewed last week for the positions on the five committees, and there will be a joint meeting in Howell Hall on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. Harrison Merrill, class president, said that the meeting would be brief, and that anyone who could not attend should contact one of the officers.

He added that any Junior who is interested in being on a committee should be at the meeting.

The following were selected for committees:

Campus Communications: Chairman: Cydne Wright. Jeannie Anderson, Myrtie Moon Bilbro, Alice Brown, Sarah Craver, Diane Counts, Sloan Crevling, Jean Dillin, Sandra Ennis, Verna Gillim, Robert Griffin, Jimmy Harris, Jane Howe, Doug Kelly, Linda Kelly, Dedee Macdowell, Marty McDaniel, Anne Meissner, Anne Michael, Jane Moore, Gail Murray, Frances Pierce, Sherry Stanley.

Finance Committee: Co-chairmen: Bonnie Raines, Perry McCarty. Snow Anderson, Ed Boyette, Bernie Bazemore, Jeff Crowell, Jr., Sally Elmore, Stewart Ellington, Drew Ferguson, Pam Hooper, Sandy Iuluicci, Bill Jenkins, Mary Linda Lewis, Melinda Long, Cassie Pond, Sally Roper, Sylvia Shields, Scott Smiley, Chip Smith, Janice Sperber, Robert Stafford, Anita Strickland, Jean Olive Snyder, Dan Warren, Dick Williams.

Publicity Committee: Co-chairmen: Jane Dallen, Hugh Stevens. Betsy Bradford, J. B. Carter, Ellen Gilkerson, Sherrie Harris, Eve Higgins, Joanna Houston, Mary Stella Leak, Betsy Millington, Clay Moore, Patty Nash, Robin Nenz, Ellen Solomon, Judy Thompson, Murray Van Lear, Bettie White.

Social Committee: Co-chairmen: Ann Gerth, Mike Masten. Nancy Best, Helen Butt, Lola Eustis, Peggy Findley, Matilda Gholson, Lea Lea Hall, Linda Hawkins, Peggy Hull, Nanny Hussey, Dianne Littlefield, Barbara Martin, Mebane McDonald, Susan Moore, Jodie Payne, Jean Renfrou, Richard Ross, John Seeman, Judy Smith, Tom Snider, Pat Stebbins, Judy Tucker.

Secretariat: Dianne Crockett, Peggy Green, Bob Greenfield, Bonnie Harper, Carol Johnston, Gayle Munroe, Mary Roper, Martin Luther Goldfarb.

Expulsion To Be Considered Today

The Judicial Committee of Student Legislature will hold its final meeting today on the request by the Men's and Women's Councils for the expulsion penalty.

The meeting, to be held in the Woodhouse Room of GM at 4 p.m., will decide upon the recommendation it will make to legislature for its Thursday night session. Phil Baddour, committee chairman, also said that the bill to abolish the student judiciary would be considered, as well as the court procedures of the IFC.

"I hope that the residence hall and fraternity house presidents who were present last week will attend," said Baddour. "Their testimony will be a big help in our reaching a decision."

Phipps Gags Phelps Facts Unfairly

Just when we were beginning to find the wavelength Judge L. J. Phipps transmits on, he started jamming the circuit.

We are referring to his charge last week that University officials are not enforcing the Gag Law, which just ain't so. University officials have gone to great lengths to see that the law is enforced. For Judge Phipps to say otherwise, on the basis of such arbitrary, flimsy evidence as the recent appearance on campus of Larry Phelps, only serves to underscore his general lack of enlightenment about the entire Gag Law controversy.

Phipps thinks Phelps is covered under the Gag Law. That's nice. But University officials have to proceed on the basis of fact, not opinion, and the fact of the Phelps' affair was that there was and still is great doubt as to whether Phelps is covered by the law.

Further, there was and still is doubt as to whether Phelps' informal talk amounted to his being a "Visiting Speaker," which the Gag Law is aimed at. Phipps thinks so. But again, that is a matter of opinion. The law sets no standards for determining this.

Finally, not only are University officials hindered in attempting to enforce the Gag Law by the lack of any legal definitions about who is banned under what conditions, they aren't even charged with enforcing it. The person who invites the speaker is. And who invited Phelps? Chancellor Aycock? President Friday? Certainly not.

It is clear that Judge Phipps owes "University officials" an apology.

And he owes it to the dignity of his office as State Commander of the American Legion to determine the facts before maligning the character of dedicated men trying their best to uphold the vague dictates of a reprehensible law.

Major McLendon Goes To Washington

The appointment of Major L. P. McLendon of Greensboro as chief counsel for the Senate investigation of the Bobby Baker case is of special interest to Chapel Hill and the University community.

Major McLendon, a UNC Law School alumnus and former Mayor of Chapel Hill, offered a few weeks ago to take WRAL-TV editorialist Jesse Helms up on Helms' offer to debate the merits of the Gag Law over WRAL-TV in prime time.

Helms, who loves the law because he's for freedom of the individual (if you're "the right kind" of individual), immediately weaseled out of the offer. In a letter to us on the matter, Helms said he hadn't meant just any old responsible person, he had meant UNC President William C. Friday or Chancellor William B. Aycock.

We took consolation in Helms' implicit admission that he considered Friday and Aycock "responsible," but we were rather taken aback that he didn't extend that implicit admission to Major McLendon, who isn't anything if he isn't responsible.

All we could deduce from the incident was that McLendon is so formidable an opponent that even master propagandist Jesse Helms blanches at the thought of matching wits with him.

Anyway, we're glad to see that the U.S. Senate considers the Major responsible, and we wish him the best of luck as he wanders through the ethical quagmire of political realities that triggered the Baker investigation.

No Kiddin', It Was Big And Grey And . . .

We've been sitting around waiting with baited breath to see what the North Carolina Republican Party was going to do for a gubernatorial candidate. Granted, they have two already, Representative Donald Badgley of Greensboro and O. H. Doggett, a meat packing company executive from High Point. But the enthusiasm these two have generated for their candidacies in Republican circles so far, is less than what one would call spectacular. Spectacular shouldn't even be used in the same paragraph. They hit the nomination scene with all the zing of a damp Chinese firecracker.

Well, like we said, we've been waiting so long we were ready to believe anything. So yesterday afternoon the word reached Chapel Hill and we don't believe it. According to Charlotte Republican John Thedieck, John Stickley, another Charlotte businessman, received "considerable" support from a GOP rally held last Saturday at Rocky Mount.

Now we didn't know anything about John, so everything made pretty good sense up to that point. The Republicans were still looking desperately for someone, John demurely hollered "yoo hoo" at them, got spotted, and was then able to get 400 people to come to a political rally months before the election. It has all the classic elements of a budding political love affair.

Then came the kicker. John Stickley is all the good things in the world that a Republican could ask for, except he's a Democrat.

We have always understood full well that Democrats come in a wide variety of shapes, sizes and colors, but this was absolutely the first time we'd heard of one colored an elephant grey.

But seriously, we believe that this magnanimous gesture on the part of North Carolina Democrats, in helping the hard-pressed Republicans in their hour of need by lending them a good man, can only serve to enhance the spirit of co-operation which already characterizes North Carolina's two-party system.

Letters To The Editors

Praise, Gripes, And Comments

Inconsistency

Editors, The Tar Heel,

In the past few weeks, it has become painfully obvious that the DTH editors are seeking, among other things, a redefinition of Constitutional freedom. Freedom of choice and association, more specifically (if the editorial stand on Public Accommodations and fraternity discrimination is any indication), are understood to mean 'the compulsion not to discriminate.' One gets the idea that the editors, in their zeal to display their interest in civil rights questions, are so hurried to get daily editorials into print that they scarcely have time to proofread their own words, much less test the reasoning behind them.

Beyond doubt, this lack of reflection is the cause of logical inconsistencies too numerous to mention. More people than I have pointed this out, and surely all of us cannot be brushed aside as the 'hostile opposition.' as if a mere label would invalidate these objections to begin with. To many of us, I suspect, it is plain that when the editors implicitly approve of forced fraternity integration, and in practically the same breath, give 'unremitting support' to freedom of association, they have committed, another inconsistency. And the worst of it is that the editors seem totally invulnerable to this kind of attack. They are too strong. But then we know what Orwell said about strength.

Ed. Note—Who says the Editors have advocated "forced fraternity integration"? Look again.

Curry Praised

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Recently some readers have been critical, quite critical in fact, of Curry Kirkpatrick's writing. I, and others who have read Curry, disagree with these "critics." The DTH is a pretty fine college newspaper and Curry's contributions helps make it so.

If any one really thinks that Curry's stories on past games or his articles aren't good then read 'em again but this time with both eyes open. They are well written and in my opinion not in bad taste. When Curry has his name on the by-line he is free to say whatever he wants and I am all for him.

Wilson Attacked

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Clyde Wilson's two articles, on civil rights and "fuzzyminded" liberals, have all the intellect and compassion of a wet dish rag. They qualify as unmitigated verbal stinkbombs.

Wilson says that Kennedy's civil rights bill, if enacted, will "launch American society on an experiment in the regulation of private life more ridiculous and at the same time more dangerous than Prohibition." This is contrary to the facts.

The most radical section of the bill, the Public Accommodations Act, make legal provisions for enforcement of non-discriminatory practices in public businesses. The moral obligation to treat all Americans equally is inherent in this legislation.

Like so many other segregationists, Wilson fails to make an issue of the myriad obligations private property owners have, such as property taxes, health law regulations, alcoholic beverage control etc. They don't seem to mind these "infringements" on their rights, but make pandemonium over the responsibility of the Federal Government to legislate and enforce first class citizenship for the nation's Negroes.

Segregationists remain on their aloof perch and assume mere attitude-taking. Instead of basing their objections to integration on the undesirable behavior of individuals, they reject the Negro for his negroness, perpetuate stereotypes, and scream to high heaven about being deprived of their rights. The soul of the law and the heart of humanity demands that the individual American must be restrained by the Federal Government if personal prejudices interfere with the public privleges of any citizen of any race.

Intelligent readers should not be satisfied when Wilson speaks with Jovian thunder but gives off little illumination. His myopic vision of the civil rights problem can only generate heat, not light. For example, he writes, "Who is to say whether you tossed me out because I was a slob or because you really intended to discriminate against my color?" Wilson is more concerned here with legal rather than ethical considerations. Yet is precisely the segregationists who cry that a man's heart must be changed before he can be made to accept integration. Well now, Mr. Wilson, it should be plain that any unruly customer in a public place of business can be rejected for his conduct by legal means such as evidence, testimony of witnesses and calling the police. If misconduct cannot be proved in court, then it becomes obvious that the property owner in question was guilty of bias.

The article on "fuzzy-minded" liberals was a monotonous refrain, and an exercise in tedium. He says that "liberals pursue broad goals without much regard for direct consequence." This is untrue, but well serves to point out the conservative preoccupation with the pragmatic and the immediate. Their political astigmatism is chronic. The conservative makes a fetish out of their small world in which self-interest dominates, and concern and action for the welfare of the less fortunate is a tiny whisper. He gauges every political, economic and social problem in direct proportion to what he thinks he can get out of it personally, rather than what is morally imperative for the good of all people.

There is everything right with pursuing broad goals, provided they are worthy ones. The liberal mind, if responsible, knows that goals have no meaning or direction without a knowledge of direct consequences, and he plans as best he can. The Kennedy Administration is doing precisely that, all disclaimers aside.

Southern senators and representatives, on the whole, are a millstone around the neck of progress in this nation. The Erwins, Russells, Byrds, Eastlands, and Jordans play the role of knight-errant, protectors of "states rights", individual rights, lovers of democracy, but for all their grappling and jousting with 20th Century issues, they merely look Medieval. Above and beyond that, they have prostituted the real meaning and essence of those noble ideals until what remains is a pitiful remnant, a shabby imitation unrelated to the original spirit of it.

Mr. Wilson exudes an 18th Century state of mind when he says, "Liberals profess to love democracy but when the people don't go along, they resort to undemocratic methods like executive order and Supreme Court decree." The Court, after more than 90 years of "gradual" realization, finally implemented the spirit of the Constitution, that all Americans be first-class citizens. The executive order exists in order for the President to carry out his responsibilities, to use sorely needed leadership when Congress is inept. The people must be led, and if it were true that American people were opposed to the Supreme Court decision, which it basically isn't, nevertheless, the Court's obligation is clear, to interpret the Constitution, which it finally did. Wilson again objects on typically baseless grounds.

"They refuse to admit obvious failures" is patently a conservative predisposition. Since conservatives attempt significantly little that is positive or visionary, they have little failure to admit, having never done anything particularly profound. But I will not mention the sorry record of Coolidge, Hoover, or Eisenhower. That would be too easy.

"Foreign aid has accomplished few of its intended purposes. Spend more say the liberals." This illustrates the conservative intolerance for frustration. Their world being excrutiatingly simple and naive, like children they want immediate and tangible results. Like petty businessmen, they want to bargain with the non-American and non-Communist nations so that they can buy them off in the name of national security. Once again, it is the "I" and not the "Thou" that counts for them. They are ignorant of an elementary lesson of the past 50 years that money can help nations be more independent, strong and in a better position to resist the tyrannies we all dread, even though the country may become neutral, or dare to criticize the U.S.

Wilson's contention that William Buckley has "supernatural ability" of any kind, is ludicrous in the extreme. Even Jack Paar made an ass out of him on his Tonight show some months back. Paar told Buckley politely that his views were almost inhuman and cold. Further Buckley revelations on this campus validated the charge.

Wilson's idea of Mr. Frank P. Graham is about as sensible as trying to break up a snowball by pushing it downhill. Graham's greatness and accomplishment is a substance far too elusive for Wilson to touch. He might have more luck attacking someone closer to his own caliber, and way of thinking, such as Ross Barnett, George Wallace, or Strom Thurmond.

Rebuttal

Editors, The Tar Heel,

On the morning of Wednesday, November 13, I picked up a copy of the DTH. I don't always do this, but this particular morning I thought I'd find out what the usual unreliable sources had to report on current events in Chapel Hill. The thing which first caught my eye was five columns of pure nonsense which someone named William D. Blake, who happens to be Chief of the Chapel Hill police department, probably maintains is the straight Gospel.

I quote the article,

> If a boy is on the street, and he's been drinking, we try to persuade him to go home, or we try to get a friend to take him home. If he argues, or he's too drunk to understand, and refuses to go home, we have to arrest him for his own good. We try not to have to arrest any student.

Now then, gentlemen, I refer you to a particular case which occurred on the evening of Friday, November 8. Knowing that he had been drinking too much to drive, this student asked a few of his friends to drive him and his date to her dormitory. Upon arrival, one of the friends escorted the young lady to her dormitory in order that she not be embarrassed. The student in question opened the door of the automobile, waved goodnight to his date, then got back into the car. At that time, a policeman arrived, opened the door, ordered the student into the police car, brought him to the police station, placed him in jail, and refused to release him until 6:30 a.m. Saturday morning even though bond was immediately posted. At the time of the arrest, the student did not argue, was not too drunk to understand, and did not refuse to go home. As a matter of fact, the officer did not even try to persuade the student to go home, or ask one of his friends to take him home.

Obviously, we have no right to expect the police of Chapel Hill to treat us like children when we have had too much to drink, and play "daddy" for us. On the other hand, it is also obvious that they are not always as kind and considerate as "daddy."

Dear Mr. Policeman,

If you want to be my daddy, I want you to be my daddy. But if you don't want to be my daddy, please dont' say that you do want to be my daddy.

Upsetting

Editors, The Tar Heel,

Here are some things that upset me, and I am sure, many UNC students: the new green hat that hovers over tables in Lenoir like a strange-colored flying saucer some say the Marsian (sic) under it is Otelia Connor); the way students sit on the library steps (they are chickens with a roost complex); the way students are allowed to eat off campus (this upsets the economic balance of the UNC budget); the way those john doors just don't come back on all by themselves; the way the whole campus has to listen to those screaming inmates in Hill Hall—or is it Dixhill Hall? If these things don't upset you, you're a real fink, or maybe a ratfink.

Enlighten Me

Editors, The Tar Tar Heel,

This is a copy of a letter sent to Mrs. A. S. Nashe, 21 Grove, Gregory, N. C. in re: "Letter to the Editors, The Tar Heel," Sunday, Nov. 17, 1963.

Dear Mrs. Gregory,

This morning I read your "cute" little letter to the Editors of The Tar Heel and I would like for you to clear up what I am sure must has been a misprint, to wit: ". . . Suicide, homosexuality, and communism. Not that either of these is bad within itself— . . .", and, ". . . We should search for the facts even if we must . . . slit half the throats in the kingdom to do so."

The first quoted statement above is too absurd when read in its literal form as appeared in "The Daily Tar Heel," Sunday, November 17, 1963 to warrant comment thereon. The second quote, above, sounds to me as if it was taken out of context of a Nazi or Fascist rally speech, or maybe it is a mixim that could very well be appropos to communism which you stated in the subject article as being not "bad within itself."

Of course, all my interpretations of the subject quoted statements from your letter could possibly(?) be misconstrued; or there could more probably be simple misprints on behalf of the paper in which your letter was misprinted. And there is a third possible explanation — that you actually meant to convey the literal and obvious meaning that I received when I read the subject statements. In any case, please enlighten me in reference to above query.

Cough Drops And Lobbyists

WASHINGTON—It is general knowledge that lobbying is Washington's largest and most lucrative industry. But very little is known about how lobbyists operate. There have been hearings on lobbying, but they have been mostly concerned with foreign governments and do not give a true pitcure of the business. The most interesting and challenging work is done by lobbyists who represent domestic industries and specific business interests.

This is how some work. A lobbyist has to create a demand for his services. Let us say he is after the non-dissolvable cough drop industry account. The first thing he does is contact the leading non-dissolvable cough drop manufacturers in the United States and urge them to form an association as he has heard through the grapevine that Congress is considering some anti-cough drop legislation.

For a small retainer he agrees to represent the association in Washington and keep the cough drop industry informed.

Once he has the account he arranges with a Congressman, who owes the lobbyist a favor, to introduce a bill outlawing all non-dissolvable cough drops.

The Lobbyist then sends out the bad news in a confidential news letter to all association members. He warns them that they will have a tough fight ahead, as the cough syrup industry is behind the bill.

The lobbyist builds panic slowly. In his follow-up news-letter he reports that the cough syrup people have two Congressmen in their hip pockets and urges the cough drop industry to take action immediately. The association president calls a meeting of the executive board and the lobbyist is flown in to give a personal report.

He tells them frankly that he doesn't know if he can kill the bill unless he has a war chest to fight it.

Funds are voted to fight the bill, and the lobbyist agrees to see what he can do.

The next few weeks are busy ones. The lobbyist writes to the chairman of the committee, the Speaker of the House, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Vice-President of the United States. He throws the originals of these letters into the waste paper basket, and sends the carbon on to the executive board.

He is in constant contact with the members. One day he has good news for them; the next day he has bad news. The committee, he reports, is split down the center. He needs more money than he thought. Every non-dissolvable coup drop manufacturer is assessed an extra $50.

At last the lobbyist manages to have a committee hold hearings on the bill and he arranges for his clients to fly in and testify against the legislation. This turns out to be the biggest moment in their lives. It isn't every day a cough drop manufacturer can testify in Congress.

To top it off, after the hearings, the lobbyist takes the manufacturers to dinner with two Congressmen and one tame Senator who are always available for free evening meals as their wives are out of town.

The cough drop people are so impressed with the lobbyist that they double his retainer. The lobbyist promises nothing, but he tells the manufacturers their testimony may have saved the day.

During the following weeks all communication is done by telegram. More money is asked for and provided.

The lobbyist reports the cough syrup people have gone all out and several Congressional fence-straddlers are leaning towards syrup instead of drops.

He urges another assessment for a final battle to kill the bill.

At last, when it looks as if he can't milk the situation any longer, the lobbyist informs the association that he has managed to pigeon-hole the bill for this year. But he warns them next year may be even a tougher fight and he suggests that they let him start on it now.

The association, eternally gratefully to the lobbyist for saving the cough drop industry, votes him a motion of thanks, and a new war chest. As one association member puts it: "If it wasn't for him, where would we be."

United Press International

NEW YORK — Nobel Peace Prize winner Dr. Linus Pauling, warning that the nuclear arms race can lead to doom for the world:

"As we consider the facts about the capabilities of destruction that are possessed by the Soviet Union and the United States, we are forced to the conclusion that we are doomed to die if the world continues along the path of insanity."

Baptists Write To Baptists

The UNC Baptist Student Union has sent a letter of concern over the racial crisis in Alabama to the state's Baptist students.

The decision to send the letter was made after the N.C. Baptist student convention had rejected the idea. The Carolina letter is essentially the same as that presented to the state group.

The letter calls on Christian students to be concerned for the "human values caught up in social change," and urges an awareness of the responsibilities and opportunities inherent in the racial issue.
